The P. M. at Parkersburg, Ia., writes us that a number of papers directed to John Richardson, have found their way to his office, and he knows of no such man in the parts. We send to I. Richardson, Romney, Tippecanoe, Ia., a subscriber sent us we think with the pay, by Br. J. Shipp. We find no other such name in Ia. Will Br. S., inform us if the said subscriber's paper is rightly directed, and whether he receives it?

We sent last fall the pamphlets ordered by Brs. D. Moore and L. Ensminger to Richwood, by the hand of Br. J. C. Sidle, and gave them notice of it through the paper, requesting them to get them from there. We are just informed that these packages are still in the hands of Br. S. Did the brethren not see our notice? Or why did they not inform us long ago, that they had not received their pamphlets?

Br. Peat, C. A. shall certainly be credited to end of Vol., 8, for the amount paid you, but dont let that Br. discontinue. We would like to be crediting also, those new subscribers, looked for.

New Subscribers this week, five. Discontinuances, none.

MEMORIA TECHNICA:

Or, the Art of Abbreviating those Studies which give the greatest labor to the Memory; including Numbers, Historical Dates, Geography, Astronomy, Gravities, &c.; also Rules for Memorizing Technicalities, Nomenclatures, Proper Names, Prose, Poetry, and Topics in general.—Embracing all the available Rules found in Mnemonics, or Mnemotechny of Ancient and Modern Times. To which is added a Perpetual Almanac for Two Thousand Years of Past Time and Time to Come. Adapted to the use of Schools. By Lorenzo D. Johnson. Second edition, revised and improved.—Boston.

Price—50 cents.

In presenting to the public the "Memoria Technica," which, in some respects, may be said to contain a new theory of instruction, the publishers beg leave to call the attention of Teachers, School Committees, and others interested in education, the peculiar merits of the work. It has been already introduced into several of our best and most popular schools in Boston and vicinity, and has also received high commendation from many of our most distinguished clergymen and other literary men who have examined it.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

'This system of Mnemotechny, differing considerably from the one introduced by Prof. Gouraud, is designed to furnish all the rules for aiding the memory without lessening mental culture, which can be made available during a course of elementary study. The illustrations may be easily comprehended by any person of ordinary mental capacity, and the application of the principle upon which the system is based must necessarily furnish an agreeable and useful exercise to the mind. It is well adapted to common school instruction, and may be made a very profitable study, if rightly pursued. Every page of the work gives evidence of a desire to present the laws of association distinctly & clearly, so as to enable the learner to establish such relations between things, events, &c., as will aid the memory. We commend the book to trachers and all interested in this important subject.'—N. Y. Teachers' Advocate.

'The art of improving the memory is sureiy a very important one, and whoever contributes any thing to further this end, certainly renders an important service to the public. Mr Johnson, we believe, has succeeded in bringing his system of mnemonics into such a practicable form, as will render it an essential aid to all who do not naturally have a great power of memory.'—Ch. Witness

'This is a treatise on artificial memory prepared for the use of schools. The subject is a curious one, and worthy of attention.'—Boston Recorder.

'This system of mnemonics, being the first work of the kind ever prepared for the use of schools, and being so arranged and simplified that any one of ordinary capacities may easily acquire a knowledge of its principles, is certainly worthy of examination and study. It is most emphatically an aid to the memory, and as such, is well adapted to common school instruction. We heartily commend it to public notice, while we hope that Mr. Johnson will receive the reward due to his industry and perseverance by seeing this work extensively introduced into our schools, public and private.'—Tem. Standard.

'The author promises to endow his pupils with an infinite faculty of memory. If he can do it without too much trouble on the part of the recipients, he will do a good thing, and as far as we can judge, he seems likely to accomplish it. While his system is much more simple than any we have before examined, it contains a great deal more. Moreover, it makes the thing a matter of practical education, within the reach of all.'—Chronotype.

'There are minds of a certain class that are wont to be interested in mnemonics, and we doubt not that such may find valuable assistance in a work of this kind.—N. E. Puritan.

'The book, although designed and adapted to the use of schools, is nevertheless worthy the attention of all persons who wish to assist or strengthen memory.'—N. E. Washingtonian.

'A very ingenious and useful book, designed to shorten the labor of those studies which require the exercise of the memory, by a system of memorizing.'—Reading Gazette, Pa.

We feel no hesitation in recommending this work to the deliberate attention of teachers, and the guardians of youth. We learn that it is received into several of the schools in Boston, and used as an auxiliary help to the studies now pursued by the pupils.'—Boston Courier.

'We noticed the first edition of this book a short time since, and in addition to what we then said, will only say now, that it is prepared by one who has paid great attention to the subject, and who has been employed to teach his system by some of our most experienced teachers and wisest men.'—Ch. Register.

'We have given the work a partial examination, sufficient to become convinced that the subject is one of importance.'—Ch. Watchman.

The Memoria Technica is now studied in some of our best schools; and the system taught as it appears to be much approved by those who have made trial of it.'—Evening Traveller.

The work contains a vast amount of important facts and useful information; which, aside from its value as a system of instruction, renner it, as has been justly said by many who have examined it, well worth the price of the work as a mere book of reference. Published by

POETRY.

From the New England Puritan.

"I will rejoice in God."

The sun may cease to shed its rays,
The clouds withhold their rain,
And famish'd herds stare pleadingly
From hill-side and from plain;—
On every tree and every herb
May fall the scathing rod;
But still my grateful song shall be,
"I will rejoice in God."

Hunger and thirst, and care and pain
My weary frame may press,
And death may lay my lov'd ones low,
And friends and foes distress;—
Still there is One—how sweet, how sure
That promise in His word:
"Thee, thee I never will forsake,"
Oh, I'll rejoice in God.

The deep broad sea may bear me on
Its wild and stormy waves,
And to the frighted fancy paint
Its dread unfathom'd graves;—
But ah, there's One who guides the helm,
The winds obey His nod,
On sea or land, in storm or calm,
I will rejoice in God.

But oh! when precious Zion faints,
Her harps all silent lie,
And oe'r her hangs so mournfully
A dark and doubtful sky,
And couch'd amid the gath'ring mists,
She spies a threat'ning rod,—
Oh can she whisper trustfully,
"I will rejoice in God."

Yes—for He holds her safe within
The hollow of His hand,
And all the powers of hell and sin
Must yield at His command.
Her shield, her refuge, and her strength
Is her unchanging Lord:
For her in triumph let me shout—
"I will rejoice in God."

LINES,

Suggested by the presentation of an artificial Heart, as emblematical of unfading friendship:

BY H. W.

Long as I live I'll love the HEART
Thy gentle fingers placed in mine:
It calleth back the vanish'd hours
When I was blessed by smiles of thine.

Long as I live I'll love the gift
From which my memory ne'er can part;
For, (oh, believe me,) it hath left
A lasting impress on MY Heart.

Long as I Live I'll love the prize
That still reminds MY HEART of thee,
And bids me love those searching eyes
Mine own perhaps may no more see.

Long as I live no lips shall touch
The gift, thine touching, made mine own,
And I in after years will bless
The love that leaves me now alone.

Long as I live I'll love,—and if Thou would'st one rapture still bestow,
Then let that rapture be conveyed
In bidding Hope's sweet waters flow.

Long as I live, whate'er my fate,
Though scath'd by stern Misfortune's blast,
MY HEART, embalmed in hidden tears,
Shall be thy monument at last.

Written for the Western Recorder

All hands ahoy! Paul Pry, and the Local Preachers; look here.

Ten points of difference between a local preacher in the M. E. Church and an unstationed preacher in the M. P. Church, in which the office of an unstationed minister in the M. P. Church, is proved to be preferable, to the office of a local minister in the M. E. Church.

MR. EDITOR, SIR: The caption of this communication may be somewhat startling to some of your readers, who have not attended to the disciplines of the two Methodist churches referred to in this communication. But upon an investigation of the subject under consideration, it will be found, that in point of ministerial dignity, equality and privilege, there is a difference wide as the poles between these officers in the two churches. As I am an advocate for MUTUAL RIGHTS, I have taken up my pen, to give a bird's eye view of the creation, advancement and privileges of these officers in both churches. In order to arrive at proper conclusions on this subject, we will trace their entrance into the church up to the time when they arrive to the highest niche of church preferment. In referring to the disciplines of both churches I shall only give the substance, without referring to page or section, altho' the discipline of each church lays before me, the one of the M. E. Church, 1843, the other of the M. P. Church of 1845. I however hold myself responsible for all that I write, and authorize you Sir, if a respectful demand be made, to give up my proper name, post office address &c., as I shall hold myself ready, not only to assert, but to prove the position I have taken to be correct. To proceed; How is a member received in the M. E. Church? Ans. By the preacher in charge. The discipline says it shall be the duty of the preacher to receive the members.

How is a member received in the M. P. Church? Ans. In circuits by a majority of the votes of the class, in Stations by a majority of the votes of the leaders.

We have now before us the manner in which private members are received into both the churches. Into the one church by vote; into the other by the Ipsi-dixit of a preacher, and as these members may advance up to the ministry, we shall learn from the different disciplines, that the CHURCH through her officers advances the one and the PREACHER through his officers advances the other.

The first step in order is to obtain a recommendation from the class of which the applicant is a member, to the Quarterly Conference. As classes in these churches are very differently formed, different results may sometimes occur. In the M. P. Church members receive each other in fellowship and communion by solemn vote as above stated. In the M. E. Church the preacher holds the power of the keys, and receives, or rejects, as he may think proper. Whilst the one applies to brethren who have mutually agreed to live together in church relation, the other applies to a promiscuous body, thrown together without each others consent, at the will, or caprice, of any novice or preacher, that at the will of a Bishop, may happen to have the charge of a circuit or station.

But as the Quarterly Con. is the body from which each of the applicants must obtain their license if any be obtained, we think it right to enquire, that officers compose the Quarterly Conferences, and how these officers are created, then we shall see as above stated, that in the M. P. Church, the officers that compose the Quarterly Conference, are the officers of the church, whilst in the M. E. Church the officers that compose the Q. Conf. are the officers of the preacher. Composition of a Quarterly Conference in the M. E. Church "all the traveling, and local preachers, exhorters, stewards, and leaders and none else" page 30.

Composition of a Quarterly Conference in the M. P. Church. "All the ministers, preachers, exhorters, stewards; leaders and Trustees" page 19.

In the M. E. Church the preacher appoints all their leaders.

In the M. P. Church, the classes elect their leaders.

In the M. E. Church the preacher nominates the stewards and none can be elected but of his nomination. No nomination, no steward.

In the M. P. Church the Quarterly Conference is left free to elect its own stewards.

In the M. E. Church the preacher gives the license to exhorters.

In the M. P. Church the Quarterly Con. gives the license to exhorters.

In the M. E. Church, preachers nominate for trustees, they have no seat in Quarterly Con.

In the M. P. Church the male members of the church elect trustees, they have a seat in Q. Con.

So far then the difference in the two bodies appears to be, the one a body of freemen elected to office by their brethren, exercising the right of an untrammelled franchise. The other a body dependent on the priest for the Stations they fill, and instead of having an untrammelled franchise, can call into office those only, who may be nominated by the preacher. The leaders are all his men, made by him, the stewards are all his nominees, the exhorters are all his licensed men, and these constitute ¾th of his Conference and therefore he is prepared to carry any point he may think proper. He can change the leaders when he pleases, he can nominate stewards at pleasure, let there be a misstep in any of them, if his views are not consulted and met, how easily to remove them from office. Episcopal dignity and Episcopal wrath, can effect this immediately. Were I an applicant for license, and had the preacher on my side, I should never dream of defeat, and if defeated, wo! to them by whom I had been defeated, they will never be likely to defeat another applicant. And with the preacher opposed to me, I should never hope for success. How much better to leave Quarterly Conferences free to act, and each applicant stand or fall on his own merits, without the influence of an interfering and meddlesome preacher. But suppose the applicants in both churches to be successful in obtaining a license, how does the matter then stand. In the M. E. Church Itinerant licentiates are rated 100 per cent in advance of local licentiates, and Itinerant licentiates may be ordained to the office of a deacon at the expiration of two years, whilst the local licentiate cannot arrive to the office of a Deacon in a less term of time than 4 years, though he may be 100 per cent the most intelligent man; here is a great lack of Mutual Rights.

In the M. P. Church the unstationed licentiate and the Itinerant can both arrive at the office of deacon at the expiration of two years.

In the M. E. Church a LOCAL DEACON must act as such four years until he can arrive at the office of an Elder; whilst an Itinerant deacon acts as such only two years and is elegible to the office of an Elder; thus MAKING eight years FOR A LOCAL LICENTIATE TO GET ELDER'S ORDERS, AND 4 YEARS FOR AN ITINERANT.

In the M. P. Church the unstationed deacon and the Itinerant deacon both serve two years and are then eligible to elder's orders, thus making four years from the time of receiving license, up to the time of receiving Elder's ordination. EACH CLASS OF MINISTERS STANDING ON A PERFECT EQUALITY.

But now how does the matter stand, a local miuister in the M. E. Church can have no business in an Annual Conference after he receives ordination, the Annual Conference is composed "of all the travelling preachers in full connection, and those who are to be received into full connection (i. e. those who have travelled two years) not a word about local preachers or ministers being present, this is out of the question.

In the M. P. Church an unstationed minister may be a delegate to the Conference, three years out of four, if his brethren will elect him to the office, and thus participate in all the business of Conference, and even the fourth year he may be elected by his brethren to the Electoral College, and when there is eligible to a seat in the General Conference as much so as any minister in the district.

If circumstances should occur that would render a church trial necessary which of the two ministers is most likely to secure justice, the one who is a M. E. local preacher, or the unstationed M. P. minister?

In the M. E. Church the minister can hurry an individual into a trial without giving him sufficient notice—he chooses the committee without giving the right of challenge, and if dissatisfied with the decision, can carry up an appeal to the higher court himself, and the original committee may form a part of the higher tribunal. Here we may have a prejudiced judge, a prejudiced and packed jury, a prejudiced appeal, and finally a prejudiced decision, without even the privilege of complaining.

In the M. P. Church the minister must give 20 days notice, a written statement of the charges, a right of challenge to the amount of the original number of the committee, has no right of appeal himself, he must carry out the decision of the committee and if the accused appeals the original committee cannot sit in the case.

Now sir, how much preferable is the office of an unstationed minister in the M. P. Church than that of a local preacher in the Methodist E. Church.

1st. The M. P. applicant, applies for recommendation to the Quarterly Con. to brethren he has agreed to fellowship.

2nd. The Quarterly Conference to whom he applies are officers of his own choice.

3rd. He arrives at the office of deacon in two years.

4th. He arrives at the office of Elder in four years.

5th. He may be a member of the Annual Conference.

6th. He may be a member of the Electoral College.

7th. He may be a member of the General Conference.

8th. In case of trial he may demand 20 days notice.

9th. He has the right of challenge and he may object to the prejudiced or those who may have prejudiced the cause.

10th. No original committee man can sit on an appeal.

These are a few of the privileges, some of the dignity and equality that is enjoyed by unstationed ministers in the M. P. Church.

1st. The M. E. applicant, applies for recommendation to the Quarterly Conference to brethren the preacher has said he shall fellowship.

2nd. The Quarterly Conference to whom he applies are three-fourths officers of the Preachers choice.

3rd. He arrives at the office of deacon in 4 YEARS—if ever.*

4th. He arrives at the office of elder in 8 YEARS—if ever.

5th. HE CANNOT BE A MEMBER OF THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

6th. THE M. E. CHURCH HAS NO ELECTORAL COLLEGE.

7th. HE NEVER CAN BE A MEMBER OF THE GEN. CONFERENCE.

8th. He may be hurried into trial without sufficient notice.

9th. HE HAS NO RIGHT TO CHALLENGE THE JURY.

10th. If he appeals from the decision of a committee he cannot object to the original jury sitting on the appeal.

Now sir, if a licentiate in the M. E. Church should get a recommendation, up to the Annual Conference for ordination, the discipline says 'he MAY BE ORDAINED' who is there acquainted with the usages of the M. E. Church that does not know, that the enquiry at the Annual Conference is, is there any necessity for this brother to be ordained, and if some travelling celebrater of marriage should inform the Conf. there is no necessity for ordaining the applicant, then the petition gets the go by, and many an honest minister has been cheated out of his rights, and gone down to the grave without the hands of a Bishop being laid on his head. Oh this a misfortune, who would miss such an honor? what! fail of having the fingers of a Bishop spread over the head? is there not something peculiarly interesting in the idea? a decendant of Coke and Asbury, who can have so much virtue as a Bishop? and who would submit to the imposition of the hands of a plain democratic republican President aided by a couple of elders when indeed they may have the hands of a third ordination man laid upon them? what rights would not a man give up for such a privilege? who would care whether he was ever admitted into an Annual Conference or not? who would care about electoral colleges? who would care about General Conferences? who would not wait 4 nay 8 years if at last the Bishop's hands may touch him? but if peradventure the hands of the Bishop should be denied, is in not a sufficient amount of honor to have been an aspirant for such a privilege, like some defeated politicians, who tell you they have had the honor of running for Congress, but never the misfortune to be elected. Let men hug their chains, let them court oppression, let them plead for aristocracy, let them rub against Bishops, and say; I love the old ship, but your writer says, give me equality and Mutual Rights, find it where I may, I will advocate it and find oppression where I may, I will oppose it.

Yours, PAUL PRY.

*For the discipline only says he may be ordained.

WHAT CANNOT BE DONE, IS DONE.

In the year 1840, report came to me, "that William Beaty" a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, "had sworn falsely." Upon enquiring into the case, I became confirmed of the fact. I called a number of times on him for information, and not getting proper satisfaction, I mentioned the case to the preacher in charge, viz. John Cosart. Beaty having heard what I said to the preacher, a difficulty commenced, and continued some time. In a Class Meeting, the preacher stated "that he was authorised to say, that the difficulty between brothers Beaty and Hibbard was settled; that brother Beaty would have no more to say about the matter; and that I authorised him the preacher to state that I never had any reason to think that brother Beaty had sworn falsely;" and asked me "if it were not so?" I replied that I never authorised him to make such a statement. The preacher then called on the Society to meet on Monday, eight days from that time, to setle the difficulty; and requested "that I then should prove brother Beaty had sworn falsely." In a day or two, I was presented with a charge of slander.

On the day appointed for trial, an adjournment was granted; and an agreement made by the parties, in presence of the preacher and society, "to receive as testimony, transcripts of Justices Dockets officially signed, and affidavits taken before proper authority to administer oath, as evidence on trial.

The preacher desired us, the parties, to get as many witnesses as we could conveniently, to be personally present.

At the adjourned day, the charge was presented against me, which I acknowledged. A plea of justification was set up by me, the defendant; and a witness introduced. The preacher said, "that the defendant could not be allowed to justify; and that the defendant was guilty whether true or false." After arguments, the witness was allowed to testify. A transcript from a justice's docket was next introduced as testimony; but the preacher said "no such paper should be admitted as evidence."

I reminded him of the agreement when the trial was adjourned;—he said there was no such agreement, and "that it should not be admitted." Such I stated to be according to agreement; and unless the transcript and affidavits were admitted, as evidence, I should prove the agreement. The preacher yielded; and the transcript and several affidavits were then read, and given to a commitee then selected. The preacher was with the committee in their deliberations, and a verdict of guilty was found against me, the defendant, and I was expelled.

I appealed, and the case was presented by Osee M. Goodale, the successor of John Cosart, to the Quarterly Meeting Conference of Farmington Circuit. There was a certificate attached to the minutes of the trial, signed by John Cosart, stating that two of the affidavits which were read on the trial, were objected to, and not received as testimony. The certificate I declared to be false; and pledged myself to prove it such then, or at any future time.

The Rev. H. Colclazer presiding, said "to guard the dignity of the Ministry, they could not be received as testimony here." The case was argued; and the decision of the committee that found me guilty was reversed.

On the 1st day of February 1842, the same charge was again presented to me, as in the former case, and I was cited to appear and answer thereto, by Osee M. Goodale, on the 5th of the same month.

The preacher in charge was satisfied that the charge was the same as on the former trial. He was informed of the course that I, the defendant, would take, and he agreed to bring the original charge and the minutes of the trial, for the defendant, and deliver them to me at the trial. I, in the course of defense declared "a former trial in bar," and called on the preacher for the papers. He, Osee M. Goodale; said "that he was under no obligation to furnish my defence, and he refused to deliver the papers; saying, to me, "you are guilty, whether true or false; you can have no defence; you cannot bring one witness to justify."

He was with the Society in their deliberations; and I, the defendant, was found guilty, and said to be expelled.

Appeal was again taken:—the case went to the Quarterly Conference;—I was unable to attend;—sent a request to have the case laid over to the next Conference; the request was not granted; and the decision was confirmed, Osee M. Goodale presiding.

In June, 1845, I applied to the Rev. James Shaw, presiding elder, in writing, for a rehearing in the Quarterly Conference.

His opinion was "that the Conference had no jurisdiction in the case."

He would reflect on the matter; and give me the result in writing and sent me the following Letter:

Ann Arbor, Michigan, July 9th, 1845.

BROTHER HIBBARD, Sir: According to agreement, I take this opportunity to send you the result of my own reflections, and the counsel I have been enabled to obtain concerning the matter, you presented to me.

We all agree that the Quarterly Conference can have no jurisdiction in the matter, as it stands, at present; but think the Annual Conference may, perhaps, if you desire it.

I will present the matter to the Bishop; and, if admissible, to the Conference; provided, you will furnish me with the facts in the case. If you wish it presented, I would like to see you at the Quarterly Meeting at Farmington, August 23d, 1845. Yours, affectionately,

MR. JOHN HIBBARD. JAS. SHAW.

I accordingly, attended the Quarterly Meeting, and still urged a rehearing; but I was not allowed the privilege.

I then asked permission of the Presiding Elder, to make complaint to the Conference of the dealings of the Church towards me, as an individual, agreeably to Discipline, page 30th.

This request was refused. A third request I made of the Rev. James Shaw, Presiding Elder, for a decision of the Conference.

This request he granted, not as a legal act, only as an expression of the Conference. Accordingly the case was presented.

A member of the Conference presented a resolution in the words following; viz:

"Resolved, that in the opinion of this Conference, in the trial and expulsion of brother John Hibbard, there was mal-administration."

The resolution was carried and sustained by the Conference.

I then presented the case to the Bishop and Conference, as follows; viz:

To the Bishop and Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Michigan;—

The undersigned would respectfully represent, that he was a member of the M. E. Church, Farmington Circuit, Michigan. The latter part of June, 1841, I was cited to a trial before a committed on a charge of slander, in accusing William Beaty, a member of the Church, of false swearing, in relation to a certain Note of hand. The case presented, I the defendant, acknowledged the charge, and put in a plea of justification, and proceeded to the defence. The case was submitted to the committe, and by them the defendant was found guilty, and by John Cosart, the Preacher in charge, I was expelled.

Appeal was taken;—the case carried to the Quarterly Conference; and by that body, the decision of the committee was reversed.

The same charge as before was presented against me; and I was cited to appear and answer on the 5th day of February, 1842, before the society of which I was a member. The case was presented; the proof to sustain the charge, was a declaration, said to be made by me, the defendant, previous to the former trial.

My plea was a former trial in bar. The decision of Osee M. Goodale, preacher in charge, was "that I could have no defence; and that I was guilty, whether true or false." I was debarred the privilege of defence; was found guilty, and said to be expelled. Consequently, the decision of the Conference was reversed. Appeal was taken;—the case carried to the Quarterly Conference: I was unable to attend; sent a request to have the case laid over to the next Conference; and, by misrepresentation, the decision was confirmed.

JOHN HIBBARD.

Farmington Circuit, Michigan, Aug. 1842.

The above, I am credibly informed, went to the Bishop; and by him decided to be mal-administration; and he gave advice not to redress the wrong. The case was not presented to the Annual Conference. As the case above mentioned, had been decided by the Quarterly Meeting Conference, and by the Bishop, to be mal-administration, and as an illegal act has no binding force, and after an examination of the discipline, pages 22d, 40th, and 88th to 90th, I come to the conclusion, that I was not expelled, and so I declared in public. The preacher in charge, Mr. Thomas, said he had understood a difficulty had been here, and if any one was ignorant, it was probably himself, and he wished to remain so.

I still urged the claim of membership, and requested the privilege of asking a few questions, if he would answer;—to which he agreed.

1st. Can a member be expelled from the Methodist Episcopal Church, without a trial?

Answer, He can not.

I replied, What cannot be done, is not done.

2nd. Can a Society or a committee reverse the decision of a Quarterly Conference?

Answer, They can not.

Reply, as before, viz: What cannot be done, is not done.

3d. If a member is cited to trial, as defendant, and not allowed to defend, would that constitute a trial?

Answer, It would not.

Agreed, was the reply.

A copy of the report to the Bishop was read.

4th. If I prove this to be true, then it is proved, that there was no trial;

And, if I be expelled, the decision of the Quarterly Conference, is reversed.

Is it not so?

Answer. You do; if you prove that to be true.

The paper containing the report to the Bishop, was turned over, and the certificates read.

The preacher, addressing a member present, says, brother Noe, do you sanction all that? Noe answered he did;—it was true, every word; and that he had signed it.

The Society was disbanded. In about 13 weeks, Mr. Thomas came and organized a Society again. I then attended, and asked his decision, in relation to my being a member? He replied you are expelled.

Question, Am I expelled without a trial, when you said it could not be done?

Answer, You catch at words. I do not say you were expelled legally.

Reply, I am not disappointed in your decision. It is now decided that,—

What cannot be done, is done.

I then asked his given name.

His reply was, my name is David, at home & abroad.

The following certificates were on the back of the report, presented to the Bishop.

We certify, that we were present at the two trials mentioned within; and that the charges preferred, were substantially the same in both; and that Mr. Goodale, the preacher in charge, who presided at the last trial said that Colonel Hibbard should have no defence; that he could not justify; that it amounted to slander, whether true, or false? HIRAM BARRITT,

MATTHEW H. HUNGERFORD.

We certify that we were present, and are knowing that the within statements are substantially true. J. J. YOUNG,

PROSPECTUS OF THE

OHIO CULTIVTOR,

Vol. III---For 1847.

A semi-monthly Journal, devoted to the promotion of Agriculture, Horticulture & Domestic Industry.

PUBLISHED AT COLUMBUS, OHIO,

By M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor,

Assisted by the contributions of a very large number of practical and scientific writers,—farmers, horticulturists, &c.

Illustrated with numerous Engravings.

TERMS—One Dollar per year—Four Copies for Three Dollars: payments invariably in advance.

THE OHIO CULTIVATOR has now become so well known to the farmers and friends of agriculture in Ohio, that it is unnecessary to say any thing of its character or design. Grateful for the encouragement he has thus far received, the editor and proprietor takes this occasion to inform his friends and patrons, that he is determined to put forth new efforts in their service, and make his paper for the coming year still more deserving of their continued liberal patronage. Besides improvement in the matter for its columns, the mechanical appearance of the paper will be improved by the use of new type, and more illustrations. It will contain the latest and most reliable intelligence respecting the crops and the markets, both in this country, and in Europe, so as to aid the farmer in deciding at what time and price to dispose of his productions. This information alone will be worth, to most farmers, many times the price of subscription, especially now that prices are so much effected by foreign intelligence. In addition to all this, the editor believes that his increased experience and knowledge of the agricultural condition of the State, together with his extended correspondence, will enable him to make each succeeding volume of the Cultivator more valuable than the one that preceded it.

The influence of the paper, wherever it has been generally read, is admitted to have been highly salutary. It has began to awaken a spirit of inquiry and improvement among the farmers, and inspire them with more just and elevated conceptions of the character, duties and pleasures of their noble occupation. As evidence of this it may be stated, that during the past year, Agricultural Societies have been organized in twenty counties of this State; and there is reason to believe that as many more will be formed during the year to come. These associations, in connection with the State Board of Agriculture, and the Cultivator as an organ for the diffusion of intelligence, cannot fail to exert such an influence on the minds and the practice of the farming community, as will in a few years place our young Giant State in that position which she is by Nature designed to occupy—the first State of the Union in agricultural wealth and lasting prosperity.

Farmers of Ohio! Who among you are willing to have no part in this onward march of improvement? Who among you are willing to deprive yourselves and your families of that 'knowledge which is power,' and the great means of progress and elevation, for the sake of the small pittance which that knowledge may cost? And who of you that desire to see this work advance, will not make an effort to arouse your neighbors from the mental torpor that rests upon too many of them? The work is not difficult—pursuade them to read papers devoted to their interests—☞ send on their names, with your own, as subscribers to the Ohio Cultivator, and you may rely upon it they will soon begin to awake—to inquire and think—and not only become better farmers, but more intelligent and agreeable neighbors.

Address, M. B. BATEHAM,
Columbus, Ohio.

PROSPECTUS

OF THE LITERARY EMPORIUM.

A COMPENDIUM OF

Religious, Literary and Philosophical Knowledge.

IN the first place, light literature will find no place in its pages, i. e., love tales, literary trash, &c. Secondly, sectarianism will not be admitted into the Emporium; or, in other words, it will favor no particular sect; but it will advocate the religion of the Bible in the strongest terms, and will urge the necessity not only of a change of heart, but a virtuous and holy life, in order to be truly happy in this world and to be prepared for that which is to come.—In regard to its literary character, it is designed to be of such a nature, as to water the thirsty soul that is studiously endeavoring to acquire a knowledge of man in his past and present condition; also some information in relation to the different sciences and arts, and the variety of the works of nature, with such miscellaneous reading as will invigorate the faculties of the mind, give scope to the imagination, while it shall address itself to the good sense of all who desire to be truly elevated by reading.

Our object in the beginning was to establish a sound literature, which we deem of much importance to the future destiny of this country. We bless God that he has smiled on our efforts: for although the Emporium has been in existence but two years, and has just entered upon the third, it has already attained a circulation of fifteen thousand, which is unequalled in the history of Magazines. It is got up in better style, and contains more reading, and from abler pens, than any other magazine of its price in the United States.

Christian Friend, we hope you will aid us in the extensive circulation and support of a work, which we think calculated to enrich the mind, and inspire the soul to the love of virtue and its Divine Author. The very extensive circulation of light and frothy literature, as it is called, is taking by wholesale, the very life blood of the morality and religion of the youth of our country. Is it not time for Christians to act in this matter?

 CONTRIBUTORS.—The Literary Emporium contains articles, original or selected, from the following, among other distinguished authors:

J. G. Whittier, Seba Smith, R. S. St. John, Mrs. Judson, Rev. J. N. Danforth. Mrs. E. O. Smith, Miss Welby, Mrs. F. H. Green, Mrs. Stewart, Rev. S. Olin, Prof. McClintock, Rev. J. P. Durbin, Elihu Burritt, Wm. C. Bryant, N. P. Willis, S. Galloway, A. M., Washington Irving, Rev. Dr. Bethune, Rev. L. L. Hamline, Rev. E. Thomson, Rev. T. Dick, D. D., Rev H. Winslow, Rev. Wm. B. Sprague, Rev. T. H. Stockton, Rev. Rob't. Lee, Rev. B. F. Teft, Mrs. L. H. Sigourney, Mrs. E. C. Embury, Miss Sedgwick, Emeline Smith, Eliza Cook, Miss Baker.

The Emporium is published monthly, at $1,00 a year; $5,00 allowed to any person who will obtain fifteen paying subscriber, and at the same rate for a greater or less number. One hundred enterprising and honest Agents wanted for the Emporium and other valuable works. All letters, orders, &c., should be addressed to

W. S. STOCKTON,—General Agent.

TO persons who are acquainted with the character and objects of the CHRISTIAN WORLD, as they have been developed during the last six years, it is only necessary to say, that as soon as one thousand paying subscribers are secured, the paper will be put to press. The Old Subscription List ought to supply this number at once.

To other persons, it is proper to remark, that the Christian World, in print, is intended to reflect the Christian World, in action—in a word, daguerreotype it: and then, for purposes of common advantage, to compare the organized and operature Religion of the Age with the Religion of the Bible.

The enlarged literary and business agencies of the Establishment, are deemed amply sufficient to assure the public of successful management. Its immediate connexion with the CHRISTIAN ATHENEUM—an Institution which is to be furnished with many of the principal organs of Church and State, both in Europe and America,—will give its conductors early access to invaluable sources of universal intelligence.

DIRECTIONS.

1. On receipt of this Prospectus, let the Old subscribers, at every Post-office, appoint one of their number, or some other suitable person, an Agent. Let him send us, at once, as many names and as much money as possible. In cases where substantial agents make themselves responsible fo their subscribers, this responsibility will be regarded as equivalent to payment in advance—provided they settle their accounts within six months. Even in such cases, however, immediate payments are decidedly preferable; and, to encourage them, the commissions to agents are arranged thus:—On cash orders, 25 per cent.: on deferred remittances, 12½ per cent.

2. As the Prospectus will be widely distributed, let all persons who see it, and feel an interest in it, act promptly in the manner described above. It is thought that a little effort will be sufficient to procure a company, or club, at almost any Post-office in the Union. The times increasingly demand just such publication as is proposed.

Address,—W. S. STOCKTON, General Agent, Philadelphia, Pa.: or either of the Associate Editors. All orders will be punctually attended to.

WELLMAN'S ILLUSTRATED BOTANY.

VOL. II., 1847.

EDITED BY J. D. COMSTOCK, M. D.

Author of Botany, Natural Philosphy, Chemistry, Mineralogy, Geology, Natural History, Phyliology, etc., assisted BY J. C COMSMOCK, ESQ.

THE success of the Illustrated Botany is no longer an experiment, for altho' it has been in existence but one year, it already has a circulation of about five thousand, a sufficient number to warrant its support, which cannot be said of any other work of the kind. Indeed, it is the only work of this character published in this country, which promises stability and a long life. We think the prospects of the second year of the Botany are very flattering. One reason for this opinion is, the fact that it is now very popular, having a large circle of friends. Another very important reason is, the securing of an Editor for the coming year, whose popularity as an author in the various branches of Natural Science, is so extensive as to leave his name familiar to every student in the sciences in this country. We are fully satisfied that the Botany will, under its present Editors, bear the severest criticism, and we intend that it shall become the standard work.

In the course of its publication, it will contain an Introduction to the Natural System of Botany, a thorough Treatise on the interesting and important branch of Vegetable Physiology, Notices on Fossil Botany, and descriptions, both scientific and popular, of numerous species of plants, the properties of which, medicinal and useful, will be fully explained. In short it is intended to present a complete view of the latest and most important facts, discoveries, and theories, in every department of the science.

The whole illustrated by splendid colored engravings, taken from Nature, full size, and finished the highest style of modern art.

This work is designed to be eminently popular in its application, and there is enough of that which is stranger than fiction about it to render it, in no ordinary degree, interesting and instructive.

We do not intend to confine ourselves to the botanical descriptions of each plant, but to make it a thoroughly scientific work, in all the departments of Botany. It will also give information on the cultivation of plants and flowers. In a word, it will comprise the whole science.

TERMS.

This work will be published monthly, with from six to ten flowers, handsomely painted, in each number. Price, $3,00 a year, or two copies sent to one address for $5,00.

☞ A very liberal discount allowed to Agents.

SPIRIT OF REFORM.

Written for the Western Recorder.

PROGRESS AND REFORM.

NO. III.

To men professedly engaged in works of benevolence it seems not only ungracious but unjust, to have their measures called in question. And if it is admitted that they are doing good, they are quite sure that they should be exempt from criticism.

But they forget that fidelity to the cause, be it what it may, demands that errors should be faithfully pointed out, and that the triumph of every benevolent institution must depend upon truth. Let us know the truth. Nothing else is safe. Nothing else enduring.

In regard to the benevolent efforts which characterize this age it seems to me true that they proceed often upon untrue principles. They partake too much of worldly policy or the wisdom of man is substituted for the wisdom of God.

Christian reformers should never feel at a loss as to their governing principles. In the Divine Redeemer they have at once the Prince of reformers and the pattern of all believers. A careful study of the gospel will thoroughly qualify them for every good word and work. Not indeed that it demands, on the one hand, an exact imitation of all that Christ and the Apostles did, or on the other, forbids the use of any means not used by them; but it clearly prescribes the principles which should govern.

Looking at the preceptive parts of the gospel, we find the Savior commanding his followers to place no confidence in Princes, or in an arm of flesh, no reliance upon human devices for saving men. His whole doctrine is based upon simple truth. He utters not one word which can be construed into respect or reverence for the institutions of men, except as they harmonize with the divine arrangement. He commanded that our alms giving should be done unostentatiously. That our respect for men should be proportioned to their moral worth, irrespective of adventitious circumstances of wealth or title.

In all this, he differs essentially from reformers of the modern school. Take up the list of officers of almost any national organization and two thirds of the names will have the prefix of Hon. or D. D.

Is it true that these individuals are selected with no reference to the fact of their having sounding titles? Look over the proceedings of these bodies and who can fail of being impressed with the feeling, that a few titled individuals, prominent in the church or state, but not renowned for superior piety or wisdom exert a controlling influence over these societies. Sabbath associations and and missionary societies make honorary members of prominent politicians, who make no sort of pretensions to superior regard for these reformatory movements; and if I mistake not in some cases these distinctions are conferred upon decidedly irreligious men.

But passing by the precepts of the great and true reformer, let us consider his example.

Beyond all question the resources of the universe were at his command. Not only legions of angels, but all mankind could have been marshalled into his service. With what perfect ease could he have invested himself with all the imposing insignia of Royalty, and at once have gratified the Jews, and won to his service the Gentiles. Princes, Nobles, Poets, Philosophers, Scholars, Statesmen and Warriors at his bidding would have flocked to his standard, and he could have astonished and captivated the world by the eloquence and splendor, the riches and power, the learning and wisdom of his court.

Full well did the Divine Savior understand that this cause would have contravened the great and glorious plan of redemption, not by the withholding of himself as the atoning sacrifice (for infinite wisdom could easily have devised, and infinite power have executed a plan to bring him to the cross even from an earthly throne) but by denying the truth.

It would have been the adoption of a false principle; it would have had no tendency to humble the pride of the human heart. Selfishness in all its forms would still have governed, developing itself in sensuality, avarice, ambition, fraud, violence, robbery and murder.

Rejecting the aid of such auxiliaries, Christ relied, solely upon the power of truth, coupled with a holy life. Open, frank, bold but kind, he went forth and proclaimed that truth which is able to make wise unto eternal life.

He directed his efforts at men as individuals accountable for all their acts. So far as his truth prevailed, it made men feel their individuality—and personal responsibility. He aimed at nothing short of a radical change of moral character, and never flattered those who were but outwardly reformed, to believe or feel that they were safe. He scouted the whole doctrine of salvation by works, and taught the self-righeous Pharisee to see the rottenness of his heart and the fallacy of his hopes. He despised all clap trap and artifice for the purpose of enticing men into his service. He made no appeals to their love of mystery or their cupidity. Openly and above board, he preached his doctrines to all who might choose to hear. "In secret have I said nothing" was his own declaration.

No banners nor badges, no fantastic trappings or regalia, no signs or ceremonies intended to affect the senses merely, distinguished him or his followers from other men. All ostentatious parades, all sounding titles, all blind deference to dignitaries or rank, he carefully avoided.

Need I specify any thing more as distinguishing the Chief of Reformers from multitudes who claim that character? Or needs there proof that there is a world wide difference both in the principles and the measures of Christ and many reformers of the present day?

My remarks concerning the practice of our national societies, in regard to great names and sounding titles, apply with but little less force, to our church and church courts. The title of D. D. is regarded as entitling its wearer to profound consideration. Kind reader, just think of it a moment and as you read your Testament, add the modern title, to the names of Paul and Peter.—Rev. Paul, D. D. Rt. Rev. Bishop Peter, D. D. How it sounds; you feel disgusted. And yet even good men manifest a childlike vanity in bearing this most ridiculous, and unmeaning "fardel." And when invested with the precious privilege how oracular they immediately become, and what difference, what profound veneration is demanded and paid to the title, Bishop, let who will wear it.

Then we have choice members, of our Benevolent Societies who are Sabbath breakers, profane swearers, licentious, mockers, scoffers at religion, and Infidels. Some such are found occasionaly in our pulpits instructing the people in regard to their moral obligations!

Our charities too are distributed not as of old, quietly and without parade, but the trumpet is sounded most loudly. Is a church in debt? the money must be raised by a "fair" not altogether different from good old John Bunyan's "vanity fair." We eat sumptuous suppers in order to keep the Irish from starving. And by way of making a grand raise for the same most praise worthy object.

Balls are gotten up, where old and young unite in dancing Polkas, country dances, and Irish jigs till late in the night, all, as they boast, by way of demonstrating their sympathy for the perishing Irish. I suppose this may be called "active benevolence."

We have had Benevolent societies or social organizations which deride Bible institutions, and reformers who regard the Bible as no more authoritative than the Koran. Then there are other organizations, claiming a high rank in the benevolent order which hold their meetings with closed doors, setting a double watch, as if engaged in works of darkness, having secret signs, pass words, imposing ceremonies, sounding titles, and gorgeous regalia appealing evidently to the senses rather than the judgment, and cultivating that love of mystery or spirit of prying curiosity which brought "death into the world and all our woe."

Is it wrong to say that the tendency of the age is to formalism, in religion, to a showy but unsubstantial kind of benevolence, that we are becoming mechanical in our reformatory movements, overlooking the heart, and ceasing to labor for a thorough change of character, so that we secure outward reformation.

Are not many of the (so called) benevolent movements in derogation of the church and of the examples and teachings of Christ? If not I have misundersood the signs of the times.

These brief numbers have been hastily penned with the hope of calling up the attention of those better able to take up and discuss the subject for the edification of the public. Should they thus result, the object of the writer will have been fully obtained. Yours, Y. Z.

REMINISCENCES

OF THE FIRST SETTLEMENT OF OHIO.

NO. VI.

Friend Bassett: I begin to be fearful that the length of my notes, and the want of the necessary literary qualifications, to render my articles interesting, may make it desirable to you, and your readers, to bring them to a close. My object has been to furnish facts, so far as I had them, from my own recollection, or from the information of others; to do what I could to rescue from oblivion such incidents, as may be hereafter desirable, in order to the compiling a history of our State. Those who were amongst the early setlers are fast passing away, and "the places that have known them, must soon know them no more." Here a little, and there a little, may still be collected, to make up the deficiency of past negligence; though I am glad to say, that Dr. S. P. Hildreth of Marietta, has done very much to rescue from oblivion the early history of our State; more probably than any other man has done, or can hereafter do in this matter; and no doubt in due season the public will be furnished with the result of his labors, and of those of the society formed for the same purpose.

After St. Clair's defeat, the Government organized the army under the command of General Wayne, which eventually defeated the Indians on the Maumee river, and secured a peace with them. But in the meantime our seulements were harrassed with continual alarms, and occasionally, the death of some of the inhabitants, of the different settlements. No effort could be made with success to increase wealth, except by merchants, or army contractors. The obtaining a bare subsistence, and securing the lives of the inhabitants, occupied the attention of all; and those ends were secured by combining the labor, and energies of the whole community. Even then, much of happiness and enjoyment existed, because mutual dependance, induced mutual confidence; and those ambitious feelings so rife in our day, to out shine our neighbors in the style of living, and dress, could hardly be gratified, if they should have been indulged. I have asked some who were men and women then, if any period of their lives had given more of interest; and the reply has uniformly been, that upon the whole those were happy days notwithstanding the difficulties.

Emigration was turned to Kentucky and the river was the great highway, and the number of boats was very great. The waggon beds inside of the boats, served as beds, the wheels were hung on the out side; and the horses were in the forcend of the boat, without the cover; the oars were inside, so that they could be managed without unnecessary exposure, still there was danger, even on the river. The Indians would use many means of decoying the boats to land. Sometimes they would surprize them at the shore. I have myself seen the bones of a whole family consisting, I have been told, of thirteen (men, women and children,) killed a few miles below the mouth of Leading Creek, above Gallipolis. Whether the boat landed to supply fuel or were decoyed to do so by the Indians, I know not; none escaped. When it was known, a party went from Point Pleasant, and put the bodies between two rocks that formed an arch, and stopped up the opening. In process of time the logs used for that purpose, decayed, and the bones were exposed. I could easily distinguish the difference between the adults and the children.

The settlements on the Ohio, on the Virginia side, "were few, and far between," leaving wide spaces for the Indians to penetrate into the interior of western Virginia, about Clarkesburgh, Morgantown, &c; from whence they frequently brought off captives, as well as slaying the inhabitants. This of course produced retaliation; and there were a good many in the neighborhood of Wheeling, Charlestown, (now Wellsburgh) Grave Creek, &c., that were well versed in Indian warfare, who did not hesitate to make expeditions into the Indian country on this side of the river. I have frequently stopped at the house of a Mr. Dickerson, below Fish Creek, who was one of their principle men, in these voluntary excursions; and from whom I have heard of their transactions, one of which I will relate here, as it is illustrative of the then condition of the country.

About thirty men, from the vicinity of Wheeling and other neighboring settlements, came on to the Muskingum, in the winter, or fall, and searched for Indians in the vicinity of the present sites of Zanesville, Putnam, &c; but after being out a good while, they had seen none, except a Mr. Zane and his Indian wife, and children, who resided with the Indians, mostly, but was considered as neutral by both parties. He was hunting, and had pitched his camp in the bottom below Putnam. Some of the company became quite anxious for a fight with Indians, and dissatisfied with their poor success. Dickerson professed to be the chief of the party though there was no legal authority: they went down to Duncans falls on the west side of the river, and while there, the snow fell a few inches deep, and one morning they came upon the trail of Indians, which they followed, and the men appeared pleased with the prospect of an Indian fight; they continued their pursuit until the after part of the day, when it became evident that the number of the enemy had greatly increased, by being joined by other parties, and now outnumbering the whites; and besides, in their circuitous route, in pursuit of game had come upon the trail of the whites, and were pursuing them; so that the whites found it good policy to make a speedy retreat. They had a few horses, and crossed the river at a ford below Salt creek some distance, expecting they might be attacked while passing the men over the river, with the horses. Mr. D. remained until the last, expecting every moment to be fired upon. After they crossed, they took up a drain that led from the river, and after following it some time, Dickerson halted the party, and proposed that they should follow the ravine to the top of the hill,—send the horses on some distance—secure them and return and watch their trail, for the coming enemy. A part agreed to the plan, but those who had shewed the most eagerness for the fight declined; so they pursued their retreat. Towards night about 4 miles from the river, they shot a young bear, and encamped, in order to cook and eat. After the meal Dickerson told them they must march three or four miles, and sleep without fire, as the Indians would certainly attack them before morning; but they were tired, full of meat, and concluded the Indians would only follow to the river. They would not move. After most of them had lain down, while D. was setting with his powder-horn and bullet pouch on his shoulder, mending his mockasins, the Indians fired upon them, and immediately rushed in with the tomahawk, and knife. Dickerson caught a gun and ran a short distance, and treed. Others as they could, ran. The Indians threw fire-brands beyond where D. stood. He found his party totally defeated, and he made up the hill they were on. One man ran before him,—whom he soon recognized, but found he fell every few steps, his feet were bare, and he gave him his sack, (having himself a new pair of mockasins in his belt.) They soon heard the Indians scalp yell, when Dickerson determined to return down the hill, and shoot one of them; but on examining the gun found it was not his, and that he could not load again, as his bullets were too large; so these two made the best of their way to Wheeling. Very few others escaped; I think he said five or six. He expressed his belief that most of the men had foundered themselves on the bear meat.

Near Gallipolis one man was scalped, and left for dead, but he recovered and came into the fort. At another time Robert Safford, and his associate spy, saw two Indians so that they felt confident of killing both, but just as they were in the act of firing they heard the loud talk of others, following in the trail of the first, and reserving their fire soon saw three more with a Frenchman a prisoner, they thought the odds too much, and suffered them to pass undisturbed. The Frenchman was taken to Detroit, secured his liberation, and settled there. Towards the close of the war, a stockade was erected near the mouth of Olive-green Creek, above Waterford. A Mr. Sherman had been down from that, to the Waterford stockade; on his return about a mile and a half above, he heard as was supposed, the bells of cattle upon a run, and while in pursuit of them, he was killed and scalped; his son found him dead. There was also a Mr. Waterman killed in the vicinity of Waterford. I am not acquainted with the circumstances.

It may be asked did the whites succeed in killing none of the enemy, or were they always the unsuccessful party? In a future number I may give some instances of their doing so. Though I must confess I take no pleasure in reminiscence of 'acts of retaliation.' I am not one of those that hold hostility against that much abused people; they have been much injured and trampled upon, by our race of the Saxon origin. They carry on war, as they were taught, as savages. We a civilized people, having the gospel to teach us, also war as savages, in many instances I am sorry to say. HORACE NYE.

A Good One.—Hon. Andrew Stewart, a distinguished member of Congress from Pennsylvania, has recently paid a visit to Lowell. He relates in a letter to the Uniontown, Pa. Democrat, the following anecdote:

"In looking over the pay roll or note book which I accidently picked up from the table, I found on twenty seven consecutive pages, containing eight hundred signatures, nearly all girls, but a single one that made a mark or ⋈, all written in good, and many of them in a most elegant hand. The clerk observed to me that Lord Morpeth, when on a visit to this country some years ago, happened to be present on pay day, and with some surprise enquired: 'What, do your operatives write?' 'Certainly, sir,' said the clerk, 'the Americans all write.' Directly there came in a man who made his mark. 'Ah!' said his lordship, with a smile, 'I thought you said all wrote.'—All Americans, your lordship—this was an Englishman.' Whereupon his lordship grinned a ghastly smile.

Ministers' Department.

An Earnest Ministry.

"Of the times and seasons, brethren," said one, "ye have no need that I write unto you." Either the circumstances of his friends gave the Apostle assurance that they were duly apprised of the facts of their day, and prepared to take advantage of those facts; or, it may be, he knew them to be too deeply engrossed in the Master's work to care for things in their nature ephemeral. Be that as it may, were he living in our day, he might, with great propriety, commence an epistle thus: Of the times and seasons, brethren, ye have need that I write unto you.

What are the characteristics of the present time?

Great activity is one. The current of human life is greatly accelerated. Men and things go by Railway and Telegraph.

Intense devotion is a second; men are absorbed—but not in godliness.

Susceptibility to impression is greatly diminished; devotees to one idea are quite too selfish to listen to the claims of any but their own one fact.

Other characteristics might be named; these will suffice for our present purpose, namely, to suggest the necessity for an earnest ministry.

Every one knows that the most solemn and momentous truths are not only stripped of their power, but even made ridiculous by illtimed and injudicious exhibitions. Thus it is trite and tame withal, to proclaim a crisis for the universal world upon every occasion which may chance to touch the sensibilities of one or two observers.—Yet is it true—and a momentous truth withal—that the history of our day is the history of a succession of crises. The Church and the world have from our earliest remembrance been voyaging through the most perilous navigation. To change the figure, mankind—the patient—has been sick, nigh unto death, since we knew the race. He has passed from one stage of the disease to another, each has been critical, and the present is, for us, who assume the responsibility, the most critical of all. What shall we do?

When the myriads of Xerxes were about to inundate Greece, it was felt that an earnest ministry must oppose their bodies to the flood. Three hundred men did the work. Let those who have eyes to see discern the signs of the times. The flood of the ungodly rushes on with speed and vehemence. What shall we then do? We answer Preach the word; be instant, urgent, in season, always abounding in the work of the Lord.

Men who love the work of the Lord will need but the conviction that this is the way to accomplish it. Others may need to be reminded that as knowledge is much increased, in proportion to his own assiduity is each man's contempt for a sluggard in the vineyard of the Lord. The andante movement of by-gone days permitted religious inefficiency to pass unnoticed with the rest. It is no longer so. Every merchant, mechanic, lawyer and doctor, feels the pressure of the times, and knows well that to fall behind the movement of the age is to forfeit his position and his income. The ministers of Christ whom love constrains, need no persuasion from man. On the contrary, they require often to be reminded of their duty to husband their strength. Of such we bear witness that to their strength and beyond their strength, they have been willing and forward to meet the necessities of our day, and to minister to the spiritual wants of men.

Our appeal is to those who conscious of the activity of the age, are unconcerned to oppose to it their own activity; to those who contemplate the absorption of mankind with little or no great strength of determination to combat it; to those who have not resolved on unwearied pains and ceaseless ingenuity in endeavors to awaken new susceptibility to religious impression.

To all such we must cry, Awake, O sleeper, and call upon thy God. You are a disciple, an apostle of the Son of God—can you not watch with the Master in such an hour as this? Say not within thine heart, 'I am opposed to certain measures'—the exhortation is not to measures, but that you should be filled with the Spirit, and with a manifold activity, as the Holy Ghost teacheth.—Remember Paul.—Exchange Paper.

From the Missionary Herald.

Sandwich Islands.

Extract of a Letter from Mr. Lyons, Waimea.

The year has been characterized by tranquility in the churches. This will appear evident, when I state the number who have been subjects of church discipline. This number, among the sixteen churches, amounts to about five in a church A Hawaiian church of a hundred or more members, that has but five cases of discipline in the course of a year, may be said to enjoy tranquility. While some seventy or eighty have been excluded from the peculiar privileges to which their church membership entitled them, more than two hundred fallen members and apostates have been restored, which, with the addition of more than thirty new members, furnishes matter of gratitude and thanksgiving to God.

During the year one hundred and seven members of this church have rested from their labors. This makes just one thousand of my spiritual children who have been removed by death from my pastoral instruction and supervision, and all within the space of ten years.

About seven hundred of my church members have been dismissed and admitted to other churches on the Islands. Deduct the deceased and the dismissed, together with the suspended and excommunicated, and there still remain two thousand one hundred and thirty-six members in regular standing, so far as I know. Many of them give me joy, and many af them occasion sorrow and tears. They are but babes in knowledge, in firmness, and in Christian enterprise. They need constant instruction exhortation and supervision. They are a great burden upon my hands, but a burden that I delight to bear.

Popery appears to be making no progress in the region which is under the supervision of Mr. Lyons. While five or six persons have joined the Romanists, a greater number have forsaken them.

The epidemic which has prevailed so extensively at the Sandwich Islands, is mentioned as follows:

Some time in April last this epidemic found its way here. It entered one or two families at first: but in a few days there was scarcely a house or an individual exempt. What tongue or pen can depict the sadness and desolation which followed. I was an eye-witness for a part of the time. While I myself was exempt, and after I had partially recovered, I visited from house to house, endeavoring to relieve the poor, distressed objects every where to be found. Violent coughs distressing head-aches, burning fevers, were the attendants of the disease. From morning till night, while I was not visiting, I was dealing out medicines. As the people were unabled to get out into the fields and woods in quest of something to eat, and as Waipo, the principle dependence of Waimea for food, was in the same situation, and hence failed to bring supplies as usual, the sick of Waimea were in a most deplorable state. Had it not been for the articles of food with which we supplied them from our house, it would seem that some of them would have starved.

When the epidemic reached its height, myself and family were all sick, some very unable to leave the house. The neighbors were so sick that they could not get out. There were none well enough to come after medicine or food.—There was nothing to be done but to lie, and cough and groan, and wail, and burn, and writhe. There was no remedy, no help, no physician, no nurse, no medicine, no food. Silence, solitude, desolation reigned. Surely except the Lord had shortened the period of his distress, Waimea and the whole field would have been as the army of Sennacherib when it invaded Juda. School houses and meeting houses were deserted, before they were filled again. When the first attack was disappearing, and the people were rejoicing in the privilege of crawling out of their houses once more, and of breathing again the pure atmosphere of heaven, their joy was suddenly turned into sadness by being obliged to yield to another attack of the same disease, which proved more severe in some cases than the first, though in many instances it was lighter. After they had recovered from this, a few were visited by a third attack. The epidemic was not fatal, except in a few cases. One individual, if I recollect aright, died, and there was no one in or near the house able to attend the burial. The corpse remained to or three days till some friends, coming providentially from a distance, performed this office. In some places however, the mortality was much greater. From this and other causes there have been two hundred & forty one deaths in my field the past year, while the number of births has been only sixty-one.

Miscellaneous.

THE WALDENSES.

A Christian mind always takes great delight in studying the providence of God in reference to his church. But a great part of ecclesiastical history, so called, is occupied in tracing the synagogue and church of Satan. Ecclesiastical history, for more than a thousand years, is almost solely occupied with the pranks and antics of the man of sin, the son of perdition; while the history of the church of Christ is written in fire and blood, at the stake and with the sword, or lies open only to the eye of the Great Shepherd of Israel, who has followed his little flock on mountains, in deserts, in wildernesses, in dens and caves of the earth, in sheep skins and goat skins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented. It is not in the path of Popes, archbishops, and lordly, luxurious, persecuting councils, that you follow the footsteps of the flock, though you may often trace them by the marks of Rome's excommunicating thunder, scathing, scarring and blasting.

It is one of the most astonishing things in the world, that directly at the doors of the Romish court, beneath the reverberating thunders of the Vatican, there has always existed an unconquered community of Protestant Christians. They are dwellers of the alps; the light of the gospel has never gone out amongst them; and from time immemorial the inhabitants of one of their valleys have borne on their coat of arms the emblem of a torch surrounded with darkness, with the Latin inscription, Lux lucet in tenebris, the light shineth in darkness. The name of the valley itself, Lucerne, originated from this fact. This people are the Waldenses.

This appellation of Waldenses is taken from their locality in the valleys, and signifies valleymen, from the Latin vallis, or the Italian valli, whence the word Valenses in Latin, and Vallesi or Valdesi in Italian, inhabitants of the valleys. The Vaudois in French signifies the same thing, and this is the term by which the Waldenses signify their own church, the church of the Vaudois, a name entirely distinct from that of the Canton de Vaud in Switzerland. The old historian Leger, the learned Beza, Bemard of Fontecaud, Ebrardus de Bethune, Faber, Gilly, Henderson, and others, have demonstrated this to be the origin of the name, and not Waldo, as has sometimes, by a great mistake, been asserted. Ebrardus de Bethune, who wrote against the Waldenses, says that they call themselves Vallenses, because they dwell in the valley of tears. Bemard said that they were called Valdenses, from a deep valley, (a valle densa) because of the dense errors in which they were involved. Leger, Beba, and others, have derived the name of Waldo himself, or Valdo, from the Waldenses, as given him, because he received his own doctrines from them. The term Waldenses is now used exclusively of the inhabitants of the valleys of Piedmont. Faber, in his admirable work on the ancient Vallenses and Albegenses, restricts himself to the term Vallenses.

This region is one of great magnificence and beauty. It comprehends on the summits of its mountains some of the grandest points of landscape scenery in all Europe. There is almost endless variety in the scenery. You enter gradually from the lovely plains of Turin into the mountainous region, the face of nature becoming constantly more wild and picturesque, until you are encircled and shut in from the world by eternal barriers, verdant at their base, but rock-ribbed and ancient as the sun. Here the forms of nature have a solemn and awe-stricking grandeur, which makes an element of powerful discipline to a susceptible mind. There is indeed a mingling of every quality of beauty and majesty in this scenery, so that if you thought to select a place in which to train up a people worthy of Jehovah, and faithful to their God, of all regions in the world you would choose these mighty Alpine solitudes. The soul is sometimes filled with ecstasy at the exquisite beauty of the scene, and then again as you advance up the valley, you enter, perhaps suddenly, upon a region of such awful wilderness and desolation, that nothing can be more impressive than the contrast. Then, as you rise at the head of the valley, to cross the vast mountain ridge by which it is bounded, and which generally takes its name from the lofty summit nearest the pass, at every step your prospect is enlarging, while immediately around you the crags are piled in more fantastic and awful forms, outjutting and tremendous precipices, jagged granite needles shooting inaccessibly to heaven, cavernous masses of rock torn and split asunder to form a passage for the roaring torent, which sometimes they bridge quite over at a giddy height.—Above you are the tops of the snow-shining mountains, glittering in the regions of eternal ice.—When you reach the summit of the pass, and the highest point of vision, oftentimes the view is so vast and splendid, especially of those majestic pyramids of ice and snow, that it is with the greatest difficulty you tear yourself from it, and commence your descent into another valley on the otherside. As you go down, the succession of contrast is in the reverse order; from sublimity to beauty, from savage wildness to a softness and luxuriance that quite captivates the heart with its loveliness. These various attractive features the valleys of the Waldenses do not possess on so vast a scale as the more northern and loftiest Alps, as Mount Blanc with the valley of Lauterbrunner, but yet they enclose some of the most charming and some of the grandest scenery in the world. The tourist might spend his summer on the Cottian Alps alone, and meet continually with unexplored forms and recesses of beauty.

There is no denying or doubting the elevating influence of such scenery upon the mind. Nor is it difficult to tell why a mountainous region is most favorable to nourish great thoughts and free and resolute souls. From their youth upward, the inhabitants are familiarized to dangers and hardships. Industry becomes a habit and a trait of nature. Simplicity and frugality of life are virtues of families which the climate and the soil impose upon them.—They are early risers. They are nearer the cloudless heavens than the people of the plains, they breathe a purer and more bracing air, and physically their development is more energetic and complete.—They are above the world, much shut out from intercourse with it, not in bondage to fashion or the ambition of cities. Their religious views take possession of the mind and heart with a more tenacious attachment, and there is a grave steadfastness of purpose in their adherence to what takes their convictions, which is like the rugged walls of rock around them. And though a degree of cultivation of taste and imagination is needed for the preservation of a deep sensibility to the beauties and sublimities of natural scenery, yet those grand and commanding forms of nature which encircle the body, and form as it were the walls of its abode, do always more or less cast their shade upon the soul, are reflected in its silent depths, and make it thoughtful. Standing amidst the awful forms of great mountains, they seem to speak to you as with the voice of God, they gaze at you with a solemn expression, a countenance of mingled rebuke and pity towards the fallen inhabitants of such a glorious world.—Dr. Cheever.

A Pleasant Parlor Inmate.—Miss Fuller, in her last letter communicated from Europe to the columns of the New York Tribune, mentions having become acquainted with Dr. Southwood Smith, the well known philanthropist.

"On visiting him," says the Lady, "we saw an object which I had often heard of, and had thought would be revolting, but found, on the contrary, an agreeable sight; this is the skeleton of Jeremy Bentham. It was at Bentham's request that the skeleton, dressed in the same dress that he habitually wore, stuffed out to an exact resemblance of life, and with a portrait mask in wax, the best I ever saw, sits there an assistant to Dr. Smith in the entertainment of his guests and companion of his studies. The figure leans a little forward, resting the hands on a stout stick which Bentham always carried, and had named 'Dapple.' The attitude is quite easy: the expression of the whole, mild and winning.

"It is well known that Bentham, in order to oppose in the most convincing manner the prejudice against dissection of the human subject, willed his body to the surgeons, and in a codicil, subsequently written, made a final bequest of his skeleton, to his friend, Dr. Smith.

It is a solemn remark of Masillon, that "God sometimes in saving men, makes use of instruments which he afterwards casts away." A thought that we may well call to mind, 1 Cor. i. 27, with deep and serious application.

Two new Presbyterian churches are to be built the ensuing season in Syracuse.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Morgantown Circuit, March 19th, 1847.

Br. Bassett: Dear Sir, I take this opportunity of informing the President, Br. Brown, and friends, the result of our protracted meeting of nearly 3 weeks continuance in this place. Here the church was weak, but the "faithful few," manifesting an ardent desire for our Zion's prosperity, as well as attachment to our mutual rights as defined in Methodist Protestant Book of Discipline, being importunate at the throne of grace for an outpouring of God's Spirit—that blessed promise was fulfilled ("where two or three are met together in my name, there am I &c." And whatsoever ye shall ask the "Father in my name I will do it.") The altar was crowded with weeping penitents day and night; for two weeks the cry was for mercy, for pardon and salvation. The church prayed—the whole were encouraged—the Ministerial Brethren, like good fellows, got on the harness, viz, Br. Clawson, Br. Laishley, and Br. Helmick, and all did really good service. May the good Lord bless them for their labor of love. Conviction followed conviction, and conversion day & night followed conversion. The cloud of the Lord burst in blessings, and the shouts of "Glory to God," I will praise thee &c., were heard from scores of new born souls into the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is due for me to state in reference to the Methodist Episcopal friends of Morgantown, in the commencement of our revival, their Minister, Br. Dunlap, preached for us, and the officiary did us good service around the altar. It did seem as if with all—the salvation of souls lay near every heart—the revival is going on for the last week in the Old Church.

They have commenced (before we closed) a glorious work; we have prayed and still are praying that every church in town and country may catch the hallowed fire, until every heart is made the abode of the Holy Ghost. We felt it necessary, as well our duty during the meeting to open the door of the church for members who were willing to go with us and come from principle, and we thank God that 74 gave us their names on probation. Nearly all professed to obtain the witness of the Spirit. As well as I could ascertain, of conversions, in all about 85 or 90 persons during the process of the meeting. The Methodist Protestant Church in Morgantown is in a prosperous condition; sweet union and love bind each other together and if faithful to God and to each other, this is but as the rising Sun until its meridian glory. On this little circuit the Lord has been very good unto us during this conference year. We have received in all 110 members. Ye lovers of the Saviour, we need your remembrance at the throne of grace, that we all may live humble, walk faithful, and at last dwell with Jesus. Amen.

Respectfully yours &c.,

NOBLE GILLESPIE.

P.S. If Br. Brown could make it convenient, a visit from him would be very desirable in Morgantown. N. G.

Tyler Circuit, Va., March 16, 1847.

Br. Bassett: After remaining silent so long, we desire to inform the brethren of the Pittsburgh conference, and the readers of your excellent paper generally, that notwithstanding, we commenced our labors here, under many discouragements, and have encountered a diversity of difficulties since, we have not yet relinquished our hope of success, grounded our arms and retreated from the combat with affright. We still maintain our ground, looking for strength to the Great Head of the church, the Lord of hosts, who leadeth the armies of Israel from conquering unto conquest, hoping and praying that we may yet before the next Annual Conference have many laurels, (converts) to grace our victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ. We as a part of the church, have been in a great measure overshadowed by a dark cloud, all the time, saving an occasional fructifying beam that has glimmered around, foretelling, we fondly hope, a period not far distant, when we who are sitting as it were in darkness, shall see a great light, which will shine away all darkness, and illuminate our souls. Then this wilderness and these solitary place shall be glad, and this desert shall blossom as the rose.

Then our faith will be strong, our lives useful, and our fruit, holiness to the Lord. May Heaven's King give us prosperity. We held our first quarterly meeting shortly after the rise of conference, at Garret's school house, where we have but a few members, consequently not much help and no increase to the church, the good that was done, (if any) is known to God. Our first protracted meeting was held, on Indian creek; it commenced, on Saturday after Christmas, and continued about nine days.

Here the Lord was pleased to meet with us in a signal manner; the class where religion was almost extinct, was greatly revived, about fifteen souls, were delivered from condemnation and felt the power and influence of regenerating grace, and ten united with us in church fellowship. May the Lord keep them faithful, and make them ornaments to his cause. Our second quarterly meeting was held on Sugar Creek in January, where the society is small; here we labored under embarrassments and had no accessions; we left the result with the Lord. We held our second protracted meeting at Clay Point, on the 6, 7, and 8 inst. Here the prowling wolf of hell had been scattering and devouring the flock for a year, the visible result of our meeting was a considerable move among the members, and four volunteers. We pray that the church may live and prosper at Clay Point; we still intend through grace to look, labor, and pray for better days, and the success of the church here. May God give us peace, happiness and Heaven, and we desire no more. Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus, throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Buford Circuit, March 20, 1847.

Br. Bassett: I have no doubt, there is great anxiety in the minds of the brethren, of the Ohio District, to hear something from the Buford Circuit: I therefore (by your permission) will give them, through your excellent paper, some information in reference thereto. Wishing as I did to take a transfer from the Tennessee to the Ohio District, I arrived in Hamilton county sometime in November, and was happy in meeting with so favorable an opportunity of forming an acquaintance with so many of the brethren. It gave me great pleasure indeed to meet with so cordial a reception, by strange brethren in a strange land.

Through the persuasion of brothers Young and Fowler, I consented to fill the appointment on this circuit for a time at least.

I have now closed my third round—held the second quarterly meeting last Saturday and Sabbath. Having learned before entering upon this work, that the circuit had been thrown into confusion! I set to work with the determination (if possible) to ascertain, the real condition of our church; in point of members, morals and Religion. The result of my examination, in way of No's. has been, that I find 140 members who seem steady in their purpose—the most of whom I have seen, either in class or at their homes; and on examining them, I find them, firmly adhering to the M. P. Church.

The Buford class was formerly composed of some 32 members, eleven of whom seceded and went with the new organization; 10 organised themselves into a class at Br. Hopkins, some two miles from town, and are now doing well.

The other eleven stand dis-organised, some of whom I learn, wish to remain with us—but as yet I have not had the opportunity of seeing them, but intend to do so, The Lord willing we wish to re-organise at Buford.

One has left us & Reaves and gone to the new organization, and one at Liberty; and so far as I have been able to learn (by special examination) there have no more left that belonged at the time of your last Annual Conference. Some two or three small classes (as I learn) were thrown out by the Preacher last year.—What they will do, I cannot now say, as I have not visited them. In point of morals and Religion, their morals are good, but their religious feelings are much sunken. 'Fire-Brands' had been thrown among them, some were discouraged, others almost in dispair. They were threatened with dissolution, "Divide the fold" and then the enemy enters, with, "Hellish malice full, to scatter, tear, and slay!!" Surely it is true, that "one sinner destroyeth much good." The Buford meeting house has a debt on it of $320, and is now the property of an individual by Deed: That individual has made a tender of the property to our church if they will pay the debt within six months, or one half of it if they will pay one half of the debt. He will make a Deed. There are two new churches, in contemplation to be built, the ensuing summer; and one other to be moved and refitted up. I name these things to show that it will be impossible on this circuit to save the Buford church as the brethren will all be pressed in building their own houses of worship.

Will the brethren at a distance think of this matter? We want a house of worship, at Buford. The house there is a good brick worth some $500 or more.

We have had some precious meetings at different points during the last quarter. Nine have united with us, in church fellowship—and upon the whole we are inclined to think, that Buford circuit is yet alive—the * * * * * to the contrary not notwithstanding; and is worth a little more than a "snap of the finger," as has been "significantly said; Buford circuit is not worth that."

There are on this circuit a number of firm steady members, of great moral worth: and all that is wanting, to make this a good circuit; and to plant the standard of Methodist Protestantism, here is, a firm, unflinching, persevering ministry. Here are the men that will stand by the minister, if he will stand by them.

Let a union of effort thus be made and the Ark will move above the waters.

I fear the wrong man has been chosen for this work. I am distrustful of my ability to perfrom it. Were it not for the responsibilities, the weight and worth, of immortal spirits, which I feel!—together with the interest which I feel for the prosperity of the Methodist Protestant Church nothing could induce me to forego what I do in making this effort. Think me not egotistic when I thus speak; for I can think of nothing that would give me so much pleasure as to see the Methodist Protestant Church gloriously triumph over all that may oppose. I could say a great deal more, but I fear, I have protracted this communication to too great a length already. Yet I could not have said much less under the circumstances, and in Justice to the circuit.

Pray for us and may the Lord give us a glorious revival on Buford circuit this year.

May he bless those good brethren, strengthen their confidence and establish their goings,

Yours in Christ,

JACOB NUTTY, Supt.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Coshocton, March 23, 1847.

Br. Bassett: In our former communication, we reported up to the Bird Run meeting. The result of which was brought before your readers, by an extract, published from Br. Hamilton's private letter: and which leaves us, at Port Washington; laboring and praying for a revival: with considerable hope of success. We are now prepared to say, that the cloud, which was then seen gathering, continued to increase, and finally did burst; causing a copious blessing, to descend upon the people. Sinners fearing and trembling, were made to bow at the mercy seat; and many there left the burden, and arose ready to exclaim; "Oh Lord, I will praise thee: though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou dost comfort me." Christians of all denominations came up cheerfully, and zealously to the work, and it was truly a time of refreshing, from the presence of the Lord. The meeting continued near two weeks; twenty united with us in church fellowship. The following week we commenced a meeting at the Brick Chapel, on the plains, near A. Furguson's. Here we continued thirteen days, praising God; exhorting and inviting sinners; counselling the enquirer; praying for, and with the mourner, &c. And we assure you that our labor in the Lord was not in vain. Our souls were happy. The church was revived and encouraged. Sinners were converted. And we were all made to rejoice together. Oh may the Lord continue this good work on White Eyes Plains. Nineteen gave their names to the church, during this meeting: making in all 86 received on Coshocton circuit this conference year.

Two days after we closed the meeting on the Plains, we commenced a protracted meeting in Coshocton; where we have now been laboring for five days. And what shall we say as to the probable result? We can only say, by the grace of God, we will do what we can, for the prosperity of Zion here. Oh Lord, revive thy work. Oh Lord, encourage the faithful few. Oh Lord, build again the waste places in Zion. And to thy name be all the glory—Amen.

J. W. CASE,
J. H. HAMILTON.

Salt Creek Ct., March 18, 1847.

Br. Bassett: I wish to send a few lines to your paper, to let the President, Br. Clancy, know how we are getting along in this region of country. In the first place I would inform him that I have taken charge of this circuit till conference, if spared. Jackson being taken from the circuit, and it having been weak before, so much so that Jackson class and some others wished that class to be taken from the circuit, as some said the circuit would die at any rate.

From these considerations the friends were discouraged, and as no preacher had been sent from conference, some thought they would have no preaching this year, and being discouraged, joined the old fellowship.

The brethren on the circuit appointed a Quarterly meeting and sent for me to attend. They concluded to make an effort to have preaching. I consented to serve them this year. I have preached for them since November. Our congregations are in most places good. I have received some into the church, taken up three new appointments, and I can say that there are some excellent members on the circuit that feel resolved through grace to live. I think by the blessing of Providence that this circuit will yet live.

I wish to say to Br. Clancy a few words with regard to the Ohio Furnace region, I still continue to preach for them at the Furnace every three weeks. At the request of some of the friends on the Kentucky side, I paid them a visit and formed a class of 34 members. At the time I visited them on my last round, 12 more had united with them; this class is organized at Belfonte Furnace, Greenup county. I have taken up an appointment at Amanda Furnace, same county. Some of the members of the class at Belfonte live here. I think we will form another class there.

There are some of the members of the class here very useful, and I have no doubt but the class will live. A number of the members that compose the class came from Virginia among whom is brothers Luman and Lock. These brethren are much interested in the prosperity of our cause. Several of the members came from the old church and some from the world.

I intend to preach for these brethren till conference, if you cannot send them a preacher. If I had not consented to serve the friends on Salt Creek circuit, I would give this region all my time. Could a preacher spend all his time here there would no doubt be a circuit formed including the O. Furnace. I have never traveled more to supply these places with preaching, than I have done this winter. The Ohio Furnace is something like 30 miles from me, Belfonte still farther—Salt Creek on the other side still more. I go the whole round in three weeks.

Br. Clancy, have you no preacher that you could get to take this field for a Mission or make it a circuit? There would be better than 50 members, and they would do what they could to sustain a preacher. Let some of our brethren come and spend the summer with them.

If these brethren could raise $300 or even $175 there would be no difficulty in getting a preacher to travel with them for one year. Try and get a preacher to travel with them for one year. Try and get them a preacher, if he should make some sacrifice for one year, some of us have done the same. Surely others much better off, could spend a few months with them.

Yours in the Gospel,

MOSES SCOTT.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO.

THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 1847.

Hymn Books.—We sell Hymn Books to the preachers at the rate of $5 per dozen, after paying heavy charges for their transportation from Baltimore. As we do not get them on credit, brethren will please pay for them on the receipt of the books. Disciplines, ditto. Melodeons, not come yet.

☞Obituaries and an epistle by Br. Reeves, not in time for this number, shall appear next week.

Middle of the Volume.—This number completes the half of volume 8. Besides a few who have requested discontinuance with the expiration of their time, we expect to discontinue a considerable number of delinquents, until they pay up. When they do this, we will be pleased to enter their names again. And there are some others, with whom we will wait yet a little while, in hope of some favorable word.

Secession not the way to get rid of Slavery.

We make no compromise with Slavery. We neither justify nor excuse it. But we rather hate and oppose it, because we know that God hateth iniquity and oppression, and calls upon all who fear him to hate them too. We have anxiously labored and hoped for the extirpation of slavery from the Church, though we have never felt it our duty to deal in fire-brands and abuse. We shall still labor and still hope to see this accomplished. We shall still firmly demand, in the name of humanity and religion,—"Take these things hence." We here take our stand, and shall still urge our unyielding claim, until we are successful. But perseverance and patience will be required. And we have never felt it our duty to withdraw and multiply divisions, because we cannot at once see the church set right upon this subject. We do not feel called upon, as a branch of the church, to relinquish all that we have accomplished in sixteen or eighteen years of labor and sacrifice, whilst our system in the main, suits us so well, as scriptural and republican, knowing as we do, that it is susceptible of further amendment. Some individuals who have thought it their duty to secede on account of slavery, still have our respect, our confidence, and our love. Yetwith our present convictions, we would do wrongto follow their example. No.—Secession is not the way to get rid of slavery.

In a recent number of the Oberlin Evangelist, (which, by the by, is a most decided and uncompromising Anti-Slavery paper,) we read a sermon, in which the minister, (Rev. Mr. Chamberlain,) gives some forcible hints and cautions against secession as a remedy for slavery. Below we give an extract from the sermon, and commend it to the attention of Brs. Smith of Michigan, and Burton of Indiana, with other such good brethren whose minds are in difficulty. The discourse is addressed to ministers, from the passage, "Put them in remembrance of these things," &c.

"Remind them that the Church is Christ's house, and that it is not their duty to leave it unless it is incurably corrupt. It cannot be duty to leave it, simply because it is imperfect, or because sins and abominations are found there. Duty is plain. When the Temple of Old was polluted and profaned,—when the "House of Prayer" was becoming a "den of thieves," our Savior did not say, I'll have no more to do with your temple-service, I seperate myself from you. He took a scourge—went into that Temple and drove out the offenders, and with the imperative voice of the Son of God, said, "Take these things hence."

"Thus should we. Christ has left us the scourge of small chords, and bids us use it, and if we find persons in the temple not trading in doves and oxen, but trafficking in the bodies and souls of men, duty is plain; if requests and petitions are not properly regarded, there is dignity and authority in the church of God, and it is quite time that we demand, in the name of humanity and religion, "Take these things hence;" make a stand here, and continue to urge the claims of God and man, till we succeed. There is some flesh in man's obdurate heart. By light and love, we can move the hearts of the people; we have not yet done all our duty. But much has been done, and with your help and God's blessing, we shall soon increase that generous sympathy for the slave and hatred of oppression, so that it can no longer be tolerated in Christendom. With patience, with mildness, with firmness, and perseverance, we shall succeed; but to withdraw and scatter is to defeat the object. Besides, how base to become discouraged and leave, when now we have come to the very Thermopylæ of this contest.

"Slavery is an intruder; it has no welcome in the Church. Dear brethren, the church is not a mere voluntary association that we can leave without obligation or responsibility; and to leave it because an enemy is in it, is as if a ruffian has come into your house, unbidden and unwelcomed, and you say to your family, "I shall not live with such a character; I withdraw and leave this house; and so leave your family unprotected! Brave! As church members, we have responsibilities to meet, not only in the matter of Slavery, but in that of war, and in every question of vital interest to man."

Sunday School Books.—We direct attention to the advertisement of the Secretary of the American S. S. Union, in another Column, and inform our friends that the Books generally are kept for sale by Mr. John Metcalf, at his depository in this place.

A Boston Merchant of 1745; or Incidents in the life of James Gibson.—This is the title of a small work recently published in Boston, a copy of which has been sent us by the Author, who is a descendant of Gibson. We have read it, and find its details so remarkable that we take pains to take an abstract of the History for the benefit of our readers. Mr. Gibson was a native of London, of an ancient and honorable family, and a relative of Edward Gibson, Bishop of London, the eminent Antiquarian. When young, he held a commission in the royal army, which was ordered to the island of Barbadoes. Here he married a young and wealthy widow. By this connection he attained possessions in the island of Jamacia. He subsequently retired from the army, and remained some time in the West Indies, but having heard interesting accounts of the new Colonies, he was induced to visit them, and being pleased with New England, he brought his family and wealth to Boston, where he settled permanently, and became an extensive trader between that place and Barbadoes and Jamacia. This was many years before the Revolution. He was respected as a citizen, and was the friend and confident of Gov. Shirley. He had but one child, a daughter.

In 1744, war was declared between France and Great Britain. This was in the reign of George II. The news reached Cape Breton, three weeks before it reached Boston. This gave the French an opportunity of making incursions into the neighboring provinces. Their attacks awakened the English Colonies to their danger, and they resolved upon attempting the conquest of Louisburg. Mr. Gibson, seeing the difficulty of raising volunteers, not only volunteered himself, but hired a company of 300 men, whose wages he paid from his own purse. The result of that enterprise is well known in history. The little book before us, contains a Journal of that siege, by Mr. Gibson, which though afterwards published in London, and a copy presented to King George, was never before published in this country.

After the siege, Mr. Gibson returned to Boston and again engaged in business, making occasional trips, to the West Indies. On his last visit he had some collision with a person who had occasioned him heavy losses. On the day he was to sail for Boston, that person came forward, confessed he had done him injustice, promised satisfactory adjustments, and invited him to dine with him. The forgiving Gibson accepted the invitation. He dined—and immediately after set sail. In three hours he was taken violently ill, and died in great agony. Suspicions were instantly entertained that he was poisoned. His widow soon after died of grief, and her daughter was left at the age of fourteen, without a relation in Massachusetts. Her guardian placed her in the family of Mr. Niles, a clergyman of Braintree, and left funds for her education. After he had thus disposed of the young orphan, he managed to defraud her of her estate. After her marriage, her husband, Mr. Nehemiah Blanchard, made great exertions to obtain a portion of the property.

Butler, the wicked guardian, seemed to be followed by the judgments of Heaven. He was thrown into prison, and whilst there, conscience-stricken, he sent for Mrs. B. confessed he had wronged her, and delivered to her papers relating to her father's property; some of which was in lands in Maine. These papers are still extant, also a costly gilt portrait of Mr. Gibson. Mr. Blanchard subsequently went to Maine, to look after the claims of Mrs. B. but was drowned in attempting to cross the Kennebeck river upon the ice. The widow was now disheartened, and never made further exertions to recover any part of her father's estate. She had three daughters, one of whom was the mother of the author of the present publication. Mrs. B. was subsequently married to a Mr. Carter, and lived to the advanced age of 88. A son-in-law of hers, now living in Vermont, affirms that in 1790, he saw on the leaf of a Magazine which was sent to Mrs. Blanchard, an advertisement, authorised by the British Parliament, stating that if there were any heirs of James Gibson, Esq., in the United States, the British Government had money for them, awaiting their pleasure. The same gentleman commenced preparations to go to England and endeavor to recover the rightful dues of James Gibson but for want of means, gave it up, and it has been suffered to lie dormant ever since.

Pocket Picked.—One of the Ministers of the Methodist Protestant Church on his return from the late Conference at Easton, stepped into an auction store in Baltimore where some thief stole from his pocket, his pocket book, credentials and other papers.—Col. Fount.

Revival in Ireland.—It is an interesting and important fact, that a gracious Providence is overruling the present distressing visitation in Ireland, to the good of its afflicted people. Surely, "happy are they whom God correcteth. For he maketh sore and bindeth up; he woundeth, and his hands make whole." We have just read an interesting paper from the London Christian Observer, touching the religious state of Ireland. A statement is given by one who has lately returned from an extensive tour in that island, that "The feeling among the population is very strong, that the famine is the judgement of God for the sins of priests and people," He shows also that good has resulted from the labors of the Irish Society, teaching the people to read the word of God in their native language, and sending forth readers of the scriptures in their own tongue. It is said that in this period of calamity, the people acknowledge the power of God speaking in it, and are more than ever prepared to welcome with deep interest the tidings of the gospel of Christ. The writer in the Observer states upon the best of authority, that amidst all the difficulties of Ireland, there has been a great revival of true religion, especially in the established church. He quotes from the last charge of the Bishop of Cashel, and refers to the testimony of Doctors Chalmers and Cooke, that a revival has taken place in the Irish church, not attributable to any great human instrumentality, but to the influence of God's free Spirit. "It is the Lord's doing—marvellous in our eyes." Though much of evil still exists, it is said that as a body, the Irish church appears in a state of energy and effectiveness, such as it never presented at any former period. Though it may be said that these statements have reference to certain districts only, and not to Roman Catholic Ireland, yet we are assured that the districts referred to, are numerous and extensive. And we have reason to rejoice that God is turning an afflictive dispensation to a merciful one. Though the chastisement be 'grievous, yet it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness, to them that are exercised thereby.' "When thy judgements are in the earth, the inhabitants will learn righteousness.

Progress of Boston.—The Olive Branch informs us that notwithstanding the great improvements which have been effected of late years, still the city of Boston is not near finished, and he has "given up all hope of living to see it completed." He says they are still going on, building eight or ten hundred beautiful houses and stores every year. And when they have not land enough, they find it quite easy to make more! We reckon it must take Yankees to do that. And if we did not claim to be of that nation, we would ask for information in reference to the process of making land, for our contemporary tells us that Boston is already more than half made land! Now in the West, we have land a plenty, and folks here, instead of attempting to make more land, direct their attention to making money. But this western country is filling up so rapidly, we think that in places, it improves as fast as Boston, and we may, by and by, know the want of land. So we would like to know how you Bostonians find it so easy to make land. Since we left the country of the Pilgrim Fathers, 30 odd years ago, them Yankees are up to more tricks than they used to be. Now we are suspicious that notwithstanding their professed opposition to the acquiring new territory by force of arms, they are infringing upon the rightful dominions of old Neptune. We trust they will not take a notion to carry that venerable Bunker Hill into the midst of the sea to make land. Will the Olive Branch, or our New England correspondent, if he please, enlighten us western folks somewhat upon this subject?

Columbian Magazine.—The April number of this work is received, and is as usual, a very fine production. The engravings, three in number, are exceedingly interesting, The procession to the Christening, a scene near Rome, View of New York, from Weehawken, and the Paris Fashions. The contents of the number are entirely original, and the conributors are chiefly ladies of popular talents. Messrs. Inman and West are Editors of the Columbian. Israel Post, Publisher, New York. Three dollars per year. Two copies for $5.

Dr. Judson, in Burmah again.—The N. Y. Commercial Advertiser announces the safe arrival of Dr. and Mrs. Judson, at their destination in Burmah, after a passage of one hundred and thirty nine days. Mrs. Judson found the cold air of the sea uncongenial, but it was believed that the tropical climate of Burmah, would be favorable to her health. The Dr. under date of Dec. 15, stated that he was preparing to resume his missionary operation.

The German Reformers.—We have seen a a letter of Johannes Czerski, addressed to the Editor of the 'Evangelical Christendom,' a new Magazine, published in London, as the organ of the Evangelical Alliance. Czerski seems firm in the faith, and zealous for the advancement of reform. He alludes to Ronge, who had been carried away at first, as it was feared, by Rationalism, but has now, it is believed, discovered his error, acknowledging that Christ is all in all for mankind. This intelligence will be gratifying to the friends of true religion.

Postage.—We have many thoughtful, and some thoughtless folks among our correspondents. One good brother makes amends for forgetfulness, by enclosing the change in a paid letter next time. Another writes an apology for past forgetfulness, and then leaves us to pay postage upon his apology. A preacher in a distant Conference writes us three times within a few weeks, sending us two or three subscribers but no money, and taxes us 10 cents each time. Unless he will now make amends by a diligent agency in collecting money as well as names, we shall consider his an expensive correspondence. Most other publishers would not take his letters from the post office. If all our hundreds and thousands of writers served us in this way, it would break us up. But after all, we cheerfully pay postage when brethren send funds enclosed.

Religous Intelligence.—This department of our paper, contains this week encouraging accounts of revivals in a number of places.

Death of two Ministers at Pittsburgh.—The Rev. Dr. Black, Pastor of the 5th Presbyterian Church, (N. S.) departed this life on the 13th Feb. last. Rev. G. Gensen, Pastor of the First German Lutheran Church, in the same city, likewise lately deceased. They are both spoken of as excellent men and able ministers.

The American Pulpit.—We had missed this useful publication from our table for three months past. But the numbers for February and March have just reached us, and they could no where else have found a more hearty welcome. The Pulpit embodies many of the ablest original sermons of the day, by living ministers, of the various evangelical denominations. It is not devoted to the interests of any particular denomination, but aims to stimulate the church generally to her appropriate work of evangelizing the world, and to urge the unconverted to an immediate surrender of their hearts to God. When we get a little slack of communications, we design to place before our readers an occasional sermon from the Pulpit. It is a very neat monthly publication, at One Dollar per year in advance. Edited by Rev. R. S. Rust. Address Samuel Chism, Publisher, Worcester, Massachusetts. We should deem it a favor to be furnished with the January number.

The Illustrated Sun.—The April number of this elegant Monthly has reached us, and is not less handsome and interesting than its predecessors. The number contains upwards of thirty engravings. Amongst the most interesting of these are, two Panoramic views of New York, view of the City of Mexico, Mexican Scenery, The Central Sun & Sidereal Universe. The Atmospheric Railway. The 'Illustrated' is one of the cheapest of Monthlies, its subscription price one dollar a year in advance, and subject only to newspaper postage. Address, M. Y. Beach & Sons, New York.

FRUIT TREES.

Respected Friend: Please give notice in your paper that "Apple trees, of most of the varieties in our calalogue, can be had at our nursery, and every size, from small to large, and very large, uninjured by the locusts, at $7,50 per hundred and pears, peaches, plumbs and cherries at fair prices."

Or if you or any responsible neighbors wishes to purchase, they can be had at $70 per 1000. The trees are good. E. NICHOLS.

☞The above note was sent us by Mr. Eli Nichols; his nursery is at Loydsville, on the National Road, sixteen miles this side of Wheeling. Insert and oblige, C. SPRINGER.

March 24th, 1847.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Mr. Bassett; I see in your paper of March 25, an article signed S. Brown, denying what Mr. Smallwood has said respecting the session of the Presbyterian Church, generally doing their business with closed doors, and more especially what was said by a "Son of Temperance" in reply to "some friendly criticisms by a person who holds a ready pen."

As I wish to be very brief I will merely say that the writer of the article was one of the individuals who was invited forthwith to leave the house, not being one of the inducted. There can be no mistake about this, it was not done in a corner, but by the Presbytery in full council, Mr. Culbertson himself being present. It was announced from the chair that some private business was to be transacted and the house must be cleared of spectators. This took place in Zanesville in the old church about 15 years ago. As to the session of the church—Mr. B. and myself, are still at issue. To prove that Mr. S. was right in his assertion, I would produce the writings of the great Dr. Miller. In his book of more than three hundred pages in defence of the "Eldership," he clearly maintains, that it is a private tribunal. I will refer the reader to pages 184, 253, 304, 306, &c., and will also challenge Mr. S. Brown to produce a single intelligent person who has during thirty years of Mr. Culbertson's ministry ever attended, or was invited to attend the meetings of the session as a spectator, except the initiated! In looking over Dr. Miller, I find he says: "The high judicatories are open as daylight, none secret but the session." But as he was wrong respecting the Lancaster Presbytery, he might be with regard to the General Assembly. With respect to the persecutions of Presbyterians, I have not ecclesiastical history at hand but wish for the present to have the reader substitute Episcopalian for Presbyterian. The "gentle hints" are under consideration. Whenever S. Brown is disposed to look behind the curtain, he shall have the real man of

A SON OF TEMPERANCE.

Putnam, O., March 29, 1847.

P. S. By what authority Mr. S. Brown represents himself as the "Presbyterian church" I know not. I had supposed that cognoman belonged alone to the General Assembly if to any body. I protest against Mr. B., or any one else's making the session of said church a public tribunal.

Starvation among Mormons.—The Mormons last to leave Nauvoo—a great portion of them being destitute and sickly of the population—are suffering dreadfully on the Pottawatamie lands, Iowa, one hundred and seventy-five miles west of Montrose. Many of them enlisted and have gone to New Mexico, but the rest are starving upon the prairie. A committe has arrived at St. Louis to solicit relief. As these wretched people were driven from comfortable homes by a lawless mob, without the least shadow of right, they have strong claims upon the sympathy of the humane, and we hope they will receive prompt relief. The husbands and brothers of many of the sufferers are now engaged in New Mexico fighting the battles of their country, an instance of patriotism that speaks nobly for their character, considering the bitter persecution and wrong they have endured in every State in which they have lived.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The Steamer Hibernia arrived at Boston, 20th st bringing advices from London, 3d, Liverol, 4th ultimo. The following intelligence of e condition of Europe, by this arrival, is copied om the New York Sun:

ENGLAND.

A crisis in the money markets of France and gland is expected to follow the export of spe to America, which amounted to eighteen illions of dollars from England alone during e four months ending with February. Prince bert has been elected Chancellor of Cambridge niversity, vacated by the death of the Duke of orthumberland, and it is intimated that the onservative part of the Church of England used eir influence against the Prince in the election, ing in favor of the Earl of Powis.

Ireland.

In Ireland, from December to March, nine ndred persons died of hunger, and thousands diseases incident to famine, chiefly in the rth and west. Dead bodies are found on the gh roads and in the ditches, half devoured by gs or vermin; bodies lie unburied for weeks; ople dread to open the closed doors of their ighbor's dwelling, and when the dead are found, y are thrown into pits, uncoffined and unblest; spair has paralyzed the people; de ath is a welme messenger to thousands, and that patient ffering people yield up their lives with calm signation; farms are neglected and small farers sinking to the level of the poorest peasants, selling their horses at five shillings a piece to d the dogs belonging to "noblemen;" and yet, this condition of things, we find that ten millis bushels of grain, the produce of Ireland's t harvest, have been sent to England to pay ats exacted by landlords who will not live on eir Irish estates. Could the starving Irish have s grain, the produce of their own country, there uld be no famine. Yet with this fact before eir eyes, the English newspapers abuse the sh for indolence and want of thrift. It is avowthat Ireland's population must be reduced by e means, and the Irish landlords and statesn of Eng. are accused of having declared that e million of people must perish!" A right-is Providence will yet avenge this fearful ong!! O'Connell is sinking rapidly under a opsical complaint, and depression of spirits. s recovery is doubtful, and so great is the arm of government at the prospect of his death, at a messenger from the Queen calls twice a y to enquire after his health. Poor O'Connell, death will give the Irish war party full sway roughout that unfortunate Kingdom. As to reef measures, the British Govern ment is doing mirably, and will yet, we hope, find means of ablishing a better land system in Ireland. The n of £8,000,000, taken by the Rothschilds and rings, was for the relief of Ireland, and £1-0,000 per month is expended in giving work to poor, supporting the aged and infirm, and viding soup kitchens in the sufferi ng districts. ch of the money, however, goes to the swar ms hungry overseers from England, sent over to perintend its distribution. A system of emiation, managed by government, is proposed, ich O'Connell opposes, as the Island, he says, roperly governed would support twice its popation. The receipts of the Repeal Association ve dwindled down to about nothing.

Scotland.

The North-Britains, with characteristic firmss, have compelled the government and the rchants to furnish necessary supplies of meal reasonable rates. This was accomplished by uccession of well organized outbreaks in the ge towns, in which the women united, threatning the destruction of the store houses and proibiting the export of food to England. The disses in the Highlands is very great, and in me few districts. equal to that in Ireland; but reef is freely extended by the resident landlords. e Free Church system has been brought be-e Parliament, and a committee appointed to quire into facts connected with the exclusion that church from many of the largest estates in otland.

France.

The suspension of specie payments by the nk of France seems inevitable. Food riots in ris have been suppressed, by Government exding relief to the suffering poor. The indendence of the Bey of Tunis has been denied by rance and England, Arrangements are now finitely made for a line of Government steams from New York to Havre; four fine vessels e detailed for this service, which originally cost 000,000 francs. Dumas the novelist, through me ridiculous assumption, has become the butt Parisian society. To revenge himself he allenged M. de Malleville, who returned for swer, that he (de M.) did not consider himself "gentleman," which increased the ridicule on umas.

Miscellaneous.

Food riots have occurred in Switzerland, Belm, Germany, Italy and Austria. The Pope s released the rioters in his dominions. Exsive arrangements are making in Germany, ance, Switzerland and Holland, as well as the itish Islands, for emigration to America. The eat crops in England, Scotland and Ireland looking well. In Ireland they were prepar to plant potatoes cultivated from the seed, ich are not subject to the rot, and the prospect good crops was encouraging. Her Majesty s decided upon a day of fasting, humiliation and ayer throughout the three kingdoms, but no date been named. Mr. Everett, U, S. Commisner to China, has been exceedinly well receivby the authorities, and after arranging the ification of the treaty, had sailed in a sloop-of r to make an excursion in the Chinese seas. e Dutch government praises in high terms the od sense and moderation of Commodore Biddle his intercourse with the Japanese, and admits at while their insulting conduct would have erited severe retaliation, yet an attack on their ts would only have confirmed their obstinate resistance. The Dutch government intends pressing upon the Japanese the policy of throwing open their ports to the commerce of the world and not be beaten into a surrender of the non-intercoarse system. Austria is looking with considerable uneasiness at the progress of liberal principles in Italy, sustained as they are by the Pontificial States. Large detachments of troops are spreading over the country and are approaching Switzerland. Sardinia will unite with the Pope in carrying out his policy and the power of Austria seems to be on the wane. The Circassians attacked the Russian fort of Gega, near the Black Sea, with 4,000 men, and were repulsed. The moment the great Russian railroad is completed to the Black Sea the Cossacks will pour into Circassia in great force. The king of Bavaria is supposed to be insane, having fallen desperately in love with a Spanish dancing girl and on desiring to bestow upon her a title and the domains of the crown, his ministers resigned. The Carlists are making movements against Spain, and the Miguelites against Portugal, and both are receiving direct and indirect aid. General Flores has been informed that he cannot return to Spain, and his movement against the Republic of the Ecusador has been abandoned for the present.

M. D, Israeli has been employed by the Mexican government to bring their case before Parliament for the interference of Great Britain; and M. D, Israeli has been studying the Mexican question closely, and preparing his budget for an important movement.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Letters from Ireland were received yesterday by the Hon. A. H. Mickle, Mayor of New York. acknowledging the receipt of the contributions sent out by him for the Irish poor, being £633, 16 0, which the Protestant Archbishop and the Catholic Archbishop, both of Dublin, to whose order the money was payable, divided equally between the Central Relief Committee for all Ireland and the Relief Association, to be by them distributed where most wanted.—N. Y. Sun.

IRISH RELIEF ASSOCIATION FOR THE DESTITUTE PEASANTRY.—Being a re-organization of the Association formed during the period of Famine in the west of Ireland, in 1831.

OFFICE, 16 UPPER SACKVILLE.,
DUBLIN, March 3, 1847.

SIR—I hasten to inform you that the sum of £216 18 0 has been placed in the hands of this Committee by the Central Relief Association of this City, and stated to be the moiety of a collection at New-York, the other moiety being at their disposal, I am commissioned by the Committee to express to you their grateful acknowledgment for this most liberal contribution, and request that you will convey to the contributers, the lively sense they entertain of their sympathy and benevolence, under circumstances of the most trying and painful nature.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your very obedient servant,
(Signed) C. J. MINELIEN, Hon, Sec.
To the MAYOR of New-York, &c., &c.

I beg to add that the usual official receipt was given to the Central Relief Committee.

MOUNTJOY SQUARE,
DUBLIN, 19th February 1847.

SIR—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 1st of last month, enclosing a bill for £633 16 0, payable to the Most Rev. Richard Whateley, Protestant Archbishop of Dublin, and the Most Rev. Daniel Murray, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin, and to be applied for the relief of the suffering poor of Ireland; the amount of this bill has been divided by those Prelates, between the Central General Relief Committee for all Ireland, and the Irish Relief Association, to be by those benevolent Societies distributed where most wanted throughout the country.

May God vouchsafe to repay with his richest blessings the Christian sympathy which you and your benevolent citizens have evinced for our afflicted Poor.

I have the honor to remain, with much respect Sir, your most ob't humble servant,
†D. MURRAY.

The Hon A. H. Mickle.

GENERAL CENTRAL RELIEF COMMITTEE,
FOR ALL IRELAND, 36 College Green,
Dublin, 1st March, 1847.

Right Worshipful Sir:

As Secretary to the General Central Relief Committe, for all Ireland, I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter handed to me per His Grace, the Lord Archbishop Murray, containing a bill for £170 10 0 at 60 days sight.

Permit me to inform you that pestilence, the natural consequence of famine, is desolating the Land, and the Coroners are physically unable to attend the inquests.

The Committee have directed me specially to tender to you and other benevolent subscribers to the fund, in New-York, their warmest acknowledgement for the noble exertions you are making to alleviate the distress of our starving peasantry, and enclose you some of our forms, in order that you may understand the manner in which this Committee transact their, indeed, very onerous duties. I have the honor to be, Right Worshipful Sir, Your ob't servant,

THOMAS L. SYNNOTT, Sec'y

The right Worshipful A. H. MICKLE,
Mayor of New-York, U. S

SANTA ANNA IN HIS CARRIAGE.—Major Gaines, whose small detachment was captured by the enemy, writes from San Luis Potosi, Feb. 10. "On our route here, we met the renowned Gen. Santa Anna, a large clumsy carriage drawn by eight mules, two behind, two in front and four in the centre. I had a short conference with him, in which, after asking me a few questions concerning our army and generals, and the purpose of my expedition to Incarnation, he gave me assurance of good treatment whilst prisoners, told us we should be sent to the city of Mexico, and he hoped shortly to our own country. His appearance made a favorable impression on our officers and men." We are happy to hear of these evidences of humanity, formerly so rare in our intercourse with the Mexicans. In justice to Santa Anna, however, we freely acknowledge that since the battle of San Jacinto he has exhibited more humanity than other Mexican chieftains. Major Gaines and his party have gone to the city of Mexico—the first to reach the "Halls of the Montezumas."

GAMBLERS.—The authorities of New Orleans are making a clean sweep among the gambling establishments, arresting them all of high and of low degree, without discrimination. Heavy establishments have been broken up. Good.

Sharon Turner, the celebrated English historian, died on the 15th ultimo, aged 79. Also, on the 11th ultimo, Macvey Napier, for 20 years an editor of the Edingburgh Review. Captain Dillon, the celebrated French navigator and discoverer of the remains of La Peyrouse, died a short time ago.

THE NEW POST OFFICE LAW.—In the smoke of so many battles fought within the walls of Congress, the newly amended Post office law slipped through without receiving that attention which its importance demanded. We see it now—and feel that it is imposing shackles on cheap postage. It extends the franking privilege, which is an odious one to the people, and it aims a deadly blow at the circulation of newspapers, which are the source of intelligence. It repeals the free circulation clause of the old law for papers under thirty miles. Free postage gave a great circulation to country papers, and hundreds of new journals have started under it. The prepaid transient newspaper clause is another unjust stopper, and so far from increasing, it will diminish the revenue. We regret that the bill was allowed to pass.—N. Y. Sun.

KIDNAPPING.—Addison Flenn was arrested in Baltimore, on Tuesday, for stealing and offering for sale a negro boy, eight years of age.

Judge Lefferts, for many years President of the Long Island Bank, died at his residence in Bedford, on Monday morning.

The Catholic Almanac for 1847 says, there are in the United States 834 priests, and 812 churches, 72 of which were erected this year; besides 577 stations visited by priests without any commodious place of worship. There are 244 students preparing for the ministry; 24 literary institutions for young men, of which 13 are colleges, 43 female religious institutions, and 66 academies for young ladies.

Meat and Mittens, but no Meeting.

A religious acquaintance who has travelled considerable in the south and south-west, was in our office the other day and related the following circumstances which befel him once while in search of a religious meeting.

He arrived in a flourishing village one day, a little before evening, and having to remain until the next morning, thought he should like to attend a religious meeting. So out he started in search of one. The first man of whom he enquired was a Frenchman. Sir, said he, can you tell me where I can find a religious meeting this evening? Yes, yes, said the polite Frenchman, plenty, plenty just round the corner. I will go and show you. No, said our friend, I can find the place, I will not trouble you farther; but the Frenchman would go and show him. Taking him round the corner he conducted him through a narrow passage into a contracted apartment, which proved to be a meat shop. There sat the man of the knife and cleaver, ready to attend to his customers. Our friend inquired, looking rather wild at what he saw, is there to be a meeting here this evening? No, what sort of a place would this be for a meeting? was the reply, uttered rather sternly and with a little air of surprise. Our friend turned to his guide, who yet stood just behind him, and said, sir, I thought you said there was to be a meeting here. O, said the Frenchman, meeting, meeting, now I understand, I thought it was meat you wanted.

The misunderstanding being explained, our friend continued his enquiry. Can you tell me where there is to be a meeting this evening; this he inquired of his guide. The answer was that he could not. Can you direct me to some one that would go to a religious meeting if there was one? Do you know of any Christians in the place. O yes, Mr.———, on such a street keeps a store, he is a Methodist and he can tell you if there is any meeting.

So away he went to see Mr.———and found him in his store. Sir, said he, can you tell me if there are any meetings in this place? Yes, sir, was the prompt reply, walk this way, and I will show you an assortment. Taking him to the other end of the counter, he began to load it with mittens of different qualities and varieties. Sir, said our friend, it was religious meetings I inquired for. Meeting, meeting, exclaimed the counter-jumper, I thought you inquired for mittens.

The mistake being again explained, a conversation followed in which the merchant admitted that he had been a Methodist before he came into that place, but that he was far from it then, and could give him no satisfactory information about a meeting. This man, however, directed him to another gentleman, whom he said could tell him, if there was any meeting in the place. Taking the direction he soon found an intelligent gentleman, who was a Presbyterian, and who assured him that there was no such thing as a religious meeting in the place. Our friend now returned to his lodgings, reflecting most profoundly upon the circumstance that in a place where meat and mittens were so plenty, there should be no meetings.— True Wesleyan.

We see it stated that Gerrit Smith, Esq., has contributed two thousand dollars to the Irish Relief Fund. This is said to be the largest amount yet contributed by any one individual in the United States.

RELIEF TO IMMIGRATS.—The almshouses, hospitals, cellars, and purlieus of our cities are cowded with poor imigrants from Europe, without the means of procuring a loaf of bread; and our country newspapers are filled with advertisements for laborers. A coal company in this State want three hundred men, for boating coal during the ensuing season; and a railroad company in Alabama will give constant employment to a thousand. We may add that throughout Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin and Iowa, enormous prices are paid for agricultural labor. Indeed in all the free States, and in the white laboring portion of the slave States, at any distance from the cities exceeding two hundred miles, labor of all kinds, especially agricultural, is scarce, and and therefore dear.—Hence the overstock of the cities and the understock of the interior are produced by unequal distribution.

What is the remedy? These coal companies and railroad companies can find laborers enough in the cities. But the laborers are too poor to travel, at their own expense, to the place of employment. Therefore we advise all such companies to send their agents to the cities, with means for transporting laborers, the employers charging the laborers with the expense, to be paid gradually from their wages. The farmers of New Jersey now find an abundant supply of German laborers at the almshouse of New York, paying six dollars monthly to husbands, two dollars and a half monthly to their wives, and feeding and lodging their children gratuitously; and the poor Germans rejoice in such opportunities of getting an honest living. We suggest to the farmers of other States to send their agents to New York, Boston and this city, especially to New York, where most of the imigrants land; for they will find a "few more left of the same sort." And as few farmers are rich enough for such an enterprise singly, we advise any number in a town to combine their efforts, and employ an agent for the company.—Dollar Newspaper.

PHILADELPHIA, March 22—7 P. M.

John McPeck, Machinist, of New Castle, while attempting to get on board the Baltimore railroad cars, as they were turning the curve at Broad and Market streets, this morning, got crushed by the train and died in the Hospital within half an hour.

The Island of Lobos, where General Scott is mustering, is 1.860 yards in circumferance; is of coral formation, and of dense growth of lime, lemon, banian, India rubber trees, vines and some palmetto. It abounds in lizards, scorpions, rats and sand-crabs. The water is brackish.

We are pained to record the death of Mrs. JULIA ANN REESE consort of Rev. LEVI R. REESE, lately appointed Pastor of the the 9th street Methodist Protestant Church of this city. She expired in Baltimore on the evening of the 24th in the full triumphs of the Gospel of Christ. —Columbian Fountain.

Mr. Walker, the Secretary of the Treasury, is confined to his bed, seriously indispose. The immense labor of preparing the Tariff and replying to calls from Congress, it is said has rendered it necessary for the Secretary to write and condense several large volumes of heavy statistic matter matter since his appointment to the Treasury, and with a constitution and physical frame far from being robust.

'This system of Mnemotechny, differing considerably from the one introduced by Prof. Gouraud, is designed to furnish all the rules for aiding the memory without lessening mental culture, which can be made available during a course of elementary study. The illustrations may be easily comprehended by any person of ordinary mental capacity, and the application of the principle upon which the system is based must necessarily furnish an agreeable and useful exercise to the mind. It is well adapted to common school instruction, and may be made a very profitable study, if rightly pursued. Every page of the work gives evidence of a desire to present the laws of association distinctly & clearly, so as to enable the learner to establish such relations between things, events, &c., as will aid the memory. We commend the book to teachers and all interested in this important subject.'—N. Y. Teachers' Advocate.

'The art of improving the memory is surely a very important one, and whoever contributes any thing to further this end, certainly renders an important service to the public. Mr Johnson, we believe, has succeeded in bringing his system of mnemonics into such a practicable form, as will render it an essential aid to all who do not naturally have a great power of memory.'—Ch. Witness

'This is a treatise on artificial memory prepared for the use of schools. The subject is a curious one, and worthy of attention.'—Boston Recorder.

'This system of mnemonics, being the first work of the kind ever prepared for the use of schools, and being so arranged and simplified that any one of ordinary capacities may easily acquire a knowledge of its principles, is certainly worthy of examination and study. It is most emphatically an aid to the memory, and as such, is well adapted to common school instruction. We heartily commend it to public notice, while we hope that Mr. Johnson will receive the reward due to his industry and perseverance by seeing this work extensively introduced into our schools, public and private.'—Tem. Standard.

'The author promises to endow his pupils with an infinite faculty of memory. If he can do it without too much trouble on the part of the recipients, he will do a good thing, and as far as we can judge, he seems likely to accomplish it. While his system is much more simple than any we have before examined, it contains a great deal more. Moreover, it makes the thing a matter of practical education, within the reach of all.'—Chronotype.

'There are minds of a certain class that are wont to be interested in mnemonics, and we doubt not that such may find valuable assistance in a work of this kind.—N. E. Puritan.

'The book, although designed and adapted to the use of schools, is nevertheless worthy the attention of all persons who wish to assist or strengthen memory.'—N. E. Washingtonian.

'A very ingenious and useful book, designed to shorten the labor of those studies which require the exercise of the memory, by a system of memorizing.'—Reading Gazette, Pa.

We feel no hesitation in recommending this work to the deliberate attention of teachers, and the guardians of youth. We learn that it is received into several of the schools in Boston, and used as an auxiliary help to the studies now pursued by the pupils.'—Boston Courier.

'We noticed the first edition of this book a short time since, and in addition to what we then said, will only say now, that it is prepared by one who has paid great attention to the subject, and who has been employed to teach his system by some of our most experienced teachers and wisest men.'—Ch. Register.

'We have given the work a partial examination, sufficient to become convinced that the subject is one of importance.'—Ch. Watchman.

The Memoria Technica is now studied in some of our best schools; and the system taught in it appears to be much approved by those who have made trial of it.'—Evening Traveller.

The work contains a vast amount of important facts and useful information; which, aside from its value as a system of instruction, render it, as has been justly said by many who have examined it, well worth the price of the work aa a mere book of reference. Published by

POETRY.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Shout for the Victor!

Shout, shout for the victor! the prize he has gained,—
A crown of bright glory encircles his brow;
The faith he has kept, and his course well maintained,
And loud are the pæans that welcome him now.

Well did he commence and continue the race,
For the prize as he ran kept always in view,
And blessed with the smiles, the rich treasures of grace,
With triumph he urged his glorious way through.

With patience he ran, looking upward the while,
To the crown and the palm in mansions above,
When Jesus would deign him a beautiful smile,
And gladden his heart with the beams of his love.

No foe could impede the swift race of his soul,
No pleasures allure him from virtue to stray;
But onward he pressed, for the prize at the goal,
And gained a pure wreath that shall never decay.

The contest is won, and his sorrows are fled,— Serene he now dwells in the city of light;
A halo of glory encircles his head,
And joy shall eternally beam on his sight.

No anguish shall ever swell up in his heart,
But songs of the Victor in triumph will sing,—
And live in the regions of glory at rest,
And lay his bright crown at the feet of his King!

Then shout for the Victor, the prize he has gained—
A crown of bright glory encircles his brow,
The faith he has kept, and his course well maintained,
And loud are the pæans that welcome him now.

ELIZA.

BY BROOKOVER.

Oh, there was something in her mind,
So delicate and so refined;
There was a something pure and holy,
Mix'd with an air of melancholy;
Like cypress waving o'er the tomb;
A something pleasing, mix'd with gloom.
Or, like some pale and lonely flower,
Beneath a thick and shady bower;
She was so placid and serene.
So humble and so seldom seen.
Her body was a vessel brittle,
And for her soul it was too little;
It burst its humble house of clay,
And to a world of glory pass'd away.

PAUL PRY vs DIVISION.

MR. EDITOR:—Sir, In my communications to the Recorder on the subject of the geograpical division of the Methodist Episcopal Church, I was afraid I had overrated the loss of the membership in the Northern division of said Church, and I felt if I had done so, it would have been my duty to have offered an apology. I did my best to procure the statistics of the church, and so far as I could get information both from our own periodicals, and from the family of the Advocates, I came to the conclusion to put down the net loss, since the division, to thirty-nine thousand, but fearing perhaps after all my researches, I might be mistaken, I went into a second enquiry, and examination, and find indeed that I owe the Methodist Episcopal Church North an apology, and that instead of the loss being thirty-nine thousand, the true state of the case is, the loss is about fifty two thousand, about forty thousand previous to the winding up of the last conferences and twelve thousand of a loss, last year. Is this the happy results, growing out of a division of the church. Is this the fruits of Abolitionism in the North? or is it the consequences growing out of a church divided on the power of the Bishops? What can it mean? Ought not the Advocates for conventions, divisions, &c., in the M. P. C., stop, and look this matter fairly in the face? Can we, if we pursue the same course, effect a better fate? "Who hath made thee to differ from another" saith the Scripture; like causes, will always produce like effects; if we wish to dwindle down, to the little end of nothing whittled to a point, let us divide, but if we would live and prosper as a church, let us avoid the fate of others, by steering clear of the rocks and quick sands on which others have stranded. I have no doubt, Sir, after discovering the effects produced by the division in the Methodist Episcopal Church, could they now be united as they were before the last General Conference, the Devil might cry slavery as long as he please, but nine-tenths of the ministry would say, united we stand, divided we fall, and were this church like any other church in the land, did it admit of lay representation, and could the voice of its membership be heard, perhaps ninety-nine out of every hundred, would say, united we stand, divided we fall. How astonishing it is that we do not learn from the misfortunes of others; we see plainly before us the bad consequences that have grown out of the separation of the Old Church, a loss of Brotherly love, a loss of ministerial confidence, a loss of spirituality on the subject of religion, a loss of 52,000 members, a loss of all the influence and support of this immense mass of membership, and not a single slave benefitted, no slave holder expelled from the church, no slaves emancipated, no amelioration of the condition of the slave population, and yet a portion of our community wished to rush into the same state of confusion and disorder; and for what? to satisfy (they say) the qualms of a tender conscience. It is right their consciences should be tender, and it is equally right their consciences should be satisfied, (on righteous principles) but we should never "strain at a gnat and swallow a camel" neither should we pay all our attention to the "mote in our brothers eyes and forget that we have a beam in our our eye." Who cannot be satisfied with the judicious arrangements in our excellent constitution and book of discipline, with regard to the admission, government, and right of suffrage, of the colored membership? It is left to each Annual Conference to make its own regulations in these matters, provided they do not come in conflict with the laws of the commonwealth or States. All the privileges of colored persons can be secured and no man is obliged to sanction or fellowship slavery I am no slave holder, I am no apologist for slavery, I am no political abolitionist, I am no ultra, I am no church schismatic or advocate for division, I go for the "leaven we have amongst us, leavening the whole lump," the "salt we have amongst us, seasoning the whole body," the light we have among us illuminating the entire church I go for united church making a united effort to remove far from it, every thing that is morally wrong. I go, Sir, for opposing slavery in the church as well as in the state and I go, Sir, for white men having their rights as well as blacks. I go, Sir, for the white slaves to be liberated. I go against oppression and I go for signing myself. Yours truly,

A FEW QUESTIONS.

1. Slaveholding is a sin or it is not. What ground does the conservative occupy?

2. What claim can the slaveholder properly make to equal or mutual rights?

3 Why should the framers of our Constitution and Discipline bind us under so many "two-thirds" rules, in this republican land?

4. How can our ministers lecture on church government, and boast of Mutual Rights and religious liberty, under these two-third rules?

5. And also, on that saving clause, as some are pleased to call it, of dividing the house on final vote, where one individual over one fourth can prevent any rule or resolution from being passed? We often see and hear it said that the Annual Conference by the constitution is authorized to make their own rules on the subject of slavery.

6. Would A. M'Caine, or some conservative brother, inform me where it stands in the Constitution?

If some conservative friend or Mr. M'Caine would answer these questions satisfactorily, it would be gratifying to my mind, and perhaps to the minds of others, for I feel as though I was under the task masters, not of Egypt, but of the American slave holders, and see no way of release but revolt. Secession an Antidote for Slavery.

MR. EDITOR: There evidently is a restless spirit influencing some of the Ministers and members of the Methodist Protestant Church. Slavery, by a very large majority, is admitted to be a great and crying evil. Some think, or say they think, the church has nothing to do with it. Others think it is the duty of the church to take hold and do something that may facilitate the emancipation of the enslaved. Others, again, are in nettles; all on fire on the subject,—they cannot rest, themselves, nor suffer any one else to rest in the Methodist Protestant Church.

This latter class, I think, is more inconsistent,—does less toward effecting the object (emancipation) than all the rest together. And bad as the principle and practice of slavery is, it is no more detrimental to the best interests of society, than this reckless, restless, disorganising spirit. Let the principle be once received by any association of men, that when any thing is discovered by any member that he believes is wrong, it is his duty to go to work and raise as extensive an excitement as possible, and if the whole body does not come right up to the work of immediately righting the wrong, it is his duty to withdraw, and draw off all he can with him, and form a new association, excluding the monster evil. Then every one in the new society must be on the constant look out for evils, and they must be remedied in the same way. Let this spirit be fully engrafted upon any association of men, and there you will see anarchy raging. And it will continue to rage, till every thing sacred and dear to man, is scattered as with a tornado, to the four winds. There could be no settled order or abiding peace in such a community. For, what might please one would displease another: or, what might please the same individual at one time, would very much displease him at another. Some of our brethren are a sample of this. For years, warmly and zealously attached to the interests of the M. P. Church; now she is pro-slavery; and, as conscientious men, they must leave a church so corrupt. The Lord only knows what new light they may have in a dozen years to come. Now to rend and mangle a branch of the church of Christ to get rid of an evil, is nothing more or less than doing evil that good may come. The Temple of God must be destroyed, to get rid of some unhallowed worshippers, who tread her courts! Men must bruise and trample beneath their feet the church of Jesus, in order to clear their consciences! They must slander and abuse their brethren who think, and feel, and act just as they themselves did a few years since, or their consciences are defiled! Every man must be spoken evil of and held up to public scorn and contempt, who cannot go the length they do in the abolition enterprise! This is piety and devotion to God and His cause, with a vengeance! God of Heaven, save all the churches in the land from such a spirit as this! Oh, teach us, God of love, to be kind, forbearing, courteous, tender-hearted, and forgiving. Give us that charity which suffereth long, and is kind; which envieth not; which vaunteth not itself, and is not puffed up, and doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, and thinketh no evil.

Mr. Editor, I feel like devoting a little part of my time in writing for the Recorder, if you may think my thoughts are worth spreading out on the pages of your paper. I have thought a good deal on the vexed question of slavery, and the duty of the church and of individuals, on this momentous subject. I am, more fully than ever, convinced that moral suasion is the only agency thro' which the Methodist Protestant Church can be thoroughly purged from the least and last remains of this sin. A thorough and manly investigation of the subject in a christian spirit, and in a courteous and respectful style, will work wonders. Let us then hold up the light to our Southern brethren, and evince by our deportment, that we are not aiming to injure, but to benefit them, and we shall succeed. May our God give us the right spirit! I love the Methodist Protestant Church. My interests are bound up in hers. I do not think she is faultless; but I do think her preferable to any other in the land. Our representative form of government, and liberal and generous constitutional pirnciples, render it possible for any improvements to be made in our economy that may be of vital importance.

Brethren, let us stand fast. Let us press on in the King's highway of holiness. Let us seek for holiness, and follow peace with all men. Come, brethren, let a holy emulation prevail amongst us, to excel in meekness, in humility, in kindness, in love.—Let us each esteem the other better than ourselves. Look not every man on his own, but every man also on the things of others. Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus.

The Juniper Bushes.

In months gone by, some juniper bushes grew where they were not wanted, as such bushes will sometimes do. Consequently, the owner of the land determined on their destruction. So during a very dry time, when vegetation was much withered, and the whole face of the ground had become quite combustible, and at a time, too, when the wind was high, and every thing right for a thorough burning over of the bushy piece, the enemy of the junipers set fire to them, in a place most favorable to secure their entire destruction. But then there were other things exposed to be destroyed by such a fire; things, too, which it was very desirable to have preserved. The flame blazed high and moved on rapidly, and had not several men been passing at the moment, who exerted themselves to put out the fiercely devouring element, a great amount of property would have been consumed by that fire; which with the utmost exertion, was but just kept out of a large forest of timber land.

The man who set fire was closely questioned on the subject. Did you know that the wind was high, that the face of the ground was very combustible, that fire started now and here, would in all probility, reach the forest, and do much damage? No, said the torch applier, I thought of none of these things. Well, said his friend, what was you thinking about then? I thought of nothing, was the answer, but of destroying the juniper bushes. My whole attention and efforts were directed to that single object, and in that I meant to be sure of success.

Now cannot persons be found who resemble very much this juniper destroyer? They see in society as others do, sins, vices, and grievous wrongs. They direct their whole attention to sweeping away these wrongs and sins. So intent are they in destroying what ought to be destroyed, that they think not of the things that ought to be preserved; and consequently are continually endangering the right and the good. But when any of mankind, to reach by a short cut, some evil, trample iron-shod upon the lovely and the valuable—break down good institutions in their zeal to destroy bad ones, and set in motion a train of causes, which, if not stopped, would cover the earth with desolation, and wo, it is time they were met, were closely questioned, and made look at the injury—the consequences. Injury, say they! We are not responsible for consequences. What! for the sake of burning some bushes, consume large forests, and not be responsible for the ruin of property, because it was done in destroying some thing that ought to be destroyed. Let these juniper men remember that they will be held responsible at some tribunal, for the consequence of such conduct. In a course like this, they should think of any thing rather than being considered benefactors of mankind, or of securing thus the approbation of our divine Master, however much they may think of deserving both. The approbation of our blessed Saviour! Has he not taught us at the same time he presents sin as something to be abhorred—to be rooted out of the world, that is better to let the wheat and tares even grow together until harvest, than to pluck up the tares at the expense of destroying the wheat. Matt. 13: 30. H.

Strict Conscientiousness of an Indian.

Kusick, chief of the Tuscaroras, had served under La Fayette, in the army of the Revolution. It was usual for him, in company with a few of his leading men, to visit, once in every two or three years, the State of North Carolina, whence this tribe originally came, to see after some claims they had upon that State. In passing through Washington, the old chief would call at my office, for the purpose of submitting his papers, and of counselling with me. On one of these occasions he made a call before breakfast, at my residence, accompanied by his companions. A neighbor had stepped in to see me; on his way to his office, and our conversation turned to Lady Morgan's France, which had been just then published, and was lying on my table. We spoke of La Fayette. The moment his name was mentioned, Kusick turned quick upon me his fine black eyes and asked with great earnestness,—

"Is he yet alive? The same La Fayette that was in the Revolutionary war?"

"Yes, Kusick," I answered, "he is alive; and he is the same La Fayette who was in that war. That book speaks of him as being not only alive, but looking well and hearty."

He said, with deep emphasis, "I'm glad to hear it."

"Then you knew La Fayette, Kusick?"

"O yes," he answered, "I knew him well; and many a time, in the battle, I threw myself between him and the bullets, for I loved him."

"Were you in commission?"

"O yes," he replied, "I was a lieutenant.—General Washington gave me a commission."

My friend who was the late Joseph Nourse, (at that time Register of the Treasury) and myself agreed to examine the records, and see if the old chief was not entitled to a pension. We (or rather he) did so. All was found to be as Kusick had reported it, when he was put on the pension list.

Some years after, in 1827, when passing through the Tuscarora reserve, on my way to the wilderness, I stopped opposite his log cabin, and walked up to see the old chief. I found him engaged in drying fish. After the usual greeting, I asked if he continued to receive his pension.

"No," said the old chief, "no; Congress passed a law making it necessary for me to swear I cannot live without it. Now here is my log-cabin, and it's my own; here's my patch, where I can raise corn, and beans, and pumpkins; and there's Lake Oneida, where I can catch fish. With these I can make out to live without the pension; and to say I could not, Would be to lie to the Great Spirit!"

Here was principle, and deep piety; and a lesson for many, whose advantages had far exceeded those of this poor Indian. In connection with this, I will add another anecdote, in proof of his veneration for the Deity. He breakfasted with me on the morning to which I have referred; and knowing him to be a teacher of the Christian religion among his people, and an interpreter for those who occasionally preached to them, I requested him to ask a blessing. He did so, and in a manner so impressive, as to make me feel that he was deeply imbued with the proper spirit.—He employed in the ceremony his native Tuscarora. I asked him why, as he spoke very good English, he had asked the blessing in his native tongue? He said, "When I speak English I am often at a loss for a word. When, therefore I do not like to be perplexed or have my mind distracted, to look after a word, I must use my own native language. When I use my own language it is like my breath; I am composed." Kusick died an honest man and a Christian; and though an Indian, has doubtless entered into his rest.

A SPEEDY ACCOUNT.

Among the many evils resulting from the war in which this country is now engaged, not the least, is the occasion it gives for the violation of the commandment, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy;' and many men who have heretofore been accustomed to pay some respect to the Lord's day, have, from the supposed necessity of the case, been induced to spend it in their worldly avocations.

It has been the privilege of the writer, to visit a portion of the shipping in this port every Sabbath morning. to invite those on board to the Bethel; and many have been the instances of late, that he has found all hands as busily employed as on other days. Under these circumstances, an invitation to the Bethel seemed rather out of place, and was sometimes regarded as a reproof, for which an excuse was considered necessary; the usual one being, that they were under contract to government, and obliged to work: as if the requirement of earthly rulers, were superior to the commands of God.

God often leaves men to go on in their transgressions, and delays his judgments; but sometimes he calls them to a speedy account, as in the instances now to be narrated. A few Sabbaths since, the usual invitation was given to the captain of the barque D———who was superintending the labors of his men; and his reply was, "I would like to attend the Bethel, but I cannot, for I have to work all day. I do not like this Sunday work, (he continued) and this is the first time I have done any thing of the kind; but I am under contract to government and I am obliged to do it." What! (was the answer to this) obliged to break the law of God?" "Yes (said he) I am." "Then he will call you to account for it some of these days!" said the captain in a sad tone of voice. He evidently felt the force of the remarks made to him. Little did he or the writer suppose at the time, that the account would have to be rendered so soon. The very next morning that captain fell overboard and was drowned! Suddenly was he called to stand in the presence of Him who said, "Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates."

J. G. B.

It is said of one of the ancient fathers, that he would weep at the applause that was frequently given to his sermons. "Would to God," said he, "they had rather gone away silent and thoughtful!"

I love a serious preacher, who speaks for my sake, and not for his own; who seeks my salvation, and not his own vain-glory.—Fenelon's Letters to the French Academy.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

From the Delaware Republican.

MEMOIR OF REV. EZEKIEL COOPER.

BY REV. DR. J. KENNADAY.

The Rev. Ezekiel Cooper, long known to this community, and a leading minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, deceased on Sunday the 21st February, at the residence of his nephew, Rev. Dr. Cooper, in Philadelphia.

Mr. Cooper was born Feb. 22, 1763, in Caroline County, Md. His father was an officer in the Revolutionary war, and when Ezekiel was about fourteen years of age, Rev. Freeborn Garretson came into that neighborhood and proposed to preach. The soldiers were at that time upon duty; they were drawn up into a hollow square in front of the house, and Garretson preached to them. During that sermon his attention was attracted by the thoughtful aspect of a boy, leaning upon a gate, and apparently absorbed in listening to the discourse. That boy became the distinguished Ezekiel Cooper.

Although previously employed by Bishop Asbury, his name first appeared in the minutes in 1785. Thus it will be seen that he was eighty-four years of age, and sixty-four years a minister; being longer in the ministry than any man now in the communion of that Church in the world.

In 1785 he was appointed to Long Island, having its entire territory for his circuit. In 1786 he travelled East Jersey, when there were but ten Preachers in the whole State, and but twelve hundred members. He lived to see New Jersey an Annual Conference, with one hundred and forty ministers, and over thirty thousand members. In 1787 he was appointed to Trenton; 1788, Baltimore; 1789–00, Annapolis; 1791, Alexandria; '92–93, he was Presiding Elder of Boston District; '94, he was appointed to New York city and Brooklyn; '95–6, Philadelphia; '97–8, he was stationed in Wilmington, Delaware, the Church then numbering 61 members; with this appointment he received that of Chairman of the Book Committee, which committee was to meet in Philadelphia, but was to do no business unless he was present. During the years '99–1800–1–2–3, he was stationed in Philadelphia, as Editor and general book steward.

The Methodist Book Depository being removed to New York, he continued its editor and book Agent several succeeding years, and was stationed in 1804 in New York; 1805–6, Brooklyn; 1807–8, New York; 1809, Wilmington, Delaware; 1810–11, he served as Conference Missionary; 1812, Baltimore. In 1813 he located, and remained in that relation until 1820, when he re-entered the regular work, and was appointed to St. George's, Philadelphia. Soon after this he changed his relation, and was placed upon the supernumerary list, always rendering important service to the church.

Mr. Cooper was a man of superior attainments, having been always a diligent student, and possessing a mind of unusual vigor in its grasp, and great aptitude in its apprehension. His ministrations placed him during the long day of his more active labors among the brightest lights of the American pulpit, and that too, when such men as Doctors Dwight, Mason, Wilson, Staughton, Milledollar, Bedelles and others, were moulding the taste for pulpit oratory, upon principles truly chaste and strong. Amid such lights Cooper stood admitted by public avowal, to be "not a whit behind the chiefest."

The stateliness of his genius in pulpit efforts was not superior to his powers as a debater. Hence, on the floors of the Annual and General Conferences, his name was "Mercurius, because he was the chief speaker."

Mr. Cooper was never married; yet he was ever an affable man, seldom visiting a family without impressing upon the minds of the younger members some new and valuable sentiment. He was a perfect Encyclopediæ, and would deservedly rank with those most remarkable men of our country, Ex-President Adams and Rev. Dr. Nott. He lived to see our country increase from three to twenty millions, the Church of his fellowship rise from eighteen thousand to over a million of members.

Through habits inseparable from a long life of celibacy he became frugal, perhaps to a fault; but the writer has seen him under circumstances evincing that his rigid economy was the result of habit and not of avarice.

Mr. Cooper has left considerable property. Its amount and disposition has not yet transpired. Much of it will doubtless be inherited by his relatives, yet the Church will share in his munificence to some extent. To the poor of St. George's Church of Philadelphia, he will leave $1000; to the worn out preachers of the Philadelphia Conference, $1000; and to the Baltimore, New Jersey and New York Conferences $500 each, for the same purpose.

During his last confinement he was often triumphant in the prospect of heaven, and finished his course in great peace.

Rev. Joshua Wells, of Baltimore Conference, is now the oldest minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, having been 58 years in the ministry.

From the Village Watchman.

MISS MARY JOHNSON

Departed this life, in Waynesburgh, on the 24th ult. after an illness of four weeks.

Sister Johnson had been a professor of religion, but had lost her love for Christ and his cause. I visited her a few times during her last illness, conversed with her freely relative to her prospects for heaven, and willingness to die; her reply to me was, "the Lord's will must be done—I would rather live; you know this is natural." I was present some 2 or 3 hours before her spirit took its upward flight. Her kind physician told her he could do no more for her, and exhorted her to look to a higher source, and prepare for the change that awaited her; it was like an electric shock to all who were present.

We gathered around her bed, and bent our knees in fervent supplication to the Throne of Mercy, and perfumed our prayers with sighs sincere. I am happy to say that she passed not away in gloom: about two hours before her death, a light from afar illumminated her mind; a light from beyond the moon, beyond the sun, the light of truth divine—the glorious hope of resurrection at the promised morn. It was then that she was anxious to depart and be with Christ—she thought the time long—she could clap her dying hands and shout in token of victory over death. A few moments before she breathed her last, she requested those present to raise her up, that she might the sooner leave the world.

Within the house all was dolorous and sad; but the dying eye alone was bright, and brighter grew as nearer death approached. Her dying words were, she would not exchange what she possessed for ten thousand worlds like this.

"A hope in Christ! a star amidst the gloom,
A joy in grief!—an angel on the tomb!
A minstrel, from the circle round the throne,
To sing the pleasures of the world unknown."

This hope MARY possessed; she is gone to the palace of God and the home of angels She is listening to the melting song of dying love, and all the harmony of choirs above, which tells of skies unclouded by a care.

"Hosanna to Jesus on high,
Another has entered her rest;
Another has 'scaped to the sky,
And lodged in Immanuel's breast.
The soul of our sister is gone
To heighten the triumph above;
Exalted to Jesus' throne,
And clasped in the arms of his love."

Happy if, when my toils are over, like MARY, I can raise my dying hand in token of victory through a Redeemer's blood? And when this toil-worn frame shall sink to its last earthly rest, I may remember that my last effort among men was in vindication of that religion which draws the sting of death. And when my weary head shall lie low amid the wild flowers of yonder grave-yard, my future home, I trust, shall be with those who have died in the Lord.

W. S. STOCKTON,—General Agent.

TO persons who are acquainted with the character and objects of the CHRISTIAN WORLD, as they have been developed during the last six years, it is only necessary to say, that as soon as one thousand paying subscribers are secured, the paper will be put to press. The Old Subscription List ought to supply this number at once.

To other persons, it is proper to remark, that the Christian World, in print, is intended to reflect the Christian World, in action—in a word, daguerreotype it: and then, for purposes of common advantage, to compare the organized and operature Religion of the Age with the Religion of the Bible.

The enlarged literary and business agencies of the Establishment, are deemed amply sufficient to assure the public of successful management. Its immediate connexion with the CHRISTIAN ATHENEUM—an Institution which is to be furnished with many of the principal organs of Church and State, both in Europe and America,—will give its conductors early access to invaluable sources of universal intelligence.

DIRECTIONS

1. On receipt of this Prospectus, let the Old subscribers, at every Post-office, appoint one of their number, or some other suitable person, an Agent. Let him send us, at once, as many names and as much money as possible. In cases where substantial agents make themselves responsible fo their subscribers, this responsibility will be regarded as equivalent to payment in advance—provided they settle their accounts within six months. Even in such cases, however, immediate payments are decidedly preferable; and, to encourage them, the commissions to agents are arranged thus:—On cash orders, 25 per cent.: on deferred remittances, 12½ per cent.

2. As the Prospectus will be widely distributed, let all persons who see it, and feel an interest in it, act promptly in the manner described above. It is thought that a little effort will be sufficient to procure a company, or club, at almost any Post-office in the Union. The times increasingly demand just such a publication as is proposed.

Address,—W. S. STOCKTON, General Agent, Philadelphia, Pa.: or either of the Associate Editors. All orders will be punctually attended to.

WELLMAN'S ILLUSTRATED BOTANY.

VOL. II., 1847.

EDITED BY J. D. COMSTOCK, M. D.

BY J. C COMSMOCK, ESQ.

THE success of the Illustrated Botany is no longer an experiment, for altho' it has been in existence but one year, it already has a circulation of about five thousand, a sufficient number to warrant its support, which cannot be said of any other work of the kind. Indeed, it is the only work of this character published in this country, which promises stability and a long life. We think the prospects of the second year of the Botany are very flattering. One reason for this opinion is, the fact that it is now very popular, having a large circle of friends. Another very important reason is, the securing of an Editor for the coming year, whose popularity as an author in the various branches of Natural Science, is so extensive as to leave his name familiar to every student in the sciences in this country. We are fully satisfied that the Botany will, under its present Editors, bear the severest criticism, and we intend that it shall become the standard work.

In the course of its publication, it will contain an Introduction to the Natural System of Botany, a thorough Treatise on the interesting and important branch of Vegetable Physiology, Notices on Fossil Botany, and descriptions, both scientific and popular, of numerous species of plants, the properties of which, medicinal and useful, will be fully explained. In short it is intended to present a complete view of the latest and most important facts, discoveries, and theories, in every department of the science.

The whole illustrated by splendid colored engravings, taken from Nature, full size, and finished the highest style of modern art.

This work is designed to be eminently popular in its application, and there is enough of that which is stranger than fiction about it to render it, in no ordinary degree, interesting and instructive.

We do not intend to confine ourselves to the botanical descriptions of each plant, but to make it a thoroughly scientific work, in all the departments of Botany. It will also give information on the cultivation of plants and flowers. In a word, it will comprise the whole science.

TERMS.

This work will be published monthly, with from six to ten flowers, handsomely painted, in each number. Price, $3,00 a year, or two copies sent to one address for $5,00.

☞ A very liberal discount allowed to Agents.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

OHIO CULTIVTOR,

Vol. III—For 1847.

A semi-monthly Journal, devoted to the promoti of Agriculture, Horticulture & Domestic Industr

PUBLISHED AT COLUMBUS, OHIO,

By M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor,

Assisted by the contributions of a very large number o practical and scientific writers,—farmers, horticulturists, &c.

Illustrated with numerous Engraving

TERMS—One Dollar per year—Four Copies for Three Dollars: payments invariably in advance.

THE OHIO CULTIVATOR has now become so w known to the farmers and friends of agriculture Ohio, that it is unnecessary to say any thing of its char ter or design. Grateful for the encouragement he has far received, the editor and proprietor takes this occasi to inform his friends and patrons, that he is determined put forth new efforts in their service, and make his pap for the coming year still more deserving of their continu liberal patronage. Besides improvement in the matter i its columns, the mechanical appearance of the paper w be improved by the use of new type, and more illustr tions. It will contain the latest and most reliable intel gence respecting the crops and the markets, both in t country, and in Europe, so as to aid the farmer in decidi at what time and price to dispose of his productions. T information alone will be worth, to most farmers, ma times the price of subscription, especially now that pric are so much effected by foreign intelligence. In additi to all this, the editor believes that his increased experien and knowledge of the agricultural condition of the Sta together with his extended correspondence, will enable h to make each succeeding volume of the Cultivator m valuable than the one that preceded it.

The influence of the paper, wherever it has been gene ally read, is admitted to have been highly salutary. has began to awaken a spirit of inquiry and improveme among the farmers, and inspire them with more just a elevated conceptions of the character, duties and pleasur of their noble occupation. As evidence of this it may stated, that during the past year, Agricultural Societ have been organized in twenty counties of this State; there is reason to believe that as many more will be form during the year to come. These associations, in conne tion with the State Board of Agriculture, and the Cultiv tor as an organ for the diffusion of intelligence, can fail to exert such an influence on the minds and the pra tice of the farming community, as will in a few years pla our young Giant State in that position which she is Nature designed to occupy—the first State of the Uni in agricultural wealth and lasting prosperity.

Farmers of Ohio! Who among you are willing to ha no part in this onward march of improvement? Who mong you are willing to deprive yourselves and your fa ilies of that 'knowledge which is power,' and the gre means of progress and elevation, for the sake of the sm pittance which that knowledge may cost? And who you that desire to see this work advance, will not mal an effort to arouse your neighbors from the mental torp that rests upon too many of them? The work is not di ficult—pursuade them to read papers devoted to their i terests—☞ send on their names, with your own, as su scribers to the Ohio Cultivator, and you may rely upon they will soon begin to awake—to inquire and think—a not only become better farmers, but more intelligent a agreeable neighbors.

Address, M. B. BATEHAM,
Columbus, Ohio.

PROSPECTUS

OF THE LITERARY EMPORIUM

A COMPENDIUM OF

Religious, Literary and Philosophical Knowledg

IN the first place, light literature will find no place in i pages, i. e., love tales, literary trash, &c. Secondl sectarianism will not be admitted into the Emporium; o in other words, it will favor no particular sect; but it wi advocate the religion of the Bible in the strongest term and will urge the necessity not only of a change of hear but a virtuous and holy life, in order to be truly happy i this world and to be prepared for that which is to come. In regard to its literary character, it is designed to be such a nature, as to water the thirsty soul that is studiou ly endeavoring to acquire a knowledge of man in his pa and present condition; also some information in relatio to the different sciences and arts, and the variety of th works of nature, with such miscellaneous reading as wi invigorate the faculties of the mind, give scope to the im agination, while it shall address itself to the good sense all who desire to be truly elevated by reading.

Our object in the beginning was to establish a sound li erature, which we deem of much importance to the futu destiny of this country. We bless God that he has smil on our efforts: for although the Emporium has been i existence but two years, and has just entered upon th third, it has already attained a circulation of fifteen thou and, which is unequalled in the history of Magazines. is got up in better style, and contains more reading, an from abler pens, than any other magazine of its price i the United States.

Christian Friend, we hope you will aid us in the exter sive circulation and support of a work, which we thin calculated to enrich the mind, and inspire the soul to th love of virtue and its Divine Author. The very extensiv circulation of light and frothy literature, as it is called, taking by wholesale, the very life blood of the morality an religion of the youth of our country. Is it not time fo Christians to act in this matter?

REMINISCENCES

OF THE FIRST SETTLEMENT OF OHIO.

NO. VII.

Friend Bassett: Amongst the trials of the early settlers, was the driving away, or killing of their cattle; and as the woods was their pasture, the Indians could accomplish this without very great danger to themselves; they were acting on the offensive, and our people on the defensive, so far as the settlements at, and around Marietta were concerned. Almost all the horses, and many of the cattle were carried off or killed. I have mentioned the driving of the cattle from Waterford. Others were driven from Belpre and Newberry; and while a party from Virginia was hunting Indians in this vicinity, they killed a fine ox in the bottom below Putnam, that had been driven away from Newberry, and had belonged to Stephen Guthrie, the father of our neighbor Guthries. The ox had become very fat, and the hide and tallow were taken to Marietta to sell. Mr. Guthrie happened to see, and recognize the hide. He had driven the ox from New England. The man who killed it (one Sprague) called it a Buffalo when first shot.

On one occasion the cows at the Stockade, at Marietta, came running and bellowing from the woods, at an unusual hour, and on examining them an Indian's arrow was found still sticking in the side of one of them. As this revealed the fact, of Indians being in the vicinity, and they knew where the cattle usually ranged, a party went in pursuit. They divided and went into the woods on two different trails, and united about two miles from the fort, in the direction of the mills begun by Shepherd and Sproat on Duck Creek; having come upon the trail of the Indians, they followed it until they came in sight of the house which had been erected there, when they discovered smoke issuing from it; this revealed to them the location the Indians had made; —a part remained in sight of the house, while others made a circuit through the woods to get on the opposite side, where the door was, expecting to secure the whole in the house. Henderson led the moving party, while Hambleton Carr, directed those who were stationed. Before the moving party could make the intended circuit, an Indian came out of the house, and around to the side next the stationary party. Carr could not restain his revenge for the death of his father, & fired and shot him. The Indian fell and the others immediately escaped. Carr ran to the Indian, who was not dead and plunged his knife into his body. The party were provoked at his impetuosity, but there was no remedy then, as the Indians, aware of pursuit, would take good care not to be surprised the second time. They cut off his head, stuck it upon a pole, and thus embellished, brought it to our Stockade. I remember going with my mother to our garden, when hearing the yell of some of the men, we discovered the procession they had formed. (Horrible sight!) The next day they went and brought in the body, for a Dr. McIntosh, who boiled it up to get the bones for a skeleton. When he had done this he could not put it together. The Indians heard of this, and would afterwards say with extreme disgust: "White men boil Indians." Our own ideas of humanity are exceedingly shocked at the practice of the Indians, scalping their victims; I never knew one of our hunters miss the opportunity of doing the same to those they killed. This is the difference between "your bull, and my bull."

On another occasion a party followed some Indians who had done some mischief, over Duck Creek and the little Muskingum, about five or six miles from the fort. The party was pretty strong, and amongst them a few soldiers, and some of the inhabitants not much accustomed to the woods, or Indian warfare; they came where they saw a small smoke curling up through the trees, but the point of a hill hid the fire from them. Henderson, Carr, Niswanger, and other woodsmen, made a circuit, to reach a point that would enable them to see, & surprise the Indians, leaving the soldiers and raw militia where they first saw the smoke. They gained the situation sought; when Henderson crawled a few yards in advance, on his hands and knees, to see how many there were of the enemy. This he had effected, and held up one hand with the fingers spread out, to designate to his comrades the number 5; and they were in the act of advancing to fire, when some of the raw troops they had left, fired a gun, by accident, or wantonly, and the Indians ran; two up a steep bank, close by the fire, and three up a more sloping point. The hunters dashed over the point of the hill they were on, into the hollow, the Indians had occupied, in pursuit. They were so close, that before the two who had attempted to scale the bank reached the top, one was wounded and treed: the other had secured his retreat, but seeing his wounded comrade unabled to ascend, he returned to him and both treed and fired on their opponents. After several shots had been fired he was killed. The other crawled up the bank, and into a thicket of bushes, leaving a trail of blood as he went. They dare not follow as they felt assured he would kill one of them before they could get sight of him. The three Indians were pursued by Carr and others. Carr was following right in their rear, while Niswanger was more on the flank, and on higher ground. He saw one leap a log, and hiding behind it, was in the act of firing on Carr when he N. cried out "Ham, Ham, that fellow will shoot you." Carr then saw the muzzle of the gun pointed at his breast. He made a desperate leap to one side, when he went over a very steep bank into a run that hid him from the view of the Indians, and thus escaped. The three Indians secured their retreat, and while the raw militia, and soldiers gathered near where the contest had been going on with the two first mentioned Indians, came in their rear and fired. A ball passed through the clothes of one, who immediately exclaimed "I am a dead man" and jumped into the run. The ball grazed the skin a little, but he was not hurt. The party returned with one scalp; and the conviction they had killed one other Indian. It was said a skeleton of a man was found in that vicinity when that part was settled; supposed to be that of the Indian. From our settlements no expeditions were organized to hunt Indians; they acted only on the defensive, except when the Indians had come to us, and commited some act of aggression, so it was seldom that they were over taken or suffered loss by our people.

I have heard from Mr. Guthrie and others that at Belville a man had a son, quite a youth, say 12 or 14 years of age, who had been used to firing his fathers' gun, as most boys did in those days. He heard he supposed, turkeys on, or near the bank of the Ohio, opposite that place, and asked his father to let him take the gun, and kill one; his father knowing that the Indians frequently decoyed people by such noises, refused, saying it was probably Indians. When he had gone to work, the boy took the gun and paddled his canoe over the river, but had the precaution to land some distance from where he had heard the turkey all the morning, probably for fear of scaring the game; and perhaps a little afraid of Indians. The banks were steep, and the boy cautiously advanced to where he could see without being seen. Watching a while to see his game, he happened to see an Indian, cautiously looking over a log, to see where his victim was landed. The boy fixed his gun at a rest, watching the place where he had seen the Indian's head and when it appeared again, fired, and the Indian disappeared; the boy dropped his gun and ran for his canoe, which he paddled over the river as soon as possible. When he reached home, he said, "mother I killed an Indian," and the mother replied "no you have not." "Yes I have" said the boy. The father coming in, he made the same report to him, and received the same reply; but he constantly affirmed it was even so; and as the gun was left, a party took the boy over the river to find it, and shew the place where he shot the Indian, and behold, his words were found verified. The ball had entered the head, where the boy had affirmed he shot; between the eye and ear.

R. J. Meigs Jr., who lived in our Stockade, was clearing a lot on the lower point, near fort Harmer, and had Joseph Simons hired, and had a Mulatto boy about 16 years of age. They crossed to their work in a canoe opposite our fort, and walked through the woods on the bank to the lot, each day. One day J. P. R. Bureau took me with him to Harmer, and our canoe was tied to the same root, with Meigs'. Towards evening, Bureau started home with me. On his way he tried to kill a Pigeon, and snapped and flashed his gun several times. I told him he had no powder in his gun, for I saw him, after wiping it, put the ball down without powder; after frequent trials we passed on. Before I reached the Fort, Meigs, coming up the same path, fired his gun at a snake, and before he loaded an Indian fired on them, and shot his ball into Simons' shoulder. Simons sprung down the bank, into the river. The boy followed; Meigs, endeavored to terrify the Indian, by presenting his gun, and advancing upon him. The Indian laughed at it, and struck at Meigs with his gun, as Meigs passed him, and ran towards the fort. The Indian had a companion, without a gun, but with a tomahawk and knife; this one followed Simons and the boy into the river. The boy could not swim, and stopped when he had got some distance on a bar covered with water three or four feet. The indian tried to have the boy go with him, but the boy resisted. By this time they were firing at the Indian from the opposite side, and the Indian took off a small scalp from the boy's head, and left him, as the boy sank in the water with the agony. When the Indian was partly up the bank, the boy had risen from the water, and nearly reached the shore, when the Indian returned, and stepping one step into the water, struck the boy with his tomahawk, and the boy again fell into the water. As the Indian ascended the bank, our people fired again, and the Indian fell, his comrade jumped to his assistance, and they both retreated, whether the ball reached him or not was not known. Edward W. Tupper and J. P. R. Bureau immediately jumped into a canoe, and got the boy out; he was dead. A very small wound in the forehead was all, except the scalp. Simons had sprained his ancle in jumping down the bank, but kept himself above the water until taken out on the opposite side, where Col. Meigs, Sr., had followed, as he floated down; fearing also for the fate of his son. I have always supposed that I was saved from captivity in consequence of Bureau's error in loading his gun without powder.

"THE WAY THEY DO HERE."

NO. II.

Mr. Editor.—According to promise I will now try to furnish you another sketch with the above caption, embracing a few historical items respecting our moral habits and religious tendencies in this 'peculiar' part of the world.

In the first place, I would say, that we are a mixed multitude, made up of almost all professions, and almost all denominations, as you will see when they are named. The Episcopal Methodists, the Protestant Methodists, the Old School Presbyterians, and the New School Presbyterians, the Regular Baptists, and the Missionary Baptists, the Friends, or Quakers, the United Brethren in Christ, the Reformers, Disciples, or Campbellites, and the Universalists, Deists and Atheists. And others there are that are any thing or nothing just as you might desire them to be. And these last are never to be found twice in the same place, continually changing their course, any way they may think public opinion would chance to lead.

But lest I should be tedious, I shall proceed as briefly as possible.

In my first acquaintance with this "peculiar" place there were two rival societies of the church of Christ, or societies of two of the above denominations in this neighborhood, and they being jealous of each other's prosperity, raised a war of persecution, in which every means was made use of to destroy each other's peace and prosperity. Their place of worship was in the same house and not unfrequently the time appointed for meeting on the same day and hour; and as often terminated in a contention for the preference. This was the case with the social meetings as well as meetings appointed for public preaching. The contention commenced with the members, and by them carried up to the preachers and they avoiding as much as possible any personal altercations endeavored to enlist public opinion in their favor by "enlarging their borders" by means of protracted meetings, camp meetings, two days' meetings &c. Although they generally succeeded in raising considerable excitement that added to their respective numbers, they were not permanent enough to give either of them a decided advantage over the other, nor to ingratiate them into the favor and affection of the neighboring denominations. These appeared to stand aloof in silent suspense, awaiting the result of two bodies calling themselves Christians, worrying and devouring each other for the vain and empty appellation of Greatest. And that too to come from those that the pious would be found in company with, only for the same purpose that a physician would visit the sick. Not to spread the disease, but to stop it.

Thus were the exertions on either side met by the efforts of the other, so that the preachers as if by mutual consent drew themselves out of the scrape, leaving the societies to fight their own battles in their own way, upon their own responsibility, which produced an effect whether desired or deserved, I do not say, but in a short time there was not a vestage of the societies to be found. Not one of all that number on either side that would acknowledge they ever held a place wherein such virulent contention had been the characteristic of ambitious rivals instigated by false hopes of worldly honor.

A declension in religion through the section, coming by degrees and scarcely perceptible had thrown the curtain of inactivity over the churches in general, and the membership, contaminated with the lethargy, seemed to forget all their religious professions, to join in the prevailing pursuit of riches that pervaded the minds and actions of the community at large.

Wild and unmatured speculative plans were entered into and entire failures frequently followed the enterprise. Large calculations of gain, and great incomes depended upon, and disappointment would show the whole to be "vanity and vexation of spirit." What trials, temptations, and trouble, Man will work himself into for naught but the "love of Money."

Years rolled on but no change in the course of professed Christians was to be seen. They appeared to follow at a great distance that Holiness that is set forth in the teachings of the of Son of God; and that is calculated in its nature to raise the mind above the sordid and transitory things of this vain world to purer enjoyment beyond this vale of tears.

But in this general dearth, some there were that kept themselves unspotted, whose walk & conversation showed them to be worthy to be called christians indeed. Nevertheless they were contemptuously spoken of, and scornfully referred to as the bane of sociability.

Here I shall close this sketch with a promise of a continuation, when opportunity offers.

Yours respectfully, NEM. CON.

Ministers' Department.

Diverse Gifts in the Ministry.

Ministers differ in their intellectual powers and accomplishments. Here, there is an Edwards or a Butler, trained to the most profound and discriminating research there is a Hall or a Mason, the grandeur of whose conceptions throws the thoughts of common minds into the shade, and yonder standing alone, I had almost said in the world's entire history—is a Whitefield, who is familiar with the avenues of the heart, which others have not explored; who can raise a tempest in the bosom when he will, and as quickly speak it into a calm; while a great multitude shine with inferior but indifferent degrees of lustre. There is a difference in their moral constitutions. The unshrinking boldness of Paul, the head strong impetousity of Peter, and winning gentleness of John, the docile spirit of Nathaniel, and every other variety of natural disposition, is continually exemplified in the christian ministry. There is a difference in the amount of piety which they possess; some keeping the world under their feet, and having their conversation habitually in Heaven, while others seem scarcely to raise to the ordinary level of christain attainment. They are favored also with different degrees of usefulness; and their usefulness flows in different channels. One exerts an influence in advancing the kingdom of Christ which is felt far and wide; while another, with feebler powers and less zeal and perseverance, would seem to labor to comparatively little purpose. One is directly instrumental of turning many to righteousness, and there are hundreds and ever thousands who expect to heap blessings upon him in Heaven as the instrument of their salvation; while another exerts a more silent but scarcely less important influence, in vindicating the claims of Christianity, in moulding the character of the young, in guarding the general interest of the church. And to crown all, they differ in their ultimate reward. They that have been faithful in a few things will not lose their reward; but they that have turned many to righteousness, will shine as the brightness of the firmament.

Such is the variety which the great Head of the church permits—I may say, has ordained, in the Christian ministry. And the wisdom of this appointment especially in regard to the different intellectual and moral constitutions of the ministry has to perform its work upon every variety of character, and the influence which might be entirely lost upon one individual, might operate with mighty power on another. Hence I cannot think it is desirable that all ministers should try to force themselves into a conformity to any one particular standard; indeed that seems to me to be doing violence to the divine constitution. God requires indeed, that all his ministers should preach the same great principle, but He has not required that they should all be of the temperament of Peter, or of John, or of Paul; he chooses to have his sons of thunder and his sons of consolation; and no one may say with the greater degree of favor. I have sometimes heard even ministers complain of their brethren as likely to accomplish little or no good by preaching, because, though they preached the truths of the gospel plainly, they preached them with less energy, or less apparent fervor than could be desired.—But I would say in all such cases, you have no right to require the brick where God has not given the straw; and besides the very mode of preaching which you desire, would doubtless be far less useful to many individuals, than that which you object. Let a minister keep himself within those bounds of decorom which God's word and the dignity of his own office prescribe, and the more closely he follows the bent of his own mind, the better; he may not be a Paul or Apollos, a Chalmers or a Dwight; but he will be himself; and in that most natural of all characters, he will be likely to do his Master's work in the best manner, and with the greatest success.—Dr. Sprague's Sermons.

I one day preached on the general corruption of mankind, and the impossibility of being saved by our own works. A person present expressed his surprise at my assertions, and thought it strange that I should enforce the necessity of our keeping the whole law, if we desired to be saved by our own merits. It was unjust, he urged, to consider a man cursed who confirmeth not all the words of the law to do them; and cried out, "How can this be true, that whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all? How can can this be? If I keep six of the commandments, and break four, have I not kept the majority? And is not God in justice bound to give me heaven, because I have kept two more than I have broken?"

In explaining these truths, we can easily make ourselves understood to cultivated minds, but I could never make the common people understand me without a parable. Instead of entering into an argument, I have often replied by a description of a scene on the Ganges; "The day was dismal, the wind roared, the thunder pealed, the lightening was vivid, the waves of the Ganges raged, the stream was swollen and the current rapid: the infuriated elements threatened destruction to every vessel on its waters; no boat could outlive the storm for any length of time. But see, what is that? It is a boat in distress, filled with people, rapidly hurried along by the waves. Between the peals of thunder, the shrieks of the people are heard; they fear the rocks on the shore, to which the current is driving them. What can be done for them? Could they but be drawn into this creek, they would be safe. Those on the shore look anxiously around, and discover a chain lying near them. A man instantly fastens a stone to a rope, binds the other end to the chain, and flings the stone into the boat. The rope is caught; The people eagerly lay hold on the cabin, while those on shore begin to draw them, amid the raging elements, towards the creek. They already rejoice at the prospect of deliverance;—but, when they are within a few yards of the land, one link of the chain breaks, I do not say ten links but only one link, in the middle of the chain.—What shall these distressed people do now?—Shall they still cling to the unbroken links?"—"No! no!" exclaimed one of my hearers; overboard with the chain, or it will sink them the sooner." "What then shall they do?" "Cast themselves upon the mercy of God," exclaimed another. "True," I replied; "if one commandment be broken; we cannot be saved by them; we must trust in the mercy of God, and lay hold on the almighty hand of Christ, which is stretched out to save us." I have frequently used this parable, and always found it to answer.—Rev. C. B. Leupolt.

MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCE.

From the Missionary Herald.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

LETTER FROM MR. PARIS, HAWAII, JUNE 12, 1846,

Famine—Drought—Fire.

The island of Hawaii has been greatly afflicted in various ways during the last two years. The epidemic, as already intimated, occasioned much suffering and many deaths. The want of food has been severely felt, especially in some districts. In addition to what has been previously said on this point, Mr. Paris wrote under date of February 25. "For a whole year our people have been suffering from a pinching famine. During many months the heavens have been brass and the earth iron, and consequently, the whole stock of food for man and beast has failed. Most of the people have subsisted for months chiefly on the roots of the fern and kii plants. These roots, especially the latter, are very nutritious; but if used exclusively they produce disease, from which many never recover. Thus while few, if any, among us have died of actual starvation, many of the aged, the sick, and little children, have been carried to an untimely grave. In some instances the suffering from hunger has been very distressing. For two or three months we have been unable to purchase a potato or taro, or any other vegetables at any price.

But this is not all. Another extract from the letter of Mr. Paris, mentioned above, describes a calamity which must have occasioned much loss of property, and much inconvenience. "Almost our whole region had been overrun by fire. The country is generally fertile, and the grass and bushes grow very thick and tall. From our long drought, these had become like so much hay or stubble. A fire, breaking out in the eastern part of the field, was carried almost as fast as a man could travel, consuming almost every thing in its course. The whole country was bare, leaving nothing but one vast field of ashes and cinders for many miles in extent. Many dwellings of the natives were consumed, with every thing which they possessed. A day and a night we were almost surrounded by the devouring element. Our dwelling and other houses were only preserved by keeping them thoroughly wet from a little streamlet that flows through our garden. During twenty-four hours we were almost suffocated with smoke and cinders, and the day was well nigh as dark as the night. For many hours we expected every thing would be consumed. But the Lord wonderfully delivered us, according to his promise, 'When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee; when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee.' Many of the native converts, leaving their own habitations and their all, exerted themselves to the utmost to save our premises. And quite a number who labored hardest to keep the fire away from us, found, on their return, their own houses in ashes."

State of the Church in Kau—Additions.

At our station, during the past two years, we have had to mourn and weep over the spiritual apathy, stupidity, instability and worldly-mindedness of many professing Christians. The love of many has waxed cold. Some who ran well for a time, and for whom we entertained a hope that they had passed from death unto life, have given painful evidence that they had neither part nor lot in the matter; while others have given so little evidence of a vital union to Christ, that we stand in doubt, hoping for them, but with fear and trembling.

But while we have had no general outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon our people as in years past, and nothing which we would call a revival of religion, we have great reason to bless the Lord that there are so many among us who, amid all the snares and temptations of Satan, the changes in their external circumstances through which they have passed, stand firm, and give gratifying evidence that they are the children of God. They show by an humble and holy life that they are strangers and pilgrims on earth; that though babes, still they are babes in Christ. The cause of truth and righteousness has been steadily advancing. While some, like the Laodiceans, have been neither cold nor hot, slumbering and sleeping, living at ease in Zion, others have been watching, praying, waging a warfare against sin, growing in grace and in the knowledge of God and of his Son, Jesus Christ. The still small voice of the Spirit has been leading them into green pastures and by still waters, and their Christian character has been gradually developing. Their piety has been more decided. They have been constrained to come out and be separated, not only from the unbelieving world, but to take a higher stand, be a peculiar people, and separate themselves, to some extent, from lukewarm, stupid indolent, time-serving professors of religion. Perhaps you say we ought to have no such persons in the church. But alas! our churches here are made up of just such materials as you have at home. We try to sow wheat but Satan sows tares.

Mr. Paris now speaks of the attendance upon the services of the sanctuary.

For the first two years after the station was commenced, the people came to our meetings from all parts of the field, some from the distance of twenty and twenty-five miles. But they were inconstant; nor could it be reasonably expected that they would come regularly from such a distance. We have now established meetings at different points, throughout the district, which are conducted by native assistants.

During the two past years, I have employed two of the best men I could find to devote all their time to labor among the people.

We think the ordinary means of grace, such as the preaching of the Gospel, Sabbath Schools, Bible classes, conference and prayer meetings, are much more highly prized by many of our people than they ever were before. Many of the members of our church, who reside from four to eight miles from the station, are always in their places and at their posts on the Sabbath. By them the Sabbath is not merely regarded as a tabu, but as a day of sacred rest and refreshing to their souls.

Many of our meetings, both weekly and on the Sabbath, during the past year have been solemn and well attended. At times there has been a good deal of deep feeling, and we have felt that God was in the midst of us. There has been quite a number of hopeful conversions, both at the station and at some of the outposts. Since our last general meeting in 1844, we have received to our church on examination one hundred and nineteen, and nine have been added by certificate from other churches. Fifteen stand propounded to be received at the next communion.

I have had a weekly inquiry meeting at the station, which has usually been well attended; also frequent meetings for inquirers in the more remote parts of the field. These meetings afford an opportunity to all who are enquiring the way of salvation to make known their feelings. They also afford the best opportunity for the pastor to deal faithfully with individuals, by showing them their own sinfulness, and the danger of deception and by communicating to each one the instruction which he needs.

Liberality—Enterprize.

The great mass of our people are extremely poor. This is true of the population, and it is true of the members of our church. They have little or no property, and, having no market, they can have no money.

The past year moreover, has been one, as I have already intimated, of great trial and suffering. Sickness, drought, famine and fire have followed each other in quick succession; still our people have done something for the cause of Christ; and many of them have done what they could. "Their deep poverty" hath "abounded unto the riches of their liberality; for to their power, I bear record, yea, and beyond their power, they were willing of themselves" to bestow of their substance for the house of the Lord.

We have now a good substantial stone meeting house nearly completed, the materials have all been collected by the members of our church. Men, women and children, all shared in carrying the stone frome five or six ancient heathen temples. By them the coral was taken from the bottom of the sea, carried from seven to twelve miles, and converted into lime. By them the timbers were dragged from the mountain forests, and prepared for the building.

The whole amount contributed for this house, in labor and by voluntary subscriptions, in such articles as the people could give, is more than two thousand dollars.

Mr. Paris adds that two thatched meeting houses have been erected in the district, during the past year, while another has been roofed.

TEMPERANCE

"ONLY FIVE MINUTES TO LIVE."

The solemn hour will come to every one of us, when we shall have only five minutes to live.—We may not know when that dread moment arrives, but it will come to each one. And then at the end of five minutes he will pass that mysterious boundary into the world of spirits. How little think the multitude of the last five minutes!—How urgently does it warn each one to prepare for it, whether it shall come sooner or later.—"You have only five minutes to live," said the sheriff to a young man condemned to die:

The sheriff took out his watch and said, "If you have anything to say, speak now for you have only five minutes to live." The young man burst into tears, and said—"I have to die. I had only one little brother, he had beautiful blue eyes and flaxen hair, and I loved him; but one day I got drunk, for the first time in my life, and coming home, I found my little brother gathering berries in the garden, and I became angry without a cause, and killed him with one blow with a rake. I did not know anything about it until the next morning, when I awoke from sleep, and found myself tied and guarded, and was told that when my little brother was found his hair was clouted with blood and brains, and he was dead.—Whiskey has done it. It has ruined me. I never was drunk but once. I have only one word to say and then I am going to a final judge. I say it to young people—never! never! never! touch any thing that can intoxicate!" As he prononnced these words, he sprang from the box, and was launched into endless eternity.

I was melted in tears at the recital, and the awful spectacle. My litle heart seemed as if it would burst and break away from my aching bosom, so intolerable were my feelings of grief.—And there, in that carriage, while on that cushioned seat looking with streaming eyes on the body of that unfortunate young man, as it hung, dangling and writhing between heaven and earth, as unfit for either place, there it was that I took the pledge never to touch the hurtful poison!

Long years have passed away. White hairs have thickened around these temples, then so ruddy and young, but I have never forgotten the last words of that young man. And I have never violated the pledge. When the tempter has offered me the sparkling goblet, the words of that young man have seemed to sound in my ears again.—Old Man's Story.

Maine Liquor Law:—We find the following notice of this law copied in the Chambersburgh Messenger.

The best liquor law we have seen yet is that passed by the Legislature of Maine, at its last session. It prohibits the sale of intoxicating drinks, under the penalty of from one to twenty dollars for the first offence, and from five to twenty for the second, with a bond of fifty dollars to abate the nuisance for six months. Money paid for liquors can be recovered back again, even by the heirs or widow and orphans of the unfortunate drunkard. This is right. If every state would come out in favor of honesty and sobriety, we should hear very little of horrid murders and robberies now so common, or of the cases of extreme destitution and distress which continually fill the columns of the public press, all caused by the use of intoxicating liquors. The best of it, however is that it extends over the whole State. There is no voting by the people to ascertain if it is right or wrong to traffick in liquors, but the people have come in their might, and through their legislature, decided that they will not receive the wages of iniquity, or by their acts sanction a business that is fast degrading them as a people.

Something Extensive.—There is about to be established at South Trenton, N. J., a stock company consisting of entirely of colored persons.—The object is to carry on the tanning business, with a capital of $6000 divided into shares of $20. None but colored persons are permitted to own stock. The shares are nearly all taken up.

Rum and Fire.—Mrs. Mary Rich, residing in the upper part of New York, while intoxicated and alone at home, on Tuesday, was by some means set on fire, and was found burned to death.

Christianity is mildness and beauty; it breathes nothing but pure benevolence, and it appeals to the best feelings. It is essentially a religion of love, and has no dark shades blended with its brilliant tints.

Religious Intelligence.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Pittsburgh, March, 27, 1847.

Br. Bassett: Again a word or two in regard to Pittsburgh station. The President said a little, "A member" a little, and I will add a little more. It is true we cannot speak of a general effusion of the Spirit, extensive awakening and conversion of sinners, with large accessions to the church. O that we had such soul cheering news to tell. But this we may say, that if we have not made telegraphic or locomotive advancement, we have not been running back. No, nor even standing still. We held a protracted meeting of about 4 weeks' continuance, at which Br. Brown labored through his presidential term of one week. Br. Doe a few evenings, and the balance ourselves. We had some seekers of religion, some conversions and some accessions to the Society; (an excellent state of feeling generally, and a blessed season at the sacrament.) We commenced about 10 days previous to the arrival of the President, by preaching two sermons to backsliders, on the Sabbath, (Jan. 10th,) then during the week; to the church, and the second Sabbath, two more sermons to backsliders. And at night, one come forward to be prayed for, publicly confessing and lamenting the sad state. This was the beginning of the altar work. The changes in the weather appeared much against the week evening congregations; for 5th street above Smithfield, has been exceedingly muddy this winter, and will be much against our congregations, at times, till it is paved.

At our second quarterly meeting we had Br. G. B. McElroy to our help; but again the weather seemed to be against the meeting. And we closed on the following Thursday evening, with a good love feast. Had better speaking than usual for Pittsburgh. Upon the whole, if we do not possess as much "poetry" as friends in some portions of the work, let us be thankful if we have the honor and happiness to rank among the "prose of the kingdom of heaven."

We have sifted the society a little of some who were found too light. Have lost some members by removals, &c., and some by death; yet we have more than "held our own" numercial strength. Our congregations, on the Sabbath, both morning and evening, have greatly increased (and are very attentive.) This is very encouraging; and is it not also another "strong" evidence of our prosperity? We have also an excellent, large, and flourishing Sunday School. And connected with it, a Dorcas Society, in its incipient organization, for the benefit of the poor, especially to prepare poor children for the school. This is an excellent appendix to this school, and an important branch of benevolence. Some of our female teachers have wrought nobly in this labor of love, this winter. And it is truly affecting to the pastor, in his visitations, to hear the blessings of Heaven called down upon their heads, by those who have been the object of their attention and benificence.

I was longer at the commencement of the conference year, before I could feel rightly at home in this pulpit, than is usual with me, on entering a new field of labor; but thank the Lord, I feel now perfectly at home with this kind people, and happy in my work. The pastoral visitation here is a great work, (so that, at times, I feel to wish I had a curate to assist,) but it must be done, or the church cannot prosper.

Several of our members (among them two class leaders,) have been severely afflicted of late; but, thank the Lord, most of them are now convalescing.—In the biographical sketch of the life and labors of the late highly esteemed Rev. James Culbertson, of the Presbyterian Church in Zanesville, published in the Recorder of March 18th, the writer states that he was "the only clergyman, of any denomination, who has closed his mortal life in this town." That is very remarkable. And affords quite a contrast with occurrences of the kind in this city. Recently, in less than five weeks, three pastors have been taken from their flocks by death, in this city. Two of them Presbyterian clergyman, the first Rev. Dr Black, of the 5th Presbyterian Church, (who had been installed but a few months,) and the last Rev. Mr. Dunlap, of the 2nd Presbyterian Church, (who was interred on Tuesday last. A vast concourse of people attended, among whom were many ministers of nearly all the churches in these cities and their suburbs.) And the other a pastor of one of the German Lutheran Churches of this city.

The two Presbyterian clergymen died in the city of Allegheny, but their churches were in Pitsburgh.

But I must conclude. Have already said much more than was intended in the commencement. I must mention, however, that before this letter arrives, we expect to be moved into the Parsonage, where we hope to enjoy much comfort, while we sojourn in this station. It is not yet finished, but we can occupy a part—sufficient for the present. Long may it remain the temporary home of the faithful pastor of this people. And may its walls never be stained with sin, but may the motto of every successive minister be—Holiness to the Lord! W. REEVES.

Steubenville March 30, 1847.

My Dear Brother Bassett: Having obtained help from God, I have continued until this time, preaching the unsearchable riches of the grace of Jesus Christ, among the people in my appointed field of labor. Since my last communication I have visited the following appointments—viz.

Brownsville Circuit—My meeting was in Cookstown. Being detained by the ice, I did not reach the meeting, until Sunday afternoon, but Br. Simonton, the Superintendent, was at his post, rendering good service. I remained until Thursday morning, and during my stay, I preached six times, and am in hopes good was done. The house was generally well filled with attentive hearers, and the word did seem to make a good impression, but after all sinners did not yield. This circuit is in good condition, and I pray God to give success to the labors of Br. S. this year, among the people of his charge. The zeal, and religious energy of the membership, at the above meeting gave me great pleasure. God bless these good brethren, George's Creek Circuit—The meeting I attended was at the Zion meeting house, and commenced on Saturday evening, February 13th. I left on the 18th. Br's. P. T. Laishley and N. Gillispie were in attendance, and did a good part in the good work, of preaching the gospel. Here, owing to the help we had, I only preached three times. The meeting was decidedly a good one. There appeared to be many under conviction—a goodly number came to the altar for the prayers of the church. Some five or six were received on probation. Sacrament and love-feast, both good. Br. Clawson the Superintendent, stands well among his people, and bids fair to be very useful this year.

Morgantown Circuit—My visit was at Avery Chapel. The meeting commenced February 21st, and I left on the 26th, after preaching in all six times. Here I had no help, but Br. Gillespie, [illegible] he is good help. Pity it could not have been continued. There was quite an awakening among the people of the neighborhood. Several persons were brought into the liberty of the children of God. The membership were greatly revived, and six were added to the church. Among the converts who joined the church was a son of my old friend, P. T. Laishley. Oh what a struggle John had for three nights and days in succession, but he found mercy at last, and was made happy in a Savior's love; may he hold fast for ever.

Union Station—I commenced my meeting here on Saturday evening, rather unwell—but was able to preach at eleven and three o'clock on the Sabbath and to attend at the Methodist Episcopal meeting house, and hear the sermon on the Protestant Union, or Alliance, by J. Scott, Superintendent of the Union Station. The sermon was a good one, every way creditable to the head, and heart, of the preacher, and well calculated to promote the cause he adcocated. On Monday night we had a good lovefeast. On Tuesday night I preached again. So my meeting closed. We had no conversions—nor did I hear of any one under conviction. But we have a good membership in Union Station, and Br Scott is a good preacher; may the Lord open his way, and lead him forth, to the accomplishment of a good, and great work, this year.

Connellsville Circuit—The meeting was held in Connellsville, commencing March 6th. Brs. T. L. Forkner, and V. Lucas were in attendance, and rendered good service. There had been several church trials just before the beginning of our meeting—some ill feeling and talk. I hope our meeting had a good influence in a way of harmonising the church. But we were not in a condition to reach sinners. Here too I preached six times, and left all to God. Br. H. Palmer and his colleague are doing all they can for Christ and his cause, and so far, the Lord has been with them, and good has been accomplished.

Fayette Spring Circuit—The meeting was held in the Cumberland Presbyterian meeting house near Oliphant's Iron Works. Br. H. Palmer was in attendance, and preached on Saturday night, but was hindered from any further service, by the tooth ache. I was unwell, but did all I could on Sunday at eleven, and at night,—then again on Monday morning. We had a good communion—and the appearances were favorable for a good work. Br. V. Lucas the Superintendent is a valuable young man, much beloved by his people, and is doing all he can for Christ, and his cause. God grant him more abundant success

Reports from different quarters, in this district, are quite encouraging. We have, generally speaking, a state of peace. Vexed questions agitate us no more; now I look for prosperity. A convulsed church cannot prosper. Will our brethren think of this? O for more christian confidence and brotherly love. This open winter has been hard on me; traveling has been hard and difficult, owing to the depth of the mud, but here I am, not very well it is true, but comfortable in spirit, and in a day or two, if spared, shall set out on my long southern tour through Virginia.

Yours truly,
GEORGE BROWN.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Withamsville. O. March 15, 1847.

Brother Bassett: Through the mercy of God, I have been permitted to visit five circuits, since my last communication, viz. Washington, Bainbridge, New Richmond, Buford and Cincinnait. I found these circuits in a state of general peace, and encouraged under the faithful labors of our ministers, to go forward in the glorious cause of the Redeemer. The cross of Christ, the glory of God, and the salvation of sinners, are our present objects, while the agitators, with the warring elements, which have prevented our prosperity have passed away like the morning cloud, and throughout our entire Conference we are settling down on a firm basis, against which, designing men, nor the gates of hell, shall not prevail, whilst we are followers of that which is good. Onward, brethren, our cause must live in the hearts of the American people. United by the ties of universal brotherhood our success is sure. Ten members have been received since I last wrote. This is to inform our brethren that Br. W. G. Fowler at his request, is released from the charge of Buford Ct. and Br. Nutty, minister from Tennessee Conf. is received by transfer, and employed as superintendent on said circuit.

JOHN M. YOUNG.

Springfield Circuit, Ohio, April 2nd, 1847.

Dear Br. Bassett: I should be glad to have it in my power, to report revival intelligence from this circuit to the numerous readers of the Recorder; but at present we have nothing very encouraging to communicate, any further than we are at peace among ourselves, and are endeavoring through grace to make sure the harbor of eternal rest. And then we have cause to believe that a few who have been added to the church, have been hopefully converted to God. Our congregations in general are good, and there appears to be strict attention paid to the word preached. Br. Young was with us at our second quarterly meeting; and in addition to this we have had the faithful labors of Father McGuire at different points on the circuit.

As one, I feel an attachment to the Methodist Protestant Church. I love her, because I believe that her main principles, correspond with the principles of the gospel of Christ. And while I am able to endure the hardships of an Itinerant life and this branch of Christ's Church has any thing for me to do in the vineyard, I expect to be at her service.

True, there are M. Protestants in the South who hold slaves & their practice to me is objectionable; but what good could be effected by following the example of certain brethren at our last conference? I cannot see the propriety of contending for a division of the church, or secession from the church, on the account of slavery, while we of the North have the privilege of using all prudent means in opposing it. As yet I have to be convinced that my connection with the Ohio Conference, in any degree, sanctions the practice of holding slaves; and I have no doubt that some, if not all the brethren who went out from us last fall, have lamented their error ere this time.

Our third quarterly meeting will be held at Harmony, in conjunction with Br. Young's appointment, commencing, the fifth day of June.

Yours in Christ,
O. P. STEPHENS.

Lebanon, Ohio, April 2nd, 1847.

Br, Bassett: We are getting along here about as well as could be expected, all things considered. We expect to dedicate our meeting house some time next month. We had to defer the plastering until spring opened, which has considerably delayed us. Since I last wrote, we have taken five into the society. Our second quarterly meeting commenced the 27th of February and lasted just a week. It was a meeting of much profit to the Church, and I trust some good impressions were made upon sinners,—no conversions that I know of. We were favored with [illegible] Joseph White, and S. P. Kezeria. In justice to our brethren here, I feel bound just to say, that I have not been able to find amongst them the 'elements of strife' referred to in Rev. Z. Connell's third letter in Western Christian Advocate. The Lord be gracious to that devoted and faithful Presiding Elder of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Yours &c., R. M. DALBEY.

WABASH DISTRICT.

St. Joseph Circuit, Ia. March 23*d*, 1847.

Br. Bassett: As the winter is closing, and the time of the singing of birds is at hand, I take my pen to break the death like silence that has reigned in this District, during a long winter of affliction. I have examined the Recorder from time to time, hoping to find some cheering account of the Wabash District, but meet with nothing of this yet, nor one word from our President. We beheld this vessel leave the port in a very stormy day, but know not where the noble Skipp, (President) is driven. We have strove, the while to keep near shore. A few passengers have come on board, and some are overboard. The winds are now more favorable, and we hope to reach the harbor. GABRAEL WILLIAMS.

[We, too, would be glad to hear from the (Br.) Shipp, President, (of the Wabash District) after so long a time. Our paper is sent out weekly to its moorings, and we are a little surprised that it does not at least speak us for those many days and weeks. We somehow entertain no fears for the safety of the vessel. Our chief solicitude is to receive by it, as cheering intelligence as the case will admit of, and not doubting that withal, a small ship-ment of dues will be sent us, by a few scattering subscribers in the bounds of its agency. Ed.]

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO.

THURSDAY, APRIL 8. 1847.

Correspondents.—Obituaries by Brs. Morrison of Indiana, and Piper of Muskingum, next week. Quite a budget was received from 'Paul Pry,' too late for present issue. Next week he will be found, peeping into matters again.

Putnam Female Seminary.

We direct attention to a statement in another column by 'A Visiter' in reference to this Institution. It is written by one who is disinterested, & yet who has far had better opportunity than we, to become thoroughly acquainted with its arrangements and its advantages. In our advertising columns will be found also, a statement by the Trustees, of the Terms of the Institution. We are the more gratified to be enabled to publish this information now, as we have received enquiries from friends at a distance, whose attention was arrested by some account of the Seminary which we published a few weeks ago, and who have felt inclined to send their daughters here to enjoy its advantages. In addition to statements we have heretofore made, we will observe that we have seen a comparative exhibit of the terms of several kindred Institutions, in each instance the charges here being lowest. And yet we cannot conceive that better advantages can be gained elsewhere. As our correspondent observes, it is by reason of its endowment, that the terms of this Institution can be put so low, and by reason of the prohibition in its Charter, that it should be made a source of individual income. We had the pleasure of being present during part of the recent examination, and we entirely concur with 'A Visiter' in bearing testimony to the qualifications of the Instructors, and the general proficiency of the pupils.

"Secret Societies."—We publish this week, a short communication from Dr. Hildreth, with his previous article to which we referred a few weeks ago. At that time we felt at liberty to lay it aside, forasmuch as we had published a lengthy article by "A Son of Temperance," upon the same side of the question. We still conceive that it was entirely fair to do so. And the reason we now feel called upon to publish the Doctor's article, is, that though he is not connected with the order of the "Sons," as he informs us, he is understood to represent a more ancient fraternity, and which was also implicated, as it is thought, not only by the "Pioneer," but by the "Son of Temperance."—And now having treated all with impartial fairness, giving each party a hearing through our columns, we respectfully crave a discontinuance of this controversy, as it is not a matter of general interest. We shall be pleased, however, to have our several correspondents favor us still, upon any useful, or at least unexceptionable topics.

Meeting of the Bishops.—We learn from the Western Christian Advocate, that a meeting of all the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, by previous arrangement, was held in Philadel. on the 3d and 4th of March, ultimo. Bishop Hedding presided, and Dr. Janes served as Secretary. Subjects connected with "border work" under the "plan of separation," came chiefly under consideration. A resolution was adopted, expressive of the opinion, that agreeably to the "plan," votes were to be taken by Conferences, Stations, and Societies, and not by circuits. Another resolution expresses the opinion that the period of taking the vote of Conferences, Stations, and Societies, is limited, to the time of the next session of the Conferences after the organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. It was determined, by the meeting, that in their administration, they would consider the first vote, regularly and fairly taken, as above specified, by any border station or society, south of the line of separation, to be final, in fixing its relation to the Methodist Episcopal Church, or the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. It was further agreed, that no preacher can be sent to any station or society south of the line, which subsequently to the organization of the M. E. Church, South, has once received a preacher from said Church, without remonstrance from a majority of its members. Also that when a border station or society north of the line, has once received a preacher from the Methodist Episcopal Church, subsequent to the organization, South, as aforesaid, without remonstrance from a majority of said station or society, it fixes finally its church relation to the Methodist Episcopal Church. The meeting determined that the Eastern shore of Maryland and Virginia is not to be regarded as "border work," in the sense of the "plan," also, that the Kenawha District, Ohio Conference, belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and that their administration should be governed accordingly. We regard the arrangement to consult the votes in the stations and societies, as well as Conferences, a decided improvement.

Dr. Rice on Slavery.—Rev. Dr. Rice, now pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church, Cincinnati, and Senior Editor of the Presbyterian of the West, has lately been admonished by some of the patrons and correspondents of that paper, touching his position on the slavery question. He responds to them quite spiritedly in a recent number, and defines his position. As Dr. R. had a debate with Rev Mr. Blanchard on the slavery question some 2 years ago, in Cincinnati, since which he has been by some regarded as pro-slavery in his views, for the purpose of correcting this impression, and in justice to Dr. R., we give the following extract from his remarks in the Presbyterian of the West:

"We are opposed to slavery—perhaps no less so than our correspondents. We regard it as an evil of immense magnitude, the removal of which should be sought by all proper means; and we are as we ever have been, prepared, so far as able, to lend it a helping hand. But we are no less opposed to the unscriptural and fanatical principles of ultra-abolitionists. We are sure, that, whilst they produce schism in the church of Christ, and threaten the destruction of the civil Union, they greatly retard the work of emancipation. Multitudes of the most staunch anti-slavery men in this country entertain the same views. We are not favorable to the continual agitation of the subject of slavery in church-courts; because we believe, this is not the scriptural method of removing evils from society, and that it tends to hinder the progress of the work we all desire to see go forward.

"Such is our position. We have not intended to discuss the merits of the question, unless forced from a conviction of duty to do so. The articles we have published, have been copied from northern papers, decidedly anti-slavery in their character. And we might safely challenge any reader of our paper to put his finger on a single article or sentiment in any number yet published, which looks even remotely toward favoring the continuance of slavery in our country, or is at all calculated "to give aid and comfort to slavery."

Rev. James Quinn.—This aged minister, the oldest in the Ohio Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, has a letter in the last number of the Western Christian Advocate, in which he gives some interesting reminiscences of his early labors as a pioneer of said church. He first travelled in the Baltimore Conference, (between forty-five and fifty years ago,) and after spending a year or two in the region of the Allegheny Mountains, was transferred to the great Western Valley. He observes that at that time, he could adopt the words of Paul: "I will gladly spend and be spent for this people." But now, after the toils and privations of nearly half a century, he ventures to change the tense of the phraseology, and say, I have spent, and am spent. Mr. Q. resides near Hillsborough, Highland county, Ohio, on the dividing ridge between the Scioto and Miami Vallies. He observes, "If I could ride on old Pompey, forty miles a day, I could go from here to Harper's Ferry, and lodge every night within the bounds of some circuit, on which I had once travelled. But I should find only the second and third generations of those with whom I was sweetly united in Gospel fellowship."

Exchanges.—We are gratified to acknowledge several valuable accessions to our exchange list, which have commenced coming to us regularly within a few weeks past.

1. The Episcopal Recorder.—This is an excellent weekly religious newspaper, and a chief organ of the Protestant Episcopal Church, published in Philadelphia. Rev. G. W. Ridgely, Editor; Snavely and M'Calla, Publishers. The "Recorder" has just entered upon its twenty fifth volume, and we are much interested in its weekly perusal.

2. The Oberlin Evangelist.—We have had some acquaintance with this publication for several years. It is one of the most thoroughly religious papers we know of. Nothing whatever is permitted to enter its columns, that is not strictly promotive of holiness and usefulness. Almost every number contains an original sermon, reported for its pages. Prof. Finney is the chief contributor to this department. It is issued semi-monthly at $1 per year. Prof. H. Cowles is Editor; J. M. Fitch, Publisher.

3. The Christian Patriot.—This is a weekly religious newspaper, published at Princeton, Ky. under the auspices of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Princeton is the location of the Cumberland College, the principal Institution of that denomination. The "Patriot," is a small sheet, but promises enlargement upon increase of patronage. Rev. L. C. Philips, Editor: M. Rogers, Publisher. We like the tone of its editor, especially upon Christian Union. He urges the pious, of all denominations, to lift up their hearts in prayer, 'more earnestly than ever before, for a universal revival of religion, to commence the present year.' He observes that that denomination which shall do this most fervently, and shall consequently be found working, and that cheerfully, in the vineyard of the Lord, will be the denomination which will be most blessed with the spirit and fruits of revivals. And whilst he desires that the Cumberland P. Church may be that denomination, he prays that if she will not be thus engaged in prayer, and in work, that others may do so, and that they may be rewarded according to their labors of love. "But," says he, "that which would delight every Christian most, would be to see all denominations, generally revived, and a universal Revival begin. Then pray—and labor for it."

4. Burritt's Christian Citizen.—And who has not heard of Elihu Burritt, the Learned Blacksmith? Perhaps so many have not heard of his weekly religious newspaper, the name of which is here given, and of his Bond of Universal Brotherhood, designed to unite all, of all classes, and all nations, who will sign a pledge to 'seek peace and pursue it,' and to "learn war no more.' We will give further attention to this subject, hereafter. Two numbers of the 'Citizen' have reached us this week. It is published weekly at Worcester, Massachusetts, by Elihu Burritt & Co. at $1.50 per Annum in advance. We are thus far well pleased with our new acquaintance. It seems to be devoted to the cause of Religion, Benevolence and Peace. Its principal Editor is absent, sojourning in the British Isles. Yet we have much from his pen in the 'Citizen,' written from abroad. He is especially appealing in words of warm and earnest benevolence and piety in behalf of the perishing in Ireland. He writes from the very midst of an "indescribable scene of destitution, desolation, and death." He says that while he writes, "the wailings of poor famished women and children, mingle with moaning winds of the night." He describes scenes of almost unparalleled anguish and woe. Will now those who have doubted, and stood aloof from efforts here for relief, longer doubt, since an American citizen, so well known, speaks for us as an eye and ear witness? Hear him then. "Farmers of the Great West! Is there one among you who will not give one bag of Indian corn or wheat, or a hundred weight of pork, as his free will offering to the starving in Ireland?—Is there a man, who has a heart endowed with the sympathies of our common nature, from New Orleans to Quebec, who will not open his hand and give?" But enough of this, here.

5. The Anglo Saxon.—This is to be a weekly paper, though thus far issued only every alternate week, "devoted to the diffusion of Knowledge and News, through the medium of Phonotypy, or the true system of spelling words: that is, just as they are pronounced." Boston, Mass. If any one has heretofore doubted that the present is an age of improvement, he will now hold his peace. What man, woman or child does not know that the English language is burdened and embarrassed with endless encumbrances and superfluities, making it a most inconvenient language to acquire and to use. And who amongst the nations using this language, learned though he be, has not from his youth up been sensible of the need of a great orthographical revolution, a literary and scientific earthquake to disengage our mother tongue from the oppressive shackles under which it has for ages suffered. Heretofore, no one has been found, having sufficient moral courage, as well as other needful qualifications to attempt this mighty reform. But be it known, that the movement has at length been made, and the ball set in motion. In the Phonographic mode of writing, all superfluous double letters and silent letters are omitted, and words are spelled just as they are pronounced. Without our giving examples, any one can see at once, should this system be adopted, what a happy convenience it would be. Messrs. Andrews and Boyle, are publishers of the Anglo Saxon, and authors of various Phonographic works. Already the movement has found favor with many teachers and writers, and though we cannot predict its success, we are free to say that the plan of reform it proposes, seems altogether plausible and convenient. Those who are favorably inclined towards Phonographical (Fonografical) reform should subscribe for the 'Anglo Saxon.' Its terms are, two dollars per volume. So soon as we find time, and become a little better versed in the system, we shall give it further attention.

Scott's Weekly Paper—We take pleasure in stating that this very fine sheet now visits us again, and since we notified the publisher of our failure to receive, he has taken pains to send us the missing numbers. The following note we find in the last Paper.'

"☞We regret exceedingly that the Western Recorder, Putnam, Ohio, has been over looked. He will find, however, that we only require to be informed of any delinqency, to rectify it at once. We have sent the missing numbers."

All right again. And here we would again say, that "Scott's Weekly Paper" is one of the largest, cheapest, handsomest, and most interesting, of our eastern Wecklies. Published by A. Scott, Esq. Philadelphia.

Godey's Lady's Book.—The April number of this elegant work is received, and as usual speaks well for the enterprise, and pains taking of the publisher, to please his numerous patrons. Three fine steel engravings are among its embellishments, one of which represents Life on the Rio Grande. Besides, there are from 15 to 20 other engravings, chiefly illustrating Ladies' Needle Work, Model Cottages, &c. Some fine verses, taken from the April number will be found in our poetical department. The 'Book' is a highly popular work, especially with the ladies.

By the same publisher, (to whom we are indebted for many favors.) we are furnished with the March number of each of his Reprints,—both very neat, and very interesting, as we have heretofore assured our readers. We give below, the publisher's terms of these works, in his own words.

GODEY'S REPRINT of the two most popular and Fashionable English Magazines.

Reprint of Blackwood's Lady's Magazine, Monthly, $1 per Annum.

Reprint of London World of Fashion, $1 per Annum.

Two copies of either, or one copy of each, 1 year, $1 50.

Any person subscribing to Godey's Lady's Book, and sending $3 in advance, shall be furnished with that work one year, and a copy also one year, of either of the Reprints, gratis.

The above works afford a greater profit to local or travelling agents than any other works published. For terms, address the Publisher.

SCRAP PLATES FOR SALE.—Forty of the Beautiful Engravings used in the Lady's Book, will be sent to any person on receipt of One Dollar. They are all from Steel Plates, and are a handsome addition to a Scrap Book.

Address, L. A. GODEY, Publishers' Hall, Philadelphia.

Dead.—The papers announce the death of Jean Baptiste Richie, President of Hayti. It had been little more than a year, since he was placed at the head of the government.

No toll.—We see announcements in papers from the Miami valley, that no charge of toll is made upon provisions shipped along the Miami Canal to Cincinnati. And why not remit the tolls along the Muskingum Improvement, to Marietta? The following order, is addressed to the collector of tolls on the Miami Canal at Cincinnati, by the State Commissioner of Public Works.

"Dayton, March 13, 1847.

D. Lapham, Esq: Dear Sir—provisions for the relief of the Irish and Scotch, to go scot free of toll. Yours, &c.,

SAMUEL FORRER,
Acting Com'r. Public Works."

We are gratified to learn by the Urbana Gazette, that the citizens of Dayton have improved the opportunity and sent down 94 barrels of flour, and 10 sacks of corn.

More Fighting.--Dreadful Carnage -Success of the American Arms.

Since our last issue, intelligence has been received of severe engagements in Mexico. The details, all of which are not reliable, would occupy a very large space in our paper. Our readers are therefore, for these, referred to the secular papers, whilst we furnish at present but a condensed statement, which we make out from the Telegraphic reports in the Pittsburgh Commercial Journal, and the Pittsburgh Gazette.

We have again and again expressed our abhorrence of this sanguinary contest between two neighboring Republics. There is no excuse for the prosecution of this most barbarous war in the Nineteenth Century. A strange people, we! Proud of our benevolence, in sending bread to Ireland. Proud, too, of our barbarity in sending wretchedness, destruction and death to Mexico. We can eat sumptuous suppers, and send shiploads of food to the starving poor of Ireland, and we can make illuminations and cannonadings of rejoicing at our success, in butchering off our neighbors by thousands for some trivial breach of national politeness! And shall not the Lord be angry with such a nation as this?

Battle of Buena Vesta.

Gen. Taylor was attacked in his position at Agua Nueva, by the Mexicans under Santa Anna. After a very sharp action, Gen. Taylor commenced his retreat towards Saltillo. He arrived at the latter place in safety, when he was again attacked, and an obstinate engagement ensued.

The combat was carried on in the streets of the town with great slaughter, until at last the Mexicans were repulsed, and General Taylor recommenced his long and perilous march upon Monterey pursued by the enemy in strong force.

Before abandoning Saltillo, the American general was forced to spike six pieces of artillery, which, with 30,000 rations fell into the hands of the enemy.

After the retreat conducted with great skill & courage, Gen. Taylor succeeded in sheltering his command in Monterey.

Here Santa Anna declined attacking him.—Reinforced by the troops in the town, however, Taylor sallied out, and assailed Santa Anna in his turn; and the battle was renewed.

Gen. Taylor ordered immediate pursuit to be made with a battery of flying artillery, and several squadrons of dragoons. These troops assailed the Mexicans creating great havoc; our dragoons charging over piles of dead, three deep.

GENERAL TAYLOR,

While foremost in the fight received a ball in his overcoat, but was not injured. Adjutant Bliss, at his side, was slightly wounded.

Adjutant Lincoln greatly distinguished himself and was killed. This battle lasted until three o'clock—when Santa Anna was so hard pressed that he was compelled to retire to Agua Nueva.

These reinforcements awaited his command and he was much stronger than before.

At this point communications passed under a flag of truce between the commanders of the two Armies. Taylor at the last accounts maintained his position undisturbed.

Taylor had the promise of Santa Anna that he would get back C. M. Clay, and he had, it is said, Mexican prisoners enough to command and make the exchange. The prisoners, it is said, were afterwards ordered to be exchanged, including Clay and all under his command.

In the battle General Wool greatly distinguished himself. His officers and men fought like heroes.

After the battle, General Taylor demanded of Santa Anna that he should immediately surrender. This was declined, and Taylor himself was called upon to surrender. Lieut. Crittenden took back the answer, and said to Santa Anna for his General, "GENERAL TAYLOR NEVER SURRENDERS!!!"

Santa Anna's Adjutant General was afterwards captured and an exchange made.

On the 24th and 25th General Taylor occupied his command and position unmolested and without any show of opposition.

Colonel Morgan for whose safety so much anxiety has been felt, cut his way through the enemy, and arrived safely at Monterey. He is of the 2d Ohio Volunteers.

Other accounts represent our loss in the battle to be not more than 700, and Santa Anna's 4000. It is said, however, that the American loss includes sixty-three officers, which is an immense proportion. Santa Anna's officers were also slain in great numbers, a proof, if indeed proof be wanting, that they fought well. The odds against Taylor were at least, according to the best accounts we have seen, ten thousand men. The retreat of Santa Anna decided the battle against him, and it was an alternative to which he was forced, and which was beyond his control. The battle took place at Buena Vista, not far from Saltillo, and between Saltillo and Agua Nueva.

Pailadelphia, April 2, 5 o'clock, P. M.

Battle between Gen. Urrea, and Lieut. Crittenden and ▬ Escort of 250 Men.

Lieut. Crittenden left Agua Nueva, whence he took despatches on the 7th inst. with an escort of 250 men.

The escort was under command of Maj. Giddings. They discovered one hundred and thirty wagons near Cerralvo, which were under the command of Urrea and fifteen hundred men.—The escort gave battle to Urrea and repulsed him after a severe struggle.

Fifteen men and forty wagons were destroyed by fire. The teamsters were not willing to proceed with stronger escort. Lieut. Crittenden was detained six days at Cerralvo, when Col. Curtis forced his way from Camargo with a large body of troops.

Gen. Urrea fled on hearing of Santa Anna's defeat and of Col. Curtis's approach.

You must wait the receipt of the despatches by mail to see full particulars.

S Semi-Annual Examination of this Institu- losed on Tuesday, the 6th instant. The ex- ion was thorough and extended, half a day devoted in some cases to a single study, and o conducted as to be in a good degree a test of rship. The young ladies, for the most part, ted themselves with great credit. The exam- n did not consist in a mere memoriter recital wer to questions previously prepared, of some al principles contained in the author whom had studied; but in those studies which ad- l of such a course, for example, History, al Philosophy, &c. the examination was hics; and the pupil was required to give in her anguage the substance of a whole chapter, ut any leading questions. This they were ally able to do in such a manner, as to show hey had not employed their time in learning s without ideas, but had made themselves roughly masters of the subject. Those, also, had studied the higher branches of mathemat- proved very conclusively, that young ladies, thstanding the many doubts which have been essed, can be very much at home, even in ic Sections."

ev. S. Brown, in reply to "A Son of Temperance."

BROTHER BASSETT: I see that "that a Son of mperance" is out again in your last paper in ply to my note in a previous number. If it be t trespassing upon your editorial kindness, I ink it may not be amiss to set your correspon- nt right, and perhaps not uninteresting to your aders.

I am pleased with his candor in correcting his stake in reference to Presbyterian persecution of ur forefathers." He asks "by what authori- Mr. S. Brown represents himself as the Presby- rian Church?" I can scarcely think that any e besides himself, on reading my note, would ceive the impression that I assumed any such rogance. The Presbyterian Church being mis- presented by his pen, and that in the columns the organ of another denomination, I, as "a on of the church," spoke a word for her, as he a Son of Temperance," for that organization; t in my own name. Is not this fair Mr. Editor? llow me here to chide him a little for falling to the very mistake which he charges on me. e appeals to the thirty years' ministry of Rev. mes Culbertson. Suppose it had been the uni- rm practice of Father Culbertson to have his ssion sit with closed doors, (which we do not dmit,) is the practice of him and his session to e taken as representative of the church at large, nd of her constitution? But mark; he challen- es me "to produce a single intelligent person, ho has, during thirty years of Mr. Culbertson's inistry, ever attended, or was invited to attend e meetings of session as a spectator, except the nitiated!" Well, if I should prove all this, ould it prove that they sat with "closed doors ll that time? Suppose, Mr. Editor, it had hap- ened that for the last ten years you had not been n my house, nor I had invited you to come; ould you infer that I had "closed my doors" a- ainst you?

Rev. W. A. Smallwood, in his address, affirmed hat church sessions generally sit with closed oors; and your correspondent affirmed that all ur judicatories were private tribunals. Now if e will take the trouble to examine our "Form f government," he will not find any rule requi- ing any of our judicatories to sit with closed oors at any time. In one case the Presbytery is advised to be alone, i. e. when examining a can- idate for the ministry on experimental religion. hat the examination may be close and particu- ar, and the candidate free from embarrasment. But even this advice is not followed in one case in twenty. Perhaps it was in such a case that your correspondent was invited out some fifteen years ago. True, all our judicatories hold in com- mon with all other business bodies, the right, on a principle of common sense, to sit with closed doors, when they shall think that prudence re- quires it. But the holding of this right is a very different matter from its being a constitutional requirement, and a universal practice. When, the fact is, that scarcely once in ten years any one of our judicatories has occasion to close their doors, and especially the session, it is quite wide of the truth to assert that it generally does. The church Session has no constitutional rule for sitting with closed doors. Any and every member of the church, or other well disposed persons, may at- tend its meetings. Accordingly public notice is usually given of session meetings that any person concerned to be present may attend. But, if I am not misinformed, the Sons of Temperance usually sit with closed doors, by constitutional rule. For this I blame them not; but mention it to show that it is wholly irrelevant and incorrect to insti- tute a comparison between the S. T. organization and a church session.

But I must notice a broader mistake yet, which "a Son" made in his previous communication.— He said, "If a Ruling elder should disclose pri- vate things, done in secret session, to his better half, or his children, he would be subject to cen- sure." The manner in which this statement is made is little less than slander. I would believe, however, that it lacked the "evil intent."

I might easily show that he has both misunder- stood and misquoted Dr. Miller; but I will not trespass on your space. I will close by expres- sing my sincere wish and prayer that my friend may be delivered from an unhappy prejudice against the Presbyterian form of church govern- ment, which seriously affects his mental vision in certain cases.

Yours very respectfully,

S. BROWN

Zanesville, April 2, 1847.

Written for the Western Recorder.

DEAR BR. BASSETT: In your paper of the 18th of March you acknowledge, what you please to call "a short reply to a Pioneer of the Temper- ance cause," and say you hope the "Doctor will excuse us for laying it aside." This is all well enough provided it suits all parties concerned, but this is not exactly the case. I am not satis fied, and I will give you the reason why.

I did not ask you to publish my letter, but I asked for the true name of the "Pioneer of the Temperance cause." Now, Sir, I have not the honor of being a member of the "Sons of Temper- ance," but I do know that great good has been done by that order in my own town. Drunkards that were considered as forever lost, have been reclaimed by the efforts of the "Sons of Temper- ance," and are now good members, both of the church and the society in which they live. And it is not a single isolated case, but there are more than a dozen in Mansfield and immediate vicinity that are now steady, industrious men, that before the organization of the sons of Tem- perance in said town, were considered to all hu- man appearance to be irreclaimable, & every body here is ready to award the honor to the Sons of Temperance as being the means of their salva- tion.

But aside from all this, I think that where an individual comes out in the public prints, and especially in a Religious paper, and denounces a large and respectable portion of community com- posed of many of our most pious clergy as well as statesmen and good and honest citizens, as be- ing "Murderers," Traitors, and dishonest, "leagued against government," and the like, that it is nothing more than right that the public shall know his name, and he not be permitted to slan- der them under an assumed or ficticious name.

Therefore, I shall not feel exactly satisfied unless you either give the true name of Pioneer or publish my letter you acknowledge you have received, &c. Although I am pretty good natur- ed and shall not quarrel with you or Pioneer, I shall feel better to have my request granted.

Is Pioneer ashamed of his name?

Yours, JOSEPH HILDRETH.

Mansfield, March 29th, 1847.

Written for the Western Recorder.

BR. BASSETT: It is not my intention to write you a lengthy letter, for I suppose from some speci- mens I see in the Recorder, on subjects not the most interesting, you must be tired of them long before this time. I simply wish to make an en- quiry.

In the Recorder of the date of March 4th, I find an article signed "A Pioneer in the Temper- ance cause."——

My enquiry is, who is this "Pioneer in the Temperance cause?" Where does he dwell, and what is his name. Please, inform us, Mr. Editor. I hope the Pioneer will not object to it, for Sir I have some misgivings about that Pioneer. I think likely secrecy suits him the best, and I should think likely the reason why he dislikes secret societies is that he cant find one —— enough to admit him a member.

I merely want the public to know who he is, and that will be a sufficient answer to all that he has said about "Mr. Smallwood's Temperance Address." To answer him in any other way would be exceedingly difficult. Why, Sir, his production reminds me of "a certain story I once heard of an Irishman." There was a child born in old Ireland, and by the careful management of his parents he grew "to the age and stature of a man, and in the course of human events he got married. Well, what then? Why, Sir, in pro- cess of time a child was the fruit of that marriage, Now for the ease and comfort of all concerned, the child was put into a cradle, to sleep over night. Not being suited with its location, the child cried, which disturbed the repose of its dear mamma, upon which she called upon "John" the reputed father, to get up and whip the "baby." John gets up, lights the candle, and goes to the cradle to attend to this domestic duty, and after surveying the little offender for some time, ex- claimed, 'Peggy'—Och, Peggy, the dear little creathure, he is so small I can find no place to hit him? JOSEPH HILDRETH.

Mansfield, March 6th, 1847.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DISTRESSING ACCIDENT.—On Tuesday afternoon last, two youths, one a son of General J. Cornelius of Malta, and the other his apprentice boy, at- tempting to cross our river just above the dam, when more than two-thirds of the way over, one of the oars of their skiff became disengaged, and before they could replace it, the current together with a strong wind down stream had borne them down into the so called suck of the dam, when all their efforts to prevent their being carried over were fruitless. They were seen hanging to the skiff after it had gone over, but the violence of the waves was so great that it upset the skiff and threw them into the water. The apprentice boy after swimming down stream some distance suc- ceeded in reaching the shore, but the other was not seen afterwards Search has been made for his body, but, so far, unsuccessful.—Morgan Herald.

SAD ACCIDENT.—On the 15th ultimo, as a man named John Brooks was arranging some machin- ery in a new steam mill, at Terre Haute, Indiana, a shaft was put in motion unknown to him, and catching his leg, broke it off near the groin, and bruised the adjacent flesh in a shocking manner. The next day amputation was deemed necessary, and during the operation the patient died. He was a respectable citizen, and left a family to mourn him.

LAUDABLE.—Nicholas Longsworth, Esq., of this place, we perceive by a Boston paper, has sent one hundred dollars to a friend in that city, to be added to any fund that may be raised for the relief of the suffering in Belgium, or to be given to the Belgian Consul for that purpose. He justly remarks in the accompanying letter, that there be- ing few or no emigrants from that country to begin an excitement, no sympathy seems to have been awakened for the starving Belgians. He makes one or two sensible suggestions in addition, rela- tive to the relief of the destitute families of Irish and Scotch arriving at our seaports.—Cincinnati Commercial.

SUDDEN AND STRANGE DEATH.—Last Wednes- day evening, between 9 and 10 o'clock, a young man named Joseph Baker, fell down from the curb stone, on the north-west corner of Vine and Third streets, and almost instantly expired. He was seen to fall, and was almost immediately picked up, his feet at the time lying on the pavement, and his body across the gutter, and carried over to Gilmore's stable. Dr. Lawrence was on the spot in a moment, but the heart of the young man had ceased to beat. It is not known whether the sud- denness of the death was the result of some pecu- liar disease, or effect of the fall. He had been somewhat indisposed for several weeks back. Mr. Baker was a young man of much moral worth, just commencing a life with bright hopes and un- stained reputation. He was only twenty-four years old, and has left a mother and a mother's family to regret his loss. When death laid his hand upon him, he was returning from church. He was a Tobacconist by business, and, we believe, worked and resided with his brother on From street.—Cincinnati Commercial, April 1.

JOHN W. SMITH, a member of the Iowa General Assembly, died at Iowa City on the 2d of March LIBERAL.—The Shakers in Union Village in Warren county, have contributed two thousand bushels of Corn for the starving poor of Ireland. This is laudable.

THE SMITHSONIAN COLLEGE.—The contracts are all taken. Gilbert Cameron, of this city, is one of the Contractors. The College is to be 500 feet in length, and 100 wide. James Renwick Jr., is to be the Architect, and the whole cost is limited to $210,000, and a term of five years is given for its completion. With the sad delay of the Girard College in view, we trust a proper caution will be adoped in founding this Institute. N. Y. Sun.

POWDER MILL EXPLODED.—The drying house at the Bronx River, at Hoit's Corner, near N. York, blew up on Wednesday afternoon. One man was killed and several injured. Three tons of powder were destroyed.

ANOTHER AGED MAN GONE.—Abraham Vander- heyden, of Troy, is dead. He was born in what was considered that city in 1767, when there were but two buildings in the place. Now it is the third or fourth rich city in the State. He always resided there, exhibiting in his life the good hon- est Dutch character of our New York ancestors.

SHIP BURNT AT SEA.—The whale ship Black- stone, of Mystic, Ct., out since July 25, 1845, was destroyed by fire on the night of January 18. Seven of the crew reached San Salvador, in Cen- tral America, but the other eighteen had not been heard of.

The Missionary Spirit of our American youth in religious as well as governmental and commer- cial affairs, is forming a powerful element in the civilization and enlightenment of the world. It is emphatically "the spirit of the age." We see it stated by the American Board of Missions that thirty-four heathen cities or villages in India have recently applied for teachers, and the number of young men desiring to go out as missionaries af- fords reason to believe that teachers can readily be obtained. In the Union Theological Semina- ry in this city alone, twenty-six of the students are preparing for distant countries. The Amer- ican Board recently appointed 20 new missiona- ries, in addition to the number sent out within a few months past.—N. Y. Sun.

ACCIDENTAL DROWNING.—Mr. Lynch in return- ing from the Squawbetty iron works, four miles out of Taunton, at 12 o'clock, Saturday night, ac- cidentally stepped off the bridge and was drown- ed. The night was very dark.

Education necessary to Happiness.

That there is a kind and degree of happiness enjoyed by persons destitute of cultivation and improvement, is to be admitted. But it is a hap- piness of the lowest character, and most limited extent. Education opens to its possessor new sources of enjoyment. It affords delightful em- ployment for each and all the powers of the mind. It presents questions on which his reasoning fac- ulties may exert the utmost of their abilities.— It furnishes subjects on which his contemplation may dwell, until his soul is ravished with intellec- tual beauties, and his mind filled with the most ec- static delights. It spreads out before him an exten- ded field of amaranthine flowers, through which his imagination may rove and constantly inhale celestial fragrance. Indeed, as the poet express- es it, a cultivated and well furnished mind, will find "Tongues in trees, books in the running brooks, Sermons in stones, and good in every thing."

And these sources of intellectual pleasures are per- vading and abiding. When once these fountains are unsealed, their streams ever flow. They wind their way alongside the thorny path of life, across the sterile vale of poverty, through the narrow defiles between our mountains of difficul- ties, and fail not until they empty themselves into eternity's ocean. Wherever they pass along, they fertilize the soil, vegetate the most delicious fruits, and afford the most refreshing draughts.— And these streams the scorching influence of ad- versity can never dry up, and the hoary frosts of age can never conceal.

Education elevates the character of our enjoy- ments. As we have before said, the enjoyments of the ignorant are of the lowest order. They are more sensual; more the enjoyments of the body than of the mind; more the gratifications of the animal than the pleasures of the man. And to compare the enjoyments of the ignorant and vulgar, with the refined pleasures and elevated enjoyments of the cultivated mind, is to prefer being an animal to being an angel; to value our flesh and blood more than our spirit; and "to ele- vate the war horse above the Washington." The intellectual pleasures of knowledge are as much superior to the coarse gratifications of the ignor- ant, as reason is superior to instinct, or as mind is superior to matter.

Education, at the same time that it multiplies the sources of our enjoyment and elevates the character of our pleasures, enlarges our capaci- ties to enjoy. If, then, we would render the ri- sing generation happy, we must afford them the advantages of education, inasmuch as they pos- sess an appetite that can only be satisfied with "angel's food," and a thirst that can only be slaked by drinking, and drinking deep, at "the Pierian spring."—Bishop Janes.

WHAT ARE BUBBLES.

BY SUSAN PINDA.

What are bubbles?" asked a child,
Gazing with bewildered eyes,
On the spheres of fairy form,
Glittering with the rainbow dies;
"They seem to sail so gently on,
Yet when I grasp them they are gone."

What are bubbles?—careless boy,
Thou asked a question rife,
With a stern meaning deeply trac'd
On the varied page of life.
And a voice with sadness fraught,
Answers from the cells of thought.

Hopes are bubbles born to burst
When their hues the brightest seem:
And the joys that o'er our path
Scatter a delusive gleam,
Like bubbles sparkling in the sun,
Are only bright when shone upon.

Fame, ambition, the delights
We have longed for years to clasp,
Won at length, through toil and strife,
Perish in our eager grasp;
Grief and gladness, pleasure, troubles,
All alike are empty bubbles.

Life's bubble, bright and brief,
And its ever changing dyes
With a purer brilliance glows,
As it mounts towards the skies;
Till wafted on Time's passing breath,
'Tis shattered by the touch of Death.

New Subscribers this week, 8. Discontinuances, 30

We have this week, at the middle of the volume, reluc- tantly left off a considerable number of delinquents, as well as a few, at their request, at the expiration of their time.

Br. Caddy, the extras were sent as requested.

Br. S. Fulton, we credit A. Rhoten and yourself, $2 each. Is that right? We assure you that your papers are regularly mailed, every week, and not 2 or 3 at a time, and sometimes not at all, which you tell us is the way you receive them. We see by our exchanges, that other publishers experience the same trouble, from the irregu- larity of the mails. We regret these things. Tell us what numbers you never received, and we will try and send them again.

Br. Jonathan Monroe, all right again. Br. R. H. Wal- kers, ditto.

Br. G. Williams, you say that the paper does not come to Z. G. as ordered! We say that the paper has been regularly put up and sent for him as ordered, for twelve weeks past. We cannot account for his failure to re- ceive, and fear that we shall get discouraged in sending either pamphlets or papers to the St. Joseph country, if it is equivalent to throwing them away.

Br. O. V. Warren, the books (save the Melodeans) are sent as requested to care of N. Springer, M'Connellsville.

The P. M. at Centerville, Tyler, Va., notifies us that the paper of J. T. Lacey, is not taken from the post office, he having removed to Bound Creek, Richie Co. Va. Now this subscriber owes us for one volume and a half of our paper, and the same amount to the former publisher. Our agent, will please collect our dues for us from him.

Br. J. Carnes, N. Richmond, we are glad you have discovered the omission. When we see Br. S. we will try and have all adjusted. Thank you for your obliging letter.

In answer to the enquiry of a minister of a distant con- ference, we state that we will with pleasure continue sending him our paper at $1, in advance. We only fur- ther say, is it fair, that he should reduce even this sum to 90 and perhaps 80 cents by requiring us to pay postage?

☞Distant subscribers to the Western Recorder, can make payment for us to the Book Agent, Baltimore, if it better suit their convenience, he having kindly consented to receive and credit for us.

From Godey's Lady's Book.

THE COMING OF SPRING.

BY WILLIAM H. HOLCOMB

The ice-crown of Winter has melted away,
The sunbeams are out in their golden array,
The snow on the path of the waters so free,
Has glided in foam to the caves of the sea.

A breeze is abroad with a whisper as sweet
As a voice from the south that would gladden & greet,
And bring from the garden of sunlight and flowers
A breath of that clime as a token to ours.

And soon will the leaves of the forest appear,
And the green branches wave in the bright atmosphere,
And far distant mountains, that limit the eye,
In blue mantles gleam through the haze of the sky.

Then like a picture, the meadow around
Will start into bloom, and the rivulet's sound
Come forth from the herbage that tangles its brim—
The olden, unceasing, melodious hymn.

The buds of the morn will, crystaled in dew,
But spread their sweet bosoms at noon to the view;
The white clouds will garnish, not darken the day,
And sunshine to starlight fade gently away.

The Spirits of Beauty, whose footprints we see
In roses and lilies impressed on the lea,
Will linger around us, and kindly impart
The youth and the gladness of Spring to the heart.

THE STING OF DEATH IS SIN.—1 COR. xv. 56.

BY WILLIAM COWPER, ESQ.
(Not inserted in his works.)

"Felix qui potuit rerum cognoscere causas."

Thankless for favors from on high,
Man thinks he fades to soon,
Though 'tis his privilege to die,
Would he improve the boon?

But not wise enough to scan
His best concerns aright,
Would gladly stretch life's little span
To ages—if he might.

To ages in a world of pain:
To ages, where he goes!
Gall'd by affliction's heavy chain,
And hopeless of repose.

Strange fondness of the human heart—
Enamor'd of its harm;
Strange world, that costs them so much smart
And yet has power to charm!

Whence has the world its magic power?
Why deem we death a foe?
Recoil from weary life's best hour,
And court a longer woe?

The cause is conscience, conscience oft
Her tale of guilt renew:
Her voice a terrible, though soft—
And dread of death ensues!

Then anxious to be longer spread,
Man mourns his fleeting breath;
All evil then seems light; compared
With the approach of death!

'Tis judgment shakes!—there is the fear
That prompts his wish to say:
He has incurred a long arrear
And must despair to pay!

Pay!—Follow Christ and all is paid,
His death your peace ensures—
Think on the grave where He has laid!
And calm descend to yours.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Again we are called upon to record more of Death's doings among us.

SISTER CATHARINE A. EDMUNSON, after a lingering and painful illness, fell asleep in Jesus, on the morning of March 5th, inst., in the 38th year of her age.

The writer of this article knows but little of her history, but it appears she was born in Baltimore, where she abode till after her marriage. And with her husband, in 1833, removed to this city. She embraced religion in 1837, and united with the Methodist Protestant Church, where she remained a worthy member till the day of her death, while her husband, a very exemplary christian, is a member of the Methodist Epis. Church.

During her protracted affliction, I visited her very often. Her exercises of mind were various; at times elevated with blissful emotions, and could shout glory to God, for hours at a time; then, anon, chequered with clouds of darkness, and depressed with doubts and fears. This variation, however, we regarded—not as indicative of a dubious spiritual state, or of instability of character, but attributable rather to the peculiarities of the disease, as the cause. It is true, faithful self-examination in the earlier stages of her ailment, disclosed to her mind clearly (though a very moral and regular living woman) her deficiencies as a christian, and need of a more thorough work of grace, to fit her for death and heaven. This she earnestly sought, and happily found. The Lord powerfully and gloriously blessed her, and she enjoyed for some time the clearest evidence of her acceptance, and the full earnest of the Spirit. But as her disease increased, she relapsed into doubts and darkness, and another triumph cost another conflict. Finally, considering the cause of these alternate shades to be sought rather in the peculiarities of her complaint, than the violent assaults of Satan, I consulted a celebrated Medical Professor, at that time in the city, who inclined to the same opinion, though he said it might be occasioned by powerful temptation. I inquired of him respecting the natural influence of diseases on certain passions of the mind.

Pulmonary complaints, generally, he said, struck the chord of hope; but in this case, (a species of consumption,) it might be, by some mysterious law of nature, that the chord of despair had been touched.

We agreed in our belief that the Lord would grant her final victory. And so he did. The writer saw her the evening before she died, and left her in a comfortable state of mind. Early next morning, sensible her end was nigh, she wished to see her sister (who was living with her, and waiting on her during her illness,) soon she was at the bed side, but she was too tightly embraced in the icy arms of Death, to speak what she evidently wished to say. She waived her hand in token of triumph, and labored in feebleness to show what she could not speak, that she was going up!—up!—up!—to the bright abodes of bliss. So died our beloved Sister, Catharine Ann Edmunson.

SISTER MARGARET SCOTT,

Consort of Br. Isaiah Scott, of this Station, departed this life on Dec. 13th, 1846.

She and her husband were both Methodists in Ireland. They emigrated to this country many years ago: He came over in 1810, and she sometime before that. They both brought certificates from their native land; and, in this country, united with the Episcopal Methodist Church. In the year 1812, they were united in the bonds of matrimony, and continued in the Old Church till the secession in this city, when,—believing in the correctness and importance of the principles of the Protestants, they came boldly out, and nobly breasted the storm which, in those days; "tried men's souls." I find both of their names in the Church Record at the organization of this Station, in the spring of 1829, in class No. 4., C. Craig, Leader, George Brown, Supt.

Sister Scott was the subject of considerable bodily affliction, but she continued steadfast in her profession of faith in Christ, and a Methodist of the real old-fashioned stamp.

In her last illness, as the solemn hour of dissolution was hastening on, she was asked by a member of the family, if she could give up her friends? This was a hard question for a heart like hers. She loved in true Hibernian earnest, for when they love, they love indeed. With a gust of feeling she replied, in true characteristic regard to her companion.—"How can I give him up, who has been so kind to me so many years? I never had to ask him twice for any thing. No! I cannot give him up, but the Lord may take me, if he pleases."

She had evidently overcome the "fear of death," and possessed a joyous hope of heaven; but her affection for her friends seemed to draw like cords around her heart.

Her experience upon her dying bed, is accurately described in the following poetic lines, by CAROLINE BOWLES, on the motto "IT IS NOT DEATH." The 1st & 6th stanzas in the poem.

"It is not Death—it is not Death,
From which I shrink with coward fear;
It is, that I must leave behind
All I love here."

"But there are Friends—but there are Friends,
To whom I could not say, "Farewell!"
Without a pang more hard to bear
Than tongue can tell."

Yet she could triumph in the Lord, and glory in the God of her salvation. And, without doubt, she is now—where "the wicked cease from troubling, and there the weary be at rest.

MRS. ELIZABETH WAGGONER.

BR. BASSETT: The great dispenser of blessings implanted in me a constitutional veneration for aged persons, and especially for our Fathers and Mothers in Israel. Now I deem this a blessing, and I feel disposed to spread their praise among the living when they are no more. I desire to give your readers some accouut of an old Lady, Mrs. Elizabeth Waggoner, who died in our Village not long since. She was a cousin of the late distinguished—General Andrew Jackson. The General fought his country's Battles, she her Savior's. She entered her master's service about the time of our Revolution, or soon after, at least, while quite young. And such was her love for the sanctuary, and the blessings of christian organization, that, the marked consistency of her life, made her to be praised and beloved of all ages, and sexes by whom she was known. In the Providence of God she was united in holy wedlock in early life, to Mr. Edward Waggoner, and in the course of time they were blessed with a considerably large family of sons & daughters. The care of these fell entirely upon Mrs. Waggoner, as the Lord in his providence called her husband from time to eternity. With him I was not acquainted and cannot give an account of his life or death. But in 1828 or 29, I became acquainted with the old lady and her family. About that time she lived where our Village now stands. The church of which she was a member met at Beavertown, & though I was then young, my mind was forcibly struck with the promptitude with which this widowed mother led her charge to the house of the Lord. But there was another circumstance of her life which then affected my heart most; viz. her untiring effort, and above all, the manifest gratification which pervaded her soul, when she made sale of the work of her hands, so as to obtain wherewith to pay her minister, for teaching (as she said) her and her family the way to the Heavenly Inheritance. The result of her example, prayers and admonitions brought every member of her family into full communion with the church, and universal esteem among the good, and honorable of our neighborhood.—But some of her children were removed from earth in blissful hope of immortality.

But as touching what I think the most interesting history of this charming saint, in the year 1832, probably in October, her intrinsic christian value was more fully developed than previously. Our village at that time was composed of board shanties, and as you are doubtless aware, religious ship-carpenters were then comparatively few; but in the number of our citizens we numbered some six or eight praying Methodists, and this amiable Presbyterian old sister Waggoner. We had our pray er meetings regularly, and class on Sabbath. The Most High blessed us most signally, though a drunken mob kept up a strong persecution by surrounding our shanty during our meetings, annoying us in our devotions by hideous noises, and by shooting fire arms; still the Lord stood by us, and the work of grace prospered. Numbers increased and the victory turned on the Lord's side. Now comes the note of interest. The Cholera broke out and the leader of the mob was the first siezed with this scourge of God. This poor young man, though racked with excruciating pain, in four short hours saw that his immortal part was doomed to fiercer pain. O, 'twas then he sought the prayers of those he had persecuted and mocked scarce forty hours before. The alarm of cholera was spread abroad, all terror struck; none willing to risk the epidemic at first shock, except mother Waggoner, myself and Br. J. N. Bebout, to pray for and with him. Br. B. was opposed at the instant to making any effort, on the occasion from his disbelief in death-bed repentance, and could not join in our devotions at first, yet his presence was a prop for me to encourage to duty.—My mind runs back to the moment when the writhing, rolling, screaming object with horror-stricken countenance depicted with despair, shrieked out as we stood by his side, Oh! pray for me, or I'm damned. I was so stunned that I did not instantly comply. But this matron saint with calmness of soul, though burning for his redemption urged me, weak worn as I was, to join her in prayer in his behalf. We fell upon our knees side by side and began to pray. Though at first no one would expect our voices to be heard for his screams, we prayed for but a few moments, when he ceased to wail in agony of body and joined us in prayer; and soon the Master answered by sealing his forgiveness.

He praised his all-forgiving God for about one hour and half and then closed his life of suffering to suffer no more, but join in shouting a welcome to mother Waggoner when she crossed the stream.—

But all is not told of her piety; she walked circumspectly before the Lord, always recommending her Saviour, and his Religion, on proper occasions and bearing about her the dying of her lowly Saviour. I think it not too much to say of her, that through her instrumentality a church of her choice was raised in our village, and a large congregation communed with her some several times ere her death. And for all this she gave glory to God.

I will only further mention the close of her life. She was greatly afflicted of a lingering disease for four or five months, and for some weeks before her departure she presented nothing but a breathing skeleton, though she posse ssed more, for her emaciated countenance seemed lit up with the glory of the Lord. I had the pleasure of visiting her after, and do not remember to have heard her utter a murmur. She desired only to praise the Saviour. She always had something good to tell one concerning her merciful Father I had the unspeakable honor of praying with her at every visit and she always joined us in singing the hymn and sang all through except the last visit, when she could not see. nor hear or speak intelligibly. But she repeatedly clasped her hands upraised, to give fully significant signs that she crossed death's dark stream, shouting & fearlessly.

The death of Mrs. Waggoner, took place on the 14th of July, 1846, at the advanced age of 73. She was truly a saint of the Lord, and her pious example, I trust, will long be remembered by many. May we faithfully follow her steps, that we may be partakers of that rest and peace, which she has gone to enjoy forever. This imperfect sketch is furnished for the benefit of those who survive. Yours in chrisuian love,

GEO. S. WEBSTER.

MRS. JULIA ANN REESE.

Our sister, consort of Rev. Levi R. Reese, has fallen asleep in Jesus. Her happy spirit took its flight on Wednesday morning about 8 o'clock. A more triumphant death-scene it has never been our privilege to witness. For days she had been so exceedingly feeble, that no one was admitted to her chamber, except the physicians and the necessary attendants; but on the night previous to her departure she became stronger, and requested the presence of several relatives and friends. When we entered the room, a brother was engaged in prayer. The voice of the dying responded in clear and audible tones, and on rising from our knees, she requested her husband to repeat to her the encouraging language of Peter—"Blessed be the God & Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again to a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance, incorruptible, undefiled and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for them that are kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation." She repeated these words herself again and again, with great composure and unwavering confidence. For some two hours we remained, the witness of her exultation. She declared that death had no terror to her. Jesus had been with her, was still with her, and would be with her to the end. She joined with a clear, loud voice in the singing of appropriate hymns; admonished all who surrounded her to greater faithfulness: requested her class-leader, who was present, to deliver her dying words of encouragement and trust in Christ to her class-mates, and spoke of her departure with as much composure, as if she were going on a short and pleasant journey. What a power is there in religion! God grant to the writer and all who were present, a death as peaceful and serene!

To our bereaved brother and the numerous relatives of the deceased, we feel assured that this affliction will be very heavy. But their sorrow is not without hope. The departed is with Jesus! "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord: yea, saith the Spirit, for they rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."—Methodist Protestant, 27th March.

HORRORS OF INTEMPERANCE.—The dwelling house of Caleb Russel, in West Hurley, Ulster county, N. Y., was destroyed by fire on Saturday night, and Mr. Russel, while in a state of intoxication, perished in the flames. A grandson of Mr. Russel, about five years old, the only other inmate of the house at the time, made his escape unhurt. When he discovered that the house was on fire he implored his Grandfather to escape but the unfortunate man, not being able to realize the extent of his danger, refused, and perished a victim to liquor.

LOCAL PREACHERS.

This class of men, among the Methodists, have from the first introduction of Methodism into North America, been styled local preachers, because they were settled or stationary, in contradistinction to itinerant, or travelling preachers. This distinction was, in the early history of Methodism on this continent, clear, consistent, and well understood. A local preacher was limited in his sphere of action, devoting such portion of time and labor to the ministry of the word, as health and temporal interests and duties allowed, and that without fee or reward! A travelling preacher was such in reality; they were required, by the discipline, to "devote themselves wholly to God and his work"—"to employ all their time in the work of God"—and to them it was said—"you have nothing to do but to save souls." This plan, as instituted by the founder of Methodism, and as practiced in America, was in its first stages, purely missionary—frequent change, and interchange, was the common order. And the privilege of raising, organizing, and governing societies, seemed to be conceded to this class of ministers, on the ground of their being, and continuing to be really itinerant, or "wholly devoted to God and his work"—who were pledged to employ all their time in the work of God."

The first Methodist societies formed on this continent, were formed by local preachers—the first in New York, by Phillip Embury, in the year 1766—and the second in Maryland, about the same time, by Robert Strawbridge. The first Methodist preacher, who preached and raised societies, in Kentucky, the then "far West," about the year 1780, was Francis Clarke, a local preacher from Virginia—no itinerant preachers visiting that region until the year 1786. Thus it appears, that local preachers, were pioneers of Methodism, in some, nay I might add, in many important instances, known to men of age and experience. And yet, local preachers, have been strangely kept in the back ground while itinerancy has manifestly deteriorated! When "the united societies"—which organized with local preachers in America were constituted, "an independent church"—were local preachers consulted? Did they participate in the deliberations of 1784–5? Nothing of this appears—nor is there any evidence, that people or societies were consulted, agreeably to the usage of the primitive church, "in matters of moment." It was many years after ordination was common to travelling preachers, before local preachers could be ordained to deacons' or elders' orders. And why was this, and other privileges, claimed and enjoyed by the so called travelling preachers, submitted to, and conceded? Manifestly, because travelling preachers, were pledged, "to devote themselves wholly to God and his work." It was not dreamed of, that men as local, or more so, than Embury, Webb, Strawbridge, Francis Clark, should claim the immunities and privileges, and name of travelling preachers or that men moving in a small circle, for ten, fifteen or twenty years—or located in a seminary of learning, or printing office, &c. &c., would claim that from which, ministers less local, and more extensively useful are excluded!

Presidentships, and professorships in colleges—editorships, agencies, and the business of secretary and treasurer, where finances are concerned, much, and most of which is secular—and delegates to the rule, or law-making department, are immunities, which belong exclusively to those, who by a misnomer, are styled "travelling preachers"—many of whom, are local and secular, in their sphere of action—but for such trusts, local preachers, so called, and laymen are practically adjudged unfit or incomptent. While the system retained its original form which was purely missionary, really itinerant,—While societies were raised, regulated, and members admitted, or dismissed, according to the letter, spirit, and design of "the general rules," "to raise a holy people". While a simple, illdigested, and even defective, and arbitrary church polity, remained in the hands of a pure missionary ministry, dead to the world, and deeply devoted to God. While there were no inducements, for secular, mercenary men, or useless drones to cleave to the itinerant connexion, or follow for the loaves and fishes. While rules, which still are found in the form of discipline especially adapted to travelling preachers now, practically obsolete, or a dead letter, were scrupulously, and conscientiously observed. While the plain garb, and devoted zeal, of itinerant preachers, were known and read of all men.' In this state of things, local preachers, whether raised up such, or, as the phrase, then was, "located through weakness of body or family concerns,"—while they 'ministered to their wants with their own hands,' cheerfully suffered privations conceded to travelling preachers, peculiar privileges and immunities, and aided in every possible way, in advancing the cause, and holding up the hands of real itinerants—I know what I say—experience and observation form the basis of these statements. Having traversed the Western frontier and the mountain regions, as well as the middle and low lands of Virginia and North Carolina—and again the "far West." Worn down and located in 1805, in Tennessee—travelling preachers scarce and young;—few, very few local preachers—I handled the axe, the plow, and hoe, and preached the gospel more, and to more willing hearers, than many now called travelling preachers—and yet, to help on the travelling plan, I acted as steward—out of my small means paid quarterage, &c. This however is all forgotten, by men who have risen up, 'who know not Joseph'—or who have entered into the labors of other men, made ready to their hands. The time arrived, unfortunately, when a change of men—of measures—and a sad deterioration, in original itinerancy occurred—numerical strength, and that bane of the church, wealth, spread their withering influence! Just what Mr. Wesley predicted. And now, by arbitrary measures—"Episcopal decisions," &c., &c., local preachers, may be ciphers,—nay worse than ciphers, tried and disfranchised, without an impartial trial by a committee of his peers—and where is the remedy? I thank God, that this sort of tyranny has spent its force on me & that I am now beyond its reach—I am glad, that the Methodist Protestant Church, learned lessons from experience—and that the privileges of her ministers and members, are better secured, by a judicious, and well timed constitution.—May God preserve, that church from such pernicious influences, as are undermining that once pure, and efficient itinerant or missionary system.

DEATH IN A BALL ROOM.

One beautiful, but keenly cold evening in January, a young gentleman entered Dr. C——'s office, (with whom I was spending a vacation) and hurriedly enquired where he should find the Doctor.

Not being able to inform him, he requested me to accompany him down street to H———'s hotel, as there was a young lady in the ball room very ill.

Supposing it a fainting fit, I clapped a bottle of hartshorn, together with a lancet into my pocket, and accompanied him.

On the way he informed me as I already knew, that a ball was in progress at the hall and had been interrupted by the unfortunate illness of one of the belles of the evening.

Arriving at the hotel, we were somewhat surprised by the rapid filling and driving away of the carriages at the door.

We caught, now and then, an exclamation that betokened extreme terror, but heard nothing sufficiently distinct to admit of forming a conclusion as to the cause of the apparent confusion.

Passing up the stairs, we encountered numbers of young ladies, with their mantles thrown carelessly about them, with cheeks as pale, and lips as bloodless as though themselves were the subjects for whom aid was summoned.

They were hurrying away as from contamination, the hilarity of the occasion having been suddenly exchanged for mute terror.

Hurrying through the crowd, we entered the ball room. It was very spacious, and brilliantly lighted, but deserted of its occupants, save a group in the centre who seemed horror-stricken by the sight humanity compelled them to remain to witness.

On a sofa, which had been drawn from the side of the room, sat a young lady, in a stooping posture, as though in the act of rising, with one hand stretched out to take that of the partners, who was to have led her to the dance.

With the smile upon her lip, and eyes beaming with excitement, death had seized her. The smile of joy was tansformed to a hideous grin; the beaming eye, now seemed but a glazed mass protruding from the socket.

The carmine added to give brilliancy to her complexion, now contrasted strangely with the sallow hue, her skin had assummed while the georgeous trappings, in which fashion had decked her, seemed but a mocking of the habiliments of the grave.

Death under such circumstances was horrible. No wonder the pale mother as she knelt beside her child, groaned out. "Not here! not here!—Let her die at home!"

We had arrived too late to render aid. The spirit had fled, and all that could be done was to to remove the body, and strip it of its senseless paraphernalia. This horrible catastrophe was one of those striking acts of Providence, by which we are forewarned that Death claims all seasons for his own. When the young and beautiful, surrounded by the consolations of religion depart in the triumphs of a christian faith, we bow ourselves to the stroke, and believe that the seraph has passed from among us, to mingle with the pure above.

But a sudden dispensation, like the one above leaves a shadow upon the hearts of survivers, no after scene can describe. Do they mingle with the merry dances? In the midst of their festivity comes the awful phantom of the past.

In the silence of their own chambers, they weep for the departed, and seek in vain, in memory's store-house, for some fond message, whispered from the bloodless lips, as the spirit sighed itself away.

"Not here! not here!—let her die at home!" would be the exclamation of any mother, were she to stand thus. by her only child: while the only response vouchsafed, would be found in the soul-harrowing exclamation of those around, "dead! dead! dead! and in a ball room!"—Northern Budget.

From Goodrich's Pictorial History of England.

The celebrated Gun-powder Plot, in the Reign of James I.

"The Roman Catholics had expected great indulgences from James, on his mother's account, but they found, to their great chagrin, that he was no less steady than Elizabeth had been, to the cause of the Protestants.

"To this disappointment was owing the famous Gun-Powder Plot. Two Catholic gentlemen, named Percy and Catesby, being in conversation about public affairs, became highly excited, and in their heat, agreed to attempt the destruction of the King, Lords, and Commons at one stroke. This was to be done by blowing up the Parliament House with gun-powder, at a time when the Lords and Commons should have met together to hear the speech which the King makes at the opening of each session.

"The design was communicated to a few persons, and Guy Fawks, a man of known courage and zeal, who was then serving as an officer in the Spanish army, was sent for to aid in its execution. Percy hired the building next the Parliament House, and the conspirators began to undermine the wall between the two houses.—After they had worked some time, they learned that the cellar of the Parliament House was to let.

"This was exactly what they wished. Percy at once hired it, for the ostensible purpose of storing fuel. Thirty-six barrels were secretly placed in it, and covered over with the faggots and billets of wood. To complete the deception, the doors were boldly kept open, and every body admitted, as if it contained nothing dangerous.

"The secret, though intrusted to about twenty persons, had been kept secret for near a year and a half, during which time there had been no meeting of the Parliament. At length the members were ordered to assemble on the 5th of November, 1605. A few days before the time appointed for meeting, Lord Monteagle received a letter from an unknown hand, begging him not to be present at the opening of Parliament.

"It warned him not to think lightly of this advice; 'for though there was no appearance of any stir, yet they will receive a terrible blow this Parliament, yet they shall not see who hurts them.' Monteagle knew not what to think of this letter, and showed it to Lord Saltsbury, who was not inclined to pay much attention to it, but who, nevertheless, laid it before the King.

"The King had sagacity enough to perceive from its earnest style, that something importa[nt] was meant; and this forwarning of a sudden a[nd] terrible blow, yet with the authors conceale[d] made his suspicions come very near the tru[th] The day before the meeting of Parliament, [he] sent the Earl of Suffolk to examine all the cell[ars] under the buildings where they were to asse[m]ble.

"Suffolk was surprised to see so many piles [of] wood and faggots in the cellar under the hou[se] of Lords, and was struck also with the dark a[nd] mysterious countenance of Guy Fawkes, w[ho] called himself Mr. Percy's servant. Suffolk d[e]parted, however, without giving any intimati[on] of his suspicions, but resolved to make a mo[re] thorough search at an hour when the conspir[a]tors would probably be making their last prepar[a]tions.

"Accordingly, about midnight, a party of of[fi]cers proceeded to the cellar. Near the door th[ey] seized Guy Fawks dressed in a cloak and boo[ts] and carrying a dark lantern; and in his pocke[ts] were found matches and every thing requisite f[or] setting fire to the powder. On turning over t[he] faggots, the barrels of gunpowder were discov[er]ed. Fawkes at first appeared undaunted, but [his] courage afterwards failed him, and he made a f[ull] confession.

"Percy, Catesby, and some others fled in[to] Warwickshire, where Sir Everard Digby, ano[th]er of the band had already taken up arms, [in] confident was he that the "terrible blow" h[ad] been given in London. The country was so[on] roused against the criminals, who took refuge [in] one of those fortified houses, so common at th[at] day."

"But the same fate awaited them which the[y] had designed for so many others. Their gu[n] powder took fire, and blew up, maiming and d[e]stroying several of them. The rest rushed o[ut] upon the multitude, and were literally cut to piece[s] except a few who were taken alive, and afterward[s] tried and executed.

The 5th of November, or Popes day, as it [is] called, is still observed as a holyday in Englan[d] and was also observed in this country so long [as] it remained in a state of dependence upon Gre[at] Britain. One of the most noisy observances [of] the day is the burning of the Guy Fawkes [in] effigy. But the bundle of rags which serves [as] his representative, by no means does him ju[s]tice."

"We are told that during his trial and impri[so]nment he was richly apparelled, to the gre[at] scandal of the people; some, it is said, were e[s]pecially indignant at him "for taking tobacco o[ut] of measure;" tobacco being then a novelty, was doubtless considered too great a luxury for [a] traitor.

DIRECTIONS.

1. On receipt of this Prospectus, let the Old subscriber at every Post-office, appoint one of their number, or som[e] other suitable person, an Agent. Let him send us, at onc[e] as many names and as much money as possible. In cas[es] where substantial agents make themselves responsible [for] their subscribers, this responsibility will be regarded [as] equivalent to payment in advance—provided they sett[le] their accounts within six months. Even in such cases, however, immediate payments are decidedly preferabl[e], and, to encourage them, the commissions to agents a[re] arranged thus:—On cash orders, 25 per cent.: on defer[r]ed remittances, 12½ per cent.

2. As the Prospectus will be widely distributed, let a[ll] persons who see it, and feel an interest in it, act promptly in the manner described above. It is thought that [a] little effort will be sufficient to procure a company, or clu[b] at almost any Post-office in the Union. The times in[-]creasingly demand just such a publication as is propose[d].

Address,—W. S. STOCKTON, General Agent, Philade[l]phia, Pa.: or either of the Associate Editors. All orde[rs] will be punctually attended to.

WELLMAN'S ILLUSTRATED BOTANY.

VOL. II., 1847.

EDITED BY J. D. COMSTOCK, M. D.

Author of Botany, Natural Philosphy, Chemistry, Mineralogy, Geology, Natural History, Phyliology, etc., assisted BY J. C COMSMOCK, ESQ.

THE success of the Illustrated Botany is no longer a experiment, for altho' it has been in existence but on[e] year, it already has a circulation of about five thousand, a sufficient number to warrant its support, which cannot b[e] said of any other work of the kind. Indeed, it is the onl[y] work of this character published in this country, whic[h] promises stability and a long life. We think the prospec[ts] of the second year of the Botany are very flattering. On[e] reason for this opinion is, the fact that it is now very po[p]ular, having a large circle of friends. Another very im[-]portant reason is, the securing of an Editor for the comi[ng] year, whose popularity as an author in the various branch[-]es of Natural Science, is so extensive as to leave his nam[e] familiar to every student in the sciences in this countr[y]. We are fully satisfied that the Botany will, under its pre[s]ent Editors, bear the severest criticism, and we intend th[at] it shall become the standard work.

In the course of its publication, it will contain an Intr[o]duction to the Natural System of Botany, a thorou[gh] Treatise on the interesting and important branch of Ve[g]etable Physiology, Notices on Fossil Botany, and descri[p]tions, both scientific and popular, of numerous species [of] plants, the properties of which, medicinal and useful, w[ill] be fully explained. In short it is intended to present a co[m]plete view of the latest and most important facts, discov[e]ries, and theories, in every department of the science.

The whole illustrated by splendid colored engravin[gs] taken from Nature, full size, and finished the highest st[yle] of modern art.

This work is designed to be eminently popular in its a[p]plication, and there is enough of that which is strang[er] than fiction about it to render it, in no ordinary degr[ee] interesting and instructive,

We do not intend to confine ourselves to the botani[cal] descriptions of each plant, but to make it a thoroughly s[ci]entific work, in all the departments of Botany. It w[ill] also give information on the cultivation of plants and flo[w]ers. In a word, it will comprise the whole science.

TERMS.

This work will be published monthly, with from six [to] ten flowers, handsomely painted, in each number. Pri[ce] $3,00 a year, or two copies sent to one address for $5,[00]

☞ A very liberal discount allowed to Agents.

es and Duties of Stormy Sundays.

d hail; snow and vapors; stormy wind fulfilling his word. Psalms cxvii: 8.

L creatures and powers, in the dominion of fulfil his word and execute his command-

Nay, they have all a voice to praise him, re rightly invoked by the Psalmist to unite ir common hymn before him. Angels and enly hosts—sun and moon and stars of light aven of heavens and waters above the heav- -dragons and all deeps—mountains, hills, ful trees, cedars—beasts and all cattle, creep- ings and flying fowl—kings and all people, es and judges—young men and maidens, nen and children. And, among the rest, we included all the flying artillery of the weath- ghtning and hail, snow and vapors, and stor- vind. All are summoned forth together to heir voice and roll up their anthem to the t author and Lord of their being. Let them e the name of the Lord, for his name is dlent, his glory is above the earth and heaven. here is a class among you, who visibly gh cannot sympathize with all the sentiments is glowing and lofty psalm. The principal ificance of the weather, or at least of all foul her, appears, in their estimation, to be, that it uses them from worship. The snows, and rs, and stormy wind, do not so much fulfil word of Jehovah, as call them away from word and the worship of his house. Their is sure to be vacant every stormy Sunday, too often when there is only a slight prom- f rain, or of any other kind of unpleasant ther. If the wind blows, or the walks are or covered with a little snow; if the cold is omfortable, or the heat a little too intense; if damps the air, or an east wind chills it they out an indulgence from the weather, and con- r the worship of God as relieved by a dispen- on.

o the special benefit of these, My fair weath- tearers, I now devote a discourse. I do not n, of course, to claim that every person, in y possible severity of weather, is bound to nd the house of God. Distances, feebleness of lth, the nature and degree of the exposure essary, the attendance of children and sick sons at home, are all to be considered. I in- de in the class of fair weather hearers, such as willing to be detained at home by slight ex- es. The man who would certainly go to his e of business twice or thrice in the day, if it e not Sunday, but cannot go to Church; the nan who would go abroad to enjoy a visit, or gle in a social entertainment, but cannot go he house of God, is a fair weather hearer. olence, weariness by over exertion in the suits of gain, worldliness of spirit, self-indul- ce, aversion to religious duties, sleepiness in- ed by overloading the appetites—these and er like causes breed a self-excusing spirit, and pare the fair weather hearer to seek a justifi- ion in the slightest impediments.

o such I now speak. Let me offer you ne thoughts in reference to your habit, show- you especially why it should not be indulged, why it should be corrected. If I am able to my subject in its true light, I shall, at least, vince you that the weather of your Sundays visely ordered, and so as best to promote your igious benefit. The storms and the fourth mmandment come from the same author, and hink you can be made to see that foul Sundays e an excellent appointment. So that if they re discontinued, and you were never required brave any obstacle or exposure, in going to use of God, you would suffer a great loss.

God has never gone upon the plan of having it st nothing to serve him; for he well understands at his people are most benefitted in their ser- e, when it is an expensive service, and rendered in spite of great obstacles. Ev- y thing human is invigorated by some kind contest, and all good successes are achieved as tories. Therefore it is that we are left to ave so many labors and exposures, to conquer ery sort of earthly good by stout and manful plication. Were the fields of nature only cul- ated gardens, fanned by soft breezes and wa- ed by gentle dews; were all food, shelter and thing produced by the spontaneous bounty of e world; were there no forests to clear away, rocks to remove, no sterility to fructify, no ul weather or dangers to brave, then would our ce be as feeble and spiritless as they are allow- d to be inefficient, without manly vigor, destitute all heroic energy. Had God thought us capa- e of nothing better, had he given us nothing to onquer, nothing wherein to prove our creative anhood, we might well have been ashamed of ir lot. As much ought we to be ashamed of a ligion that can bear no hardness. Having it in nd to conquer all other good to ourselves, it ould be the crowning joy of our piety that it an stiffen itself to duty by acts of patience— ght away impediments, face obstructions, and after God through all his storms.

As a matter of fact, too, you will find that the rinciple of goodness and duty is most invigora- d by that service which it costs us most of parti- acity and self-denial to perform. How rich a lessing, for example, does the new settler of our estern wilds receive, when he travels, with his mily, twenty or thirty miles to hear the Gospel reached and unite in the worship of God. He as taken pains for his object, and he goes home herishing the word in his heart, as something aluable. Not unlikely he will receive more enefit from the exercises of that one Sabbath, an he could have gained by a year of regular ttendance in a house of worship next his door. o if the Sabbath morning brings a howling snow storm, or pours a torrent of rain, then especially is the time for you to seek a blessing in the house of God. You are tempted to remain at home, but you repel the insidious arguments of self-indulgence, ashamed to let them prevail with you. For the very reason that it will cost you something to visit the house of God, you prefer to go, not doubting that the worship will be as much dearer to you, as it costs you more of self-denial and hardy resolution. In so doing, you will find your foul weather Sundays the best of the year. You will not go to the place of worship to see or to be seen. If the assembly is thin, the less will you depend on a mere social power, and the closer will you draw yourself to God. Your mind will be less distracted, your motives less confused, and the consciousness that you are there for no false reason will enable you to find a value in the exercises, otherwise difficult to realize. Need I add that your rough weather piety will be a more sturdy and hearty principle, more able to breast all manner of temptation, more competent to support you in all the storms of adversity—worthier of self-respect, and as much dearer to God as it is more dutiful and magnanimous. Whereas the piety of our fair weather worshippers, if piety it can be called—what nerve of patience or endurance has it, when will it prove itself equal to any systemic duty? It cannot even be said to be a practical principle; for it does not meet the conditions of life, and failing in this, what value has it beyond the flimsy sentimentality and fair weather pleasure in which you gratify for the time your self-indulgence? What is it but the first idea of Christian piety, that it is a power in the nature of principle, a power that links the subject to God in a steadfast union, which no changes of the outward life, no fears of wrath or storms of sorrow can subdue. And what does God give us in our stormy Sabbath but a lesson which is, in fact, the first lesson of all—that principle is a thing superior to the weather, superior to every mentionable hindrance?

Therefore it is another use of foul weather Sabbaths, that they subject you to tests which enable you to understand yourselves. Thus you are to see as often as they come, how much or little you care for God's honor and favor. If a dash of rain, or a wet pavement, keeps you at home; if you are willing to find an excuse in causes so light, then do you reveal to yourself and also to the world how little you prize communion and love the commandments of God. It is this, in fact which connects the question of going to Church with a kind of inward disturbance, of which you are more or less conscious. It creates, for the moment, a struggle of compunction in your bosoms; for you see how little love you have to the things of religion. We also look around upon your vacant seats, and behold a visible expression of your slender interest in the house of God. It is as if you sent a servant to tell us that you have concluded not to be religious to day, and to give us your vote against the worship. Which, if it be a harsh offense against God and a discouragement to his worship, ought at least to show you to yourselves, and make you understand what is in your heart. Had we none but fair Sabbaths, such that you would even be tempted to go out, because of the pleasantness of the day, then would you be present out of mere self-indulgence, and you might begin to take credit to yourselves for a real interest in the duties of religion. Every foul Sabbath has, in this view, a very serious signification. It is God's test day. Such days are wanted, and we have not one too many.

Furthermore, it is well to have foul Sabbaths that you may have fit opportunities and occasions to impress the conscence of your families with a sense of the sovereign value of religion. Mere words, apart from acts, impress nothing. Therefore God gives you a time to speak by action. And you have never an opportunity to impress your children so deeply with a sense of the sacred value of religion, and the unbending sovereignty of God's commandments, as you have on your stormy Sabbaths. If, then, despite of all severities of weather, you are seen repairing to the house of God, you tell them, by that act, what no words could tell them so effectually, how great is the value of religious good, how firm the demands of religious duty. If, on the other hand they only see you saunter to Church on the bright and fair days, you leave them to infer that the worship of God is of no very sacred obligation, and, in fact, that the law of the weather is a higher law. Not seldom is it observed, in the country congregations, that families who live most remote from the places of worship, are most punctual and true in their attendance, in all sorts of weather. It is almost impossible for such a family to grow up in irreligion. They receive an impression of its criminality which nothing can afterwards expel. In every such family that I can remember, the sons and daughters have early became religious. If, then, you wish to bring up your family in the fear of God, your foul Sabbaths are your best days. God gives you the rain, the snow, the heat, the stormy wind not to annul the mercies of the day, but to make it even richer in blessing. And you can better afford to stay at home on any other Sabbath in the year, than when the deluge pours, or the heat scorches, or the snow tempest howls.

There is power, too, in the very storms of nature themselves, which makes it well for you to encounter them. They will assist you in the exercise of right sentiments of worship, and bring upon you views of God, which are only salutary and healthful. You need to make your acquaintance with God, as he is felt in his storms, as well as in the softer and more genial scenes of your bright and sunny days. If the universe were governed by a good and an evil principle, as some of the heathens believe, or if all storms and tempests, as Luther supposed of the thunder, were produced by the devil, then it might be well enough to keep your shelter and fence off the evil one as best you may. But since fair weather and foul are both alike from God, they are both alike valid, as expressions of his character and government. The peaceful sunshine, the genial, balmy air suffused with odors are not, by themselves, any adequate expression of God. He thundereth with the voice of his excellency. He rides upon the wings of the wind. He makes a decree for the rain. The cloud is turned about by his counsel. By his wrath the frost is given. He says to the snow, be thou upon the earth. The treasures of the hail are in his bosom. All these symbolize his power and majesty, and reveal him to us in the awful sternness and grandeur of his government. Here, especially, do we behold and feel that he is the great and terrible God, able to maintain his counsels and his laws, by strong arguments, when weaker will not suffice. The Sabbath morning, then, is ushered in, we will say, by a fierce and tempestuous storm. You raise the question whether you shall go to Church or stay at home? God is a being, you remember, who deals not in softliness and gentleness only, but in strength and terror, and why should you shrink from meeting him in those manifestations which, perhaps, have a better lesson for you than any other. Is it not the time for me to worship, you inquire, when he stalks abroad in his majesty and power? Ought I not to understand the great and terrible God, as well as the gentle and lovely? You go out into the tempest, and its wrath is the wrath of the Almighty. The house where you sit is rocked by the sound of his majesty. Your spirit is stormed inwardly with emotions of awe and fear. As in the worship of your softer days, you sit and hear of the recovering mercy of God, and begin to feel that you are a creature of great consequence and value to your Heavenly Father, so here you shrink back into nothingness and holy dread before him. You are humbled, all loftiness and resumption are prostrated, and you become a child before him. God has a liturgy for his Sabbaths, no thanks to the Church, and it is studiously contrived to impress you on all sides, with thoughts appropriate to your manifold relations to him, to the varied purposes of his government, and the mingled riches and majesty of his attributes. It whispers in softness, it thunders in power, it storms in fury and wrath. He means to make you feel all sides of his character, and worship him in appropriate sentiments. If, on a Sabbath, the rain pour down its floods, or the thunder peals with a voice that would rend the cedars; if the cold wind howls at the door, or the wintry storm roars above, lashing the skies with its fury; these all fulfil the words of Jehovah, they speak his majesty, they blow their hallelujahs forth, and fill his realm with inarticulate praise.

Hence, there is a peculiar interest and sublimity attending worship in a storm. God stalks before the worshippers, and they hear the sound of his majesty. Their soul is moved with awe, in its deepest seats of emotion. Their own nothingness is impressed. Pride is struck low. The creature is filled with a sense of his dread Creator. The tremendous chorus of the storm rolls down upon the soul and through it, expressing God—God in his greatness and glory—God in his justice and power—God in his avenging purity,—the throne of law, the antagonist of sin, its judge and its voice of doom. Accordingly, when Moses gave the law to Israel, it was no fair weather scene. There were thunderings and lightnings. A thick and terrible cloud rested on the mount, skirting it down to the place where the people stood. The mountain smoked under the cloud, and sent up wrathful fires. The sound of the trumpet was exceeding loud, and all the camp trembled with dread. And there it was, when God was expressing himself to them in that liturgy of thunder, that they received the law of their Creator. David, too, has a whole psalm, in which he is occupied with the lesson of the thunder, calling it the voice of God, and connecting it with the temple worship. Give unto the Lord, O ye mighty, give unto the Lord glory & strength, worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness. The voice of the Lord is upon the waters, the God of glory thundereth. The voice of the Lord is powerful, the voice of the Lord is full of majesty. The voice of the Lord breaketh the cedars of Lebanon, yea the Lord breaketh the cedars of Lebanon. He maketh them to skip like a calf. Lebanon and Sirien like a young unicorn. The voice of the Lord divideth the flames of fire, the voice of the Lord shaketh the wilderness—of Kadesh AND IN HIS TEMPLE DOTH EVERY ONE WORSHIP That, in his view, was the fit time to worship, when the God of glory was thundering, and his storm was shaking the world.

Never will the worshipper ascend to higher impressions of God, and fill himself with a deeper sense of his power, than when he worships in a storm, if he only directs his mind aright. The overwhelming effect once produced by Whitfield, in taking advantage of a storm of thunder, and especially of a single crash that burst on the air, at the commencement of his discourse, when all was hanging dark and ominous around, is known to you all. In such a connection David says nothing of trumpets, and timbrels, and harps, and shawms. When the storm blows its anthem through the sky, and creation shakes with the sound, organs and choirs are feeble instruments. In the stormy Sabbath, then, whether of summer or winter, when the anthem of creation is loudest, and God is abroad in the sweeping majesty of his power, then is the time for you to be found as a worshipper in his temple. It is in such a day, and amid such demonstrations, that God will come down upon your being with impressions of his grandeur, otherwise difficult to be attained to.

There are mercies enveloped, too, in much of what we call unpleasant weather, which ought to invite us to the house of God. In every frost of winter, God is preparing the soil to be loosened and re-dissolved, and thus to favor the growths of returning spring and summer. In every rain, he is mercifully watering our fields, and preparing the food that is to sustain our comfort, supply our luxuries, and crown the earth with verdure and beauty. Praise waiteth for thee, O God, in Zion, says David, and unto thee shall the vow be performed. And what is the burden of this praise? Thou waterest the ridges thereof abundantly, thou settlest the furrows thereof, thou makest it soft with showers. Thou blessest the springing thereof. Thou crownest the year with thy goodness, and thy paths drop fatness. The pastures are clothed with flocks, the valleys are covered over with corn, they shout for joy, they also sing. Shall, then, no praise wait for God in Zion, when all nature sings of bounty and joy?

With how ill a grace do you remain at home, unable to encounter a slight inconvenience in the weather, when, in fact, God is garnishing the earth with beauty for you, and dropping his fatness on it for the supply of your table? At what moment in the year, should you hasten dheerfully to his temple, and send up your voice of worship to your Heavenly Father if not when he is sending down the showers of his goodness? Then to keep the house in churlish self-indulgence, lest some drop of God's blessing, should touch you—how cold is it, how harsh an offence to the giver of your blessings. There is something, too, in the descending rain, as a mechanical device of the divine goodness, worthy to excite your tenderest admiration. Suppose it were a question how the dry earth should be adequately watered? how so great an extent of surface should be sprinkled with the needful moisture? What enginery can execute a task so nearly infinite? Not all the hands of all the men that live; not all the animal nad mechanical forces we have at our command, could suffice to do it. But the divine wisdom does it by a plan how simple and efficacious, raising the cloudy cisterns into the sky and floating them about on the wings of the wind, to distil upon the otherwise parched desert of the world, and supply the juices of animal and vegetable life. The distribution is perfect. No cataract spills from the sky to tear the ground; no torrents fall to crush the slender growths of the world. He maketh small the drops of rain, and sprinkles his mercy in gentleness, that you may be able to bear it. Surely these drops of baptism are sacred drops, more hallowed than any which may fall from priestly hands, and worthier of your reverence. And yet the fair weather hearer dreads the summer rain, and because it falls without on the rejoicing earth, refuses to go out and see his Father's work, and join in the praise of his people.

So, also, if the wintry storm howls about your dwelling, strong against its power, secure and warm within; if the careful mother is not afraid of the snow for her household, for all household are covered with scarlet, how shall you better testify your praise to the giver of these comforts and blessings, than to use the covering, by which he shelters your body, as a defence in going to his house? He gives it to you as the crown of your industry, not for your sakes only, not for show, not for the comfort of your body in the exposures of business—but also for the service of his house. He calls you out into the storm & wintry cold, to prove your thanks in the use of it, and testify your sense of his protective goodness.

God also means by his stormy Sabbaths, to teach you a religious interest in your fellow men. Remaining at home, you may indeed think of the shelterless poor and of the tempest driven sailors, lashed to the icy shrouds, or weltering in the dreadful waves, or perishing on the bleak shore. But this, by itself, is no religious interest. The piety you feel should carry you to your Heavenly Father, and unite you with his people in prayer for the sufferers. Christ, you will remember, was praying on the mountain, in a stormy night, when the boat of his disciples was foundering in the waves, and it was there that he received his commission to the waves and went down to say his—Peace, be still! By all the severities and storms of life, God means to bind you in the most enlarged and dearest charity to your fellow men. And when should you be found with his people in worship and supplication, if not in the hour when terror and death are falling on so many thousands of your race?

Is it vain to add, that a creature, who must so soon give back the shreds of his mortal nature, as a prey to all the licensed elements, should go out willingly to make his acquaintance with the storms, and bespeak a rest and shelter for his soul. The rains will very soon drench your lowly resting place, the storms will rage above, the cold will settle dank around you, and snows will cover your pillow. You are a sinner, too, and there is a horrible tempest raging, to devour you, in a world beyond life. It ill becomes you, in such a case, to shrink with a spirit so dainty, from the storms that are so soon to have you for their prey. Rather should you remind yourself, by signs like these, of that doom which awaits your body, that other storm which threatens your soul, and let them draw you to the house of God, there to seek the warmth of his eternal bosom, and the peaceful shelter of that love which waits to receive the righteous. Hasten thither and send up your prayer with David, and say—I would hasten my escape from the windy storm and tempest. Let the body brave what shortly it shall brave no more. Let the spirit shelter its eternity in the sovereign peace of God.

Nor should it ever be forgotten, as I fear it is by many, that Christian piety is the child of danger and severity. If you cannot renounce your pleasure, if you can brook no hardship, you cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven. Christ your Savior did not shrink from evil. He planted his religion in a life of suffering and a severe death. He was often shelterless. He was out upon the waters, drenched, himself, by the storm that was tossing the boat of his perishing disciples. The breast of heaven was cold to him in the garden. And in the hour of his death, the sun drew back his beams, the earth shuddered with a chill, and judgment cast its dismal shadow around him. There is no fair weather in the scene of the cross. The Lord of your redemption braves the storm—even the horrible tempest. His servants and followers, too, who went abroad to publish his Gospel, encountered all severity, enduring cold and nakedness for your sake. The history of the church, too, has ever been a stormy one. Exposure, persecution, want, and all malignity have been its lot. Fires have scorched it more merciless than the lightning; thunders have burst on it from hell, more terrible than the thunders of heaven. The Christian faith comes to you as the child of storms. If you embrace it, the spirit of suffering will be in you. Least of all will a little rain, or a slight chill of the air, or even a driving storm, be more than you can meet. You will be ashamed to hope in such a Savior as Jesus was, and think it too much to encounter a slight inconvenience to your person.

A fair weather religion, I will also remind you, is not the religion of this soil. When the Pilgrims appeared on these shores, it was in the cold of winter. The May Flower had its bloom and gave its fragrance out in December. The spray of the sea had frozen as it fell on them, and made their clothes like coats of iron. They had waded the shallows to reach the shore, and waded the snow-covered hills to find some sheltered landing place. In a driving storm of rain and sleet, they at length brought their bark to the land. The next day was the Sabbath. With not a house to shelter their families, they yet could not think to occupy the day with building. No sound of the axe was heard. Weary, and wet, and cold, they crowded together in their little pinnace, and rested their bodies, and warmed their hearts in hymns of praise.—And afterward they trained their children to the same rugged patience. They met in cold houses, poorly secured against the winds. All their family was around them; no consideration of the weather ever being suffered. Their service was prolonged not seldom for three and four hours, and with no thought of impatience. The same spirit descended from generation to generation. Even within our memory, there was scarcely a stove in any house of worship in New England. They rode in open wagons in all weather. Living under a rough sky, they hardened their piety to suffer it, and a fair weather religion was scarcely known to their dreams.

Here is the secret of that vigorous principle, that strong sense of religion which has prevailed among our people, with results so pleasing in our general character and history. It has been our attachment to the house of God, our almost universal attendance there, in despite of all kinds of weather, that has made us a peculiar people in the sight of mankind—most honorably peculiar. Alas! that now a fair weather religion should begin to prevail among us. Have we not cushioned our houses of worship and formed them to the best models of ease? Are they not closed with well set casements, and warmed to a gentle summer heat? Is not the service shortened, and generally the distance too? And is it now to be thought a severity, that cannot be endured, to go to the house of God in any kind of unpleasant weather? My friends, I mistrust this delicacy, I am afraid it indicates a decay of religious principle. Such a spirit indulged in your families, I must warn you, will soon divest them of all sense of religion. Nothing can bring the safeguards of religion into your families, nothing can save either you or them, but to be the true children of the Pilgrims, and give a strict and regular attendance at the house of God. This fair weather religion is the piety of death both to you and to them. It is impossible to preserve in yourself any steady principle of piety or homage to God, without a rigid attendance at his house; and you will do more for the piety of your children, more to anchor them in the ways of holy virtue by a perseverance in all weather, and especially foul weather, at the house of God, than by every other sort of influence you can exert.

I will go no farther. I have long been wishing to speak on this subject, and now I have chosen a day, when the heavens are bright and the sun shines gently, and a persuasive calm and softness woo es you to your seat. You have obliged me to occupy a day when nature smiles with grace and favor, with a discourse of storms and tempest. I hope that all my fair weather hearers are present, and, being present, that they will receive the salutary lesson I give them. I have not said, and did not mean to say, all that could relate to a subject so unpleasant. I have not rebuked your self-indulgence as I might have done. I have not spoken of the chill our worship often suffers by the thinness of the assembly and the many empty seats displayed; for I was not willing to ask your attention here as patrons of the place. I have not dwelt on your excuses, and removed them—the plea that you had better sometimes spend the day of God by yourselves; for you know that you spend it in no such exercise as worship, or preparation for a better world—the plea often present to the giddy heart of vanity, that a stormy day is no fit occasion for the display of your person, a plea that you cannot yourselves utter, because of its conscious want of dignity, but which nevertheless has power with many—the plea that it will injure your health to encounter the rough weather; for you all expect me to be here in every storm that blows, and you can as well be here as I; and if in thirteen years attendance on my duties here, without any consideration of the weather, in its wildest storms and fiercest cold, I have never suffered the least injury, there is not much reason to fear for you—certainly not for any who are in equally sound health. To invalids I will make allowance, though even they would commonly suffer by no exposure incident to their attendance. There is no such poison in wet and cold as many love to suppose; and if we were not so self-indulgent, so ready to shrink from the rough moods of nature, we should have clearer minds and stronger bodies. The worst and most dangerous poison is confinement, and the pent air that simmers all the day, in heated rooms, unchanged.

With these, and other affectations and excuses, I have had nothing to do. Their answer you will easily find in your consciences, and no argument is necessary to remove them. I have chosen rather to convince you, if possible, that God has not erred in appointing stormy Sabbaths; that if he had made the Sabbath always fair, it would have been a much less beneficial arrangement for you. Your inclement Sabbaths, if rightly observed, are your best days, and you can, least of all, afford to lose them. In this respect the fire and the hail, the snow and vapors, and stormy wind, do most truly fulfil his word,—assisting to give it value and power, and make it the unbending law of your hearts.

Nothing ever yet was known to attain the attribute of strength, except by a contest with obstacles. It is the universal law of body, mind, and spirit; of action, faith, conscience, and piety, that they gather power by enduring hardness. And therefore I often tremble lest these days of public liberty and unmolested worship, when persecutions are chained to rage no more, no more to strengthen the principle of our religion by their fires and torments, should finally enervate and work a total degeneracy in our piety. I can think of no security against this result, except that which has hitherto distinguished N. England. Go to the house of God—suffer no obstacle to keep you thence. Take your family with you. Train them to the understanding that nothing but stern necessity will excuse their absence from the public worship of God. Be fraid ever to let your seat be empty on the Sabbath, however stormy. Be a rigid, rough weather worshipper, a son of New England. This habit will never cease to give a nerve of vigor and health to your religion. It will give you the spirit of Jesus and his apostles, as far as it can be had, without their sufferings, and having this, the Gospel cannot die.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

LETTER FROM MR. BOND, JUNE, 1846.

New House of Worship.

The building of a church at Kohala has been already noticed. The following account of this enterprise will be read with interest. Some of the facts, moreover, will furnish matter for profitable reflection.

The contributions of this church for benevolent purposes have been appropriated towards the expense of erecting our house of worship. The amount contributed it would be difficult to determine. The labor given has consisted in hewing timber and in drawing it from the mountains, thatching the house, and enclosing it with a substantial stone wall of one hundred and sixty feet square, pointed with lime. They have also collected the stones for our bell-house; and they have brought some of the lumber from the shore, ten miles distant. All this labor, with the exception of thatching, has been of the most exhausting kind; and in sorrow I must add, that, as every where else, so here, many who are called by the Christian name, have scarcely lent a helping hand for a single hour. The entire sum given by the church in money, towards the house, was forty dollars. Very few could have contributed more, had the desire existed. Extreme poverty is the state of the entire people. Several hundred dollars were subscribed by the church; but the nominal value of all the subscriptions, paid in articles of Hawaiian production, is about two hundred dollars. The available value, however, has been a more trifle, owing to the want of a market for the articles contributed.

The new meeting house, to which reference is made above has an unusually strong frame. It is thatched on the roof with cane leaf, and on the sides and ends with ki leaf. Its size is eighty-six by forty-five feet, with a verandah of six feet in width all around it. It has four large doors and twelve large windows; it is well floored throughout, and filled with settees of an uniform length. The end exposed to the trade winds is likewise ceiled up; as are thirty-four feet of the sides, and a part of the top, at the end in which the pulpit stands, for the sake of greater ease in speaking. The settees, one hundred and thirty in number, were all manufactured by the natives themselves, (to whom they now belong,) with very little showing, or purchased of native makers at six dollars per seat.

The whole expense of the edifice Mr. Bond estimates at about sixteen hundred dollars. "We have received," says Mr. Bond, "very valuable assistance from friends of the Redeemer on these islands, as also most unexpected and generous aid from friends in the United States." The receipt of a fine bell, weighing two hundred & ten pounds, procured by "the generous agency" of Rev. H. T. Cheever, is also acknowledged.

In regard to the labor of building our new house, I will only say that you can probably have but little conception of the immense amount of toil it has cost. Never before did I know, from experience, labor so extremely exhausting; this is particularly true of that expended in drawing timber from the mountains. Some of this timber was very large, and as heavy and solid as the toughest white oak. It was not to be procured at a less distance than from eight to twelve miles, and in situations so cut up by precipitous ravines, that human muscles alone could be set to the task of dragging it down. The drawing of single sticks cost us from one to four days of the severest labor. One stick of fifty or more feet in length, and fifteen or sixteen inches square, occupied four days in drawing, although from eighty to one hundred men were employed. Four ropes of three-fourths of an inch in diameter; were snapped at a single pull.

After making the experiment, I found that we were likely to do very little in procuring timber, because there was no one who could act with the natives as a leader and thus harmonise their efforts. It became necessary, therefore, either to see their energies expended and nothing accomplished, or to attend them constantly in their mountain expeditions, which I afterwards did.—The labor was very severe, and added to my duties on the Sabbath, seemed for a time more than human nature could bear. But the Lord held me up; and though I had not a half a day's rest for several months in succession, and for two months of the time, I had not more than two or three hours sleep out of the twenty-four, (in consequence of the severe sickness of a child,) my health suffered not at all.

Some members of the church have done most nobly in making willing sacrifices of themselves and their means to this undertaking. These are the few choice spirits whose religion consists not in tongue merchandize, consecrated in a breath, but in the offering of their bodies, with all their energies, as "living sacrifices" to God, and who are ready to stretch their sinews, and pour out their sweat ungrudgingly, whenever he demands it. What would not an entire church of such men accomplish! Happy the man who should be its pastor!

The wonderfully rapid and ameliorating influence which a clean and orderly house of God has exerted upon the demeanor and external appearance of our congregations on the Sabbath, and, I may add, upon their social condition generally, is almost incredible. Within the short space of six or eight months, the change wrought has been very great. It is only with great difficulty, at times, that I can believe that the decently clad and well behaved assembly which I see before me on the Sabbath, is the one to which I ministered to but one year since. It is not a little cheering to feel that now at length, on God's day at least, we can urge a very respectable claim to fraternity with decent people. Mr. Bond also reports the erection of "a common thatched meeting-house" at one end of the out stations.

LETTER FROM MR. BISHOP, SEPTEMBER 22, 1846.

Revival at Ewa.

MR. BISHOP has charge of two districts, Ewa and Waianae, in the southern part of Oahu. The intelligence communicated in the subjoined extracts, in respect to this field, cannot fail to interest all the friends of missons.

Since my last communication we have enjoyed the continued presence of the Holy Spirit, both here and at Waianae. For more than a year I have been visited daily by religious enquirers: and I have been followed by them from place to place to hear the gospel. Although my regular congregation has increased to one thousand or twelve hundred, and on special occasions, our spacious chapel has overflowed, and many hundreds could find no admittance, yet, through the whole time our assemblies have maintained the strictest order and decorum for such a noisy people as this; and at such times of deep solemnity we have been entirely free from animal excitement.

The progress of the work has now nearly ceased; but the labor of preaching, and of instructing, receiving and rejecting candidates, is the same as heretofore. The general seriousness on the minds of the congregation has somewhat abated, and the chapel is not so crowded on the Sabbath as it was formerly. But the attention to religious ordinances is still good. I have now on my hands a large company of candidates, who are desirous to be admitted to church privileges. I am instructing them in the principles of doctrinal and experimental religion, and watching over them in respect to their christian conduct. A large proportion of these are young persons, who, although they are more intelligent than adults in conversation, and receive instruction with greater facility, are not so stable in character.

Though I rejoice that so many of the youth of my charge profess to be serious, I do it with trembling; as there are so many temptations to sin, around and within them, with so few restraints, to hold in check their natural propensities. I have already received several into the church after a long probation; but I am constrained to say that since their admission, their deportment has not been as exemplary as it was before, though none of them have done that which subjects them to discipline.

Since the beginning of the present year, there have been 3 seasons of admission to the church. On the first Sabbath in Jan., 39 persons were received; in April, 53 more; and in August last, 131 more. I have also about 200 candidates with whom I meet every Wednesday, and spend the whole day conversing personally with each.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Buchanan Circuit, Va., March 22, 1847.

The cause is still on the advance on this circuit. The good Lord is still carrying on his work. Fifty-three have been added to the church this conference year, and the prospect is very good for as many more. Many backsliders have been reclaimed, and believers built up in the faith. To God, be given all the glory.

R. H. WALKER, Supt.

Masontown, Pa., April 2, 1847.

Br. Bassett.—I wish to inform your readers through your elegant paper that the Lord is still carrying on his gracious work in this part of his vineyard. Clouds are dissipated, hearts are melted, souls are born from above. Glory be to God, for his love to a lost world. I have held another protracted meeting at Henry Clay Furnace, and received the names of ten as probationers in the Church, amongst whom was the Manager and his wife. May the Lord keep them faithful and save them in heaven, is my sincere prayer. Yours truly,

SAMUEL CLAWSON.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Tiffin, O. April 6, 1847.

Br. Bassett Dear Sir: The last intelligence you had of me, was in reference to my late illness. I now inform you that I have in a great degree recovered my usual health, and have some two months since, resumed my regular labors on the circuit. My first attack of illness, was of congestive fever, by which my life was seriously threatened. When I had but partly recovered from that, I was attacked with violent inflammatory rheumatism in my right shoulder, extending through the muscles of my neck into my head, and along my collar bone into my breast which so completely disabled me that I was for weeks quite unable to help myself, so that I was in all, confined to my room full twelve weeks, after which I dare not venture out any distance from home except in very fair weather. But it has pleased God to restore to me my usual health, so that I am enabled to endure the changes of the season with but little inconvenience to myself and without much hazard to my health. Hence I am now flattered with the hope that I shall be able to meet my appointments regularly.

Br. G. M. Scott my colleague arrived in due time after the rise of conference—has enjoyed good health—is well received—and has been prompt and faithful in meeting his appointments, which has been of great benefit to the circuit. I take pleasure in saying to the praise of my friends and brethren in Christ on this circuit, that during my late indisposition they did not fail to enquire into my wants, and were prompt to supply them, so that I wanted for nothing, for which I feel myself under a weighty debt of gratitude to them, but more especially so to God, the giver of every good gift, for having put it into their hearts to do these things for me, his unfaithful and unworthy servant.

We have held two Quarterly meetings, and one protracted meeting this conference year. The first, a Q. meeting, was held at Lower Sandusky. The weather was so inclement at the time as to occasion a very limited attendance of the brethren from a distance, and the meeting passed off without any thing special in the way of religious excitement. The second quarterly meeting was held at the Ridge Union meeting house. Weather fine—but few from a distance—congregations large and good attention to the word preached. Br. Jer. Jack, was in attendance and did us good service—general satisfaction rendered, but nothing special accomplished. The third, a protracted meeting was held about six weeks since at Muscanunge meeting house, three miles west of Lower Sandusky. Br. R. S. Rice assisted in the labors of the occasion. Church members were encouraged and did rejoice. About twenty sinners professed faith in Christ, and many of them gave very clear and satisfactory indications of having experienced a genuine change. Fifteen having united with us in church fellowship as the fruits of this meeting. We have peace in our borders—loving brethren and sisters to take care of us, and God's grace to help us, for all of which we desire to be truly grateful to the Lord of all. ISRAEL THRAP.

Mount Vernon, O. April 9, 1847.

Brother Bassett: Weary and worn down in body and mind by a long protracted effort, I now snatch a few moments, from a few hours demanded for necessary repose, to communicate to you, and through you, to my fellow laborers in the gospel, the triumphs of saving grace on Licking circuit. My past silence has not arisen from a want of something to communicate; but from a want of time for the communication. In this region of floods and mud, I have been plodding on throughout the inclement winter, without intermission; and my toils and travel have not been in vain in the Lord. We have added more than eighty persons to the several classes on the circuit since Conference. At the second quarterly meeting, held in Mt. Vernon which was protracted through two weeks, we had a good time, regarded as the beginning of good times in this place. The membership were greatly revived; united and frequent prayer went up to God, such as takes no denial and brings down the blessing for certain. Some of the wanderers were sought out and brought back to the accustomed fold; while the house was crowded night after night, with attentive hearers. The best of all,—the spirit of the living God was with us, and five persons were hopefully converted; one of these (O how shall I sufficiently praise my gracious God!) was my daughter Emily, who had previously seemed as if she would be the last, but through the abounding grace of God, has become the first in my family, to turn to the Lord with full purpose of heart, and since has given me no little help in laboring for the good of souls. Brother Lamb came to our help and gave us very efficient aid. One of the best of Evangelical workmen is brother Lamb; what a pity he cannot be kept regularly in the field!

We have just left a meeting of two weeks' continuance, to attend to our third quarterly meeting, which is to begin in this place to-morrow. This meeting was had at a new appointment, about five miles west of Vernon, where there was no class; and it has resulted in one of these glorious revivals to which I have been accustomed in past years. Fifty one persons were clearly converted at that favored place, the anxious seat, where yearning mercy sits enthroned in grace, and waits to receive the submission of humbled, suppliant rebels. There bowed together wrinkled age and blooming boyhood; and the tottering grandsire stood side by side with rosy youth not yet in their teens; and [illegible] "his own righteousness" and rejoiced in a "better sacrifice," the bad leader of Satan's revelry, the musician of the enemies' camp, had "a new song put in his mouth, even praise to our God." There is now at this appointment formed a class consisting of sixty one persons, principally from the world, and almost all in the enjoyment of religion, happy very happy in the Lord. This is but the beginning;—the work must go on;—numbers, far and near, are deeply convicted the spreading influence of convicting energy reaches almost to your "borders" brother Hatfield;—my prayer is, that it may enter your field in the North, and sweep over the whole, like a prairie fire, burning, rolling on, and bearing down in its flaming course, every opposing element, till it passes your farthest southern bounds;—and the startled Capitol of our State, shall exclaim, "What hath God wrought?"

The president's visit is to be received at the Ebenezer Meeting house on Schenks Creek.—My exhaustion forbids me to write more. I claim your indulgence this once for the imperfect penmanship of this communication, which my trembling nerves, quivering under the effects of the excitement of our soul shaking meeting, prevent, at present, to be better.

THOMAS POTTER, Sup't.

INDIANA DISTRICT.

Milroy Ia., April 1*st*, 1847

Br. Bassett: Our second quarterly meeting on Flat Rock circuit, closed on last Monday night. It was a good meeting, and was well attended. One joined the church.—We were favored with the labors of Brs. Shipp, Paul, & Stibbens to whom our thanks are due.—Our next quarterly meeting is to be held in Milroy, Rush County, on the 4th Saturday and Sabbath in June.

As ever yours, C. H. WILLIAMS.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO.

THURSDAY, APRIL 15, 1847.

Aurora Borealis.—On Wednesday evening, 2th inst. we had a remarkably interesting display of this phenomenon. Not only was the entire northern portion of the horizon lighted up, but varying columns of white light would rise up in the north west and north east, to a height of from 30° to 40° and continue sometimes for several minutes, then subside, and others would shoot up at other points. At about 10 o'clock, a remarkable belt of light was seen extending entirely across the heavens from east to west. It was from 6° to 10° in breadth, and its southern edge quite touched our zenith.

A Sermon.—Our readers will find themselves interested and edified in reading the sermon of Dr. Bushnell, which we copy this week from the American Pulpit. The topic is a peculiar one, and it is discussed and applied in a very ingenious and forcible manner. It is indeed a sermon for the times. None of our readers would wish to be considered fair weather Christians. But whether they be or not, let them read the sermon. And those who conceive that they have not time, let them be sure and lay it by, for perusal, when there comes a 'Stormy Sunday.' Dr. Bushnell chose a fair day to deliver the Discourse when he had all his fair weather hearers out. He shows that there is no such poison in wet and cold, as many love to suppose; and that if we were not so self indulgent, so ready to shrink from the rough moods of nature, we should have clearer minds and stronger bodies. "The worst and most dangerous poison," he tells us, "is confinement, and the pent air that simmers all the day in heated rooms unchanged." Don't fail to read the sermon.

New Orleans—Moral Aspect—Churches.—We have just read in the Nashville Christian Advocate, a long letter by Bishop Andrew, giving a description of the moral and religious state of New Orleans. He thinks that the population is assuming a more permanent character. In former years, it used to be considered that to go to New Orleans was almost equivalent to going to the grave. The dreaded yellow fever which was won to lay waste the city, he tells us, has lost much of its malignity, and of course, much of its power to alarm. He represents that to permanent inhabitants, it is a very healthy city, he believes none more so upon the globe. He says that many of the inhabitants who used to make annual preparation to depart in the spring, now remain permanently. 'First, they ventured till June, then till July, then till August; till at length they have resolved to take the city, for better or worse, all the year round.' This state of things he observes, is annually increasing. He is of opinion also that the moral and religious state of the city is on the advance. Originally, the great mass of the population, were French and Spanish, and of course, Papists. Great commercial interests attracted crowds from all parts of the Union, and we might add, from all natinos of Europe, thousands of whom cared for no God but the god of this world. Others who had religious training, would be carried away by surrounding circumstances and forget the restraints of conscience. But the various Protestant Churches have been for many years, directing their attention to New Orleans, and have labored with various success, accomplishing much good. The Bishop however, of course, gives a more particular account of the Methodist Churches in the city. He says that their progress has been slow, but he thinks the prospect now fairer than ever before for extensive usefulness. There is almost an entire Presiding Elder's District in the City alone. He gives an account of ten several charges in the city. 1. Poydras Street Church. This is their largest and principal church in the city. The house was commenced under the ministry of J. N. Maffit. 2. Moreau St. Church. A fine house, unfinished. 3. Seamen's Bethel, Prosperous. 4. Soule Chapel—a new one. 5. Wesley Chapel—a flourishing church of colored people, from 12 to 1400 members. 6. Andrew Chapel. A lot and a preacher—house about to be built. 7. Steele Chapel—about to be built in Magazine Street. 8. New Basin. A good revival here last year. 9. Lafayette. A good house, but prospects not flattering. 10. French Mission. In conclusion, the Bishop urges, increased attention to the German population, and the negroes.

The Barque Gen. Harrison cleared from Alexandria, D. C. on the 3d inst. with a large cargo of food for Ireland contributed by the citizens of Washington, Alexandria and Georgetown. So says the Columbian Fountain.

Sears' Magazine.—The April number has reached us. It contains an extended description, and numerous pictorial illustrations of the state of New York. Interesting as usual, Published by Robert Sears, N. York. By the by, the publisher has just honored us with a commission to receive subscriptions for the Pictorial Magazine, and also to sell all the Bound volumes of his Pictorial Publications for 1847. We shall be pleased to receive subscriptions. Call and leave your names, and the pay in advance.

American Pulpit.—We have just received the April number. It contains a sermon by Rev. Presiding Elder Scott, of New Hampshire, and two other sketches of sermons. The Pulpit commences a new volume next month, with the addition of eight pages to each number, and an occasional engraved portrait of some popular clergyman. One dollar per year in advance. Address, Samuel Chism, Worcester, Mass. Send for it.

Pittsburgh Gazette.—This venerable new spaper, the oldest in the west, has just been changing hands. Our friend D. N. White, Esq. who has conducted it with so much ability for six years past, has availed himself of an opportunity of being released from the 'Physical and mental slavery and toil of an Editorship,' under which, he states in his valedictory, his health has considerably suffered. We must indeed congratulate our brother on his release, but truly regret to part with him from the corps editorial. We are gratified however to state the Mr. White has disposed of the Gazette establishment to a gentleman, well known in the world of letters, Erastus Brooks, Esq. well known as the author of 'Letters from Europe' which have been so extensively copied by the newspaper press, and for more than ten years editor of the New York Express, takes charge of the Pittsburgh Gazette. Mr. B. F. Harris, we are told, will still give attention to the commercial department of the paper. Under the new arrangement, we doubt not, we shall still peruse the columns of the 'Old Gazette' with undiminished interest. The introductory of Mr. Brooks, is a powerful paper, expressing noble sentiments respecting slavery and war.

Sad Rejoicing.—We learn by the Pittsburgh Commercial Journal, that the Councils of Philadelphia, have determined to have a general illumination in honor of Taylor's victories, and appropriated six hundred dollars to the purpose of lighting public buildings. Now we should apprehend, that if the 'Brotherly City' has money to spare, it might with greater propriety, be appropriated to any one of a thousand other objects, than shouting over the blood of slaughtered victims of the sword. We read in the Book of Truth, "He that is glad at calamities, shall not be unpunished." If these Philadelphia illuminators would only wait till peace is made, we could rejoice with them.

Ignorance and Prejudice vs. Learning.—We have been much gratified to see that the church of the United Brethren in Christ, have an effort in progress to establish a Literary Institution, to be called the Blendon Seminary, in the central part of this state. Several of their Conferences, we believe, have united in the enterprise. The friends of the measure however, have to encounter opposition from old prejudices against Colleges, and love of ignorance, on the part of some. In their Muskingum Conference, held in February last in Starke County, the Minutes of which we find in a late number of the Telescope, a resolution was offered and discussed, to co-operate with the Scioto Conference in the literary enterprise, but the resolution was LOST! We are sorry that that Conference bears the name of Muskingum, for we consider that it has disgraced the name. A proposition for its concurrence in the establishment of a Seminary of learning in Harrison county was also rejected! What an enlightened body! We know that the sensible men among the Brethren, must feel mortified that one of their Conferences should take such a stand in behalf of ignorance. We see in a late number of the Telescope, that a writer sets forth that the education to be obtained in our common schools is fully sufficient, if we are only well versed in the school of Christ. He thinks that a majority of the church are opposed to Seminaries, that the Brethren Church has a pretty numerous membership, with a full share of piety, and that it has thus far done well without Seminaries. But, bless the man, we used to do well without railroads and steamboats, and even without turnpike roads. Yet can we not do better with them? The article referred to is quite handsomely answered by Rev. L. Davis, the Agent for the Seminary. Amongst other forcible remarks, he says that "those who oppose, have never tested the great advantage of these schools, in storing their minds with useful knowledge."

Since writing the above, we regret to see by the minutes of the West Pennsylvania Conference in the same paper, that that conference by majority of over two thirds, has declared itself opposed to the Blendon Seminary, and also by the like vote, opposed to erecting a similar Institution, either in the Allegheny conference, or the Virginia Conference. Bishop John Russell voted in the majority! What an intelligent bishop that must be. And what a mysterious Providence that he did not live at least 5 or 6 centuries ago!

Our brother of the Religious Telescope, will not consider us meddlesome in thus having reference to the affairs of another branch of the church. Our sympathies are with him in the Seminary enterprise, and we wish it success.

Rev. Jesse Spurgeon.—This aged minister, as we learn by the Ohio State Journal, died at His residence in Fairfield County Ohio, on the 12th ult. aged 80 years. He had resided in that county ever since 1799. We recollect that Mr. S. was associated with Rev. W. Burke, in the Reformed Methodist Society in years past, but we know not what church relations he sustained, of late years.

Progress of the War.—Our statement last week of the engagements in Mexico, though quoted from the best authority, proved to be incorrect in part. We give this week the official despatches of General Taylor, respecting the battle of Buena Vista, for the benefit of those of our friends who do not receive a secular paper. Intelligence is this week received from various sources of the taking of Vera Cruz, by the forces under Gen. Scott. The accounts represent that on the 9th of March, the troops commenced disembarkation—on the 14th, the city of Vera Cruz was invested. On the 22d, a surrender was demanded—on refusal, 7 mortars open a fire of bombs. On the 25th the Navy battery, Paixan guns opened a fire. During the day, the fire proved very destructive in the town. On the morning of the 26, the enemy proposed a surrender. On the 29th negotiations were completed—the city and castle surrendered—Mexican troops, 4000 in number, marched out and laid down their arms. The American troops occupied the city and batteries, and the U. S. ensign was hoisted. Among the prisoners, are 5 generals, 6 0 superior officers, and 270 company officers. American loss, killed and wounded, 65. The slaughter among the Mexicans was immense. Outside of the city General La Vega was encamped with a large force of cavalry. It is stated that Col. Harney with from 2 to 300 dragoons repulsed this formidable force with terrible carnage, scattering them in all directions. Thus far, this statement is relied upon. We do not vouch for its correctness, in these days of "wars and rumors of wars."

Foreign.—There were two arrivals last week at New York, from England, the Packet ships, Columbia, and Gladiator. Amongst the few news items of interest which they bring, we see it stated that the distress for want of bread in Belgium is increasing. In Ireland too, deaths by starvation still continue, to a frightful extent. Cargoes of meal, rice, peas, barley and flour, are pouring into the suffering districts. The cry of the poor now is for clothing.

Ohio and Virginia—Boundary.—The National Era informs us that the Resolutions of the Ohio Legislature touching the Boundary Question, came before the Virginia Legislature, and were referred to a committee. The committee in their Report say that "the sovereignty and jurisdiction of Virginia is co-extensive with the bed of the Ohio River between the banks, at all times, covered by the water of the river or not; and that as well in regard to the soil of such bed when covered by the water, as when it is left bare by the temporary receding of the water. "The Report, however, admits that there is room for great diversity of judgment, in relation to the rights of Virginia, and deeming it desirable for both states, and the common duty of both, if practicable, to settle by amicable negotiation and treaty, this controversy, it recommends the adoption of the Resolutions. That's neighborly.

Abolition in France.—The petition of six hundred Catholic priests, for the abolition of slavery in the French Colonies, was presented by the Count de Montalembert at the opening of the French Chambers. The French Abolitionists are about establishing a periodical, devoted to the subject of emancipation. So says J. G. Whittier in the National Era.

New England Correspondence of the Western Recorder.

Boston, Mass. April 2, 1847.

Br. Bassett: On this 2nd day of April, the snow is falling rapidly, and the sleighs are running merrily. In a more appropriate season this would appear delightful, and tend to make one feel cheerful. But the most beautiful things must appear in their proper time and place, to have their beauty appreciated and enjoyed.

How sensitive we are—and quick to perceive the fitness of things, in all things involving our interests. Should there be the least disorder in the vast machinery of the Universe of God—especially when there is any thing ominous of ill, to our earthly well-being, how soon it excites our attention and our feelings of regret. In like manner may we not conceive that the Father of us all is grieved with the bold and rash manner in which we mar the beauty, and derange the harmonising results, arising from obedience to moral law—and shall not we also be made to grieve, if we persist in our revolings from the Divine Order! But our seasons, how they have, for these many years, continued to come in their appointed time, teeming with all their pleasing variety; and full of comfort, for ungrateful man.

But Ireland! afflicted Ireland! Thy spirit is brought low; the wailing of thy children has been wafted on the wings of human sympathy to every corner of our western world, our land of plenty,—and oh! that I could add, our land of peace! But the iron tramp of war has not yet trampled down all of human kindness; and although we are wasting enough in the destruction of human life, the lives of our own sons, and those of our neighbors, to lift up thy drooping head, oh, Ireland! and make thee to sing for joy, until thy harvest come, yet even now, we will not entirely forget thee, thou smitten of God and afflicted!

The splendid ship, Jamestown, has just sailed from our harbor, taking out provisions which were estimated to be equal to ten thousand barrels. Our excellent Mayor is now chartering some two or three other vessels for the same purpose. How delightful it is to see Protestants and Catholics working side by side in the cause of humanity—and what a rebuke to the spirit and usages of Catholicism, to see our whole city resolving to send no more money, to be appropriated to the relief of a priest ridden people, whose religious creed would lead them to give more to have mass said for the repose of their souls, than to save their children and themselves from starvation!—What more of relief goes from Boston to Ireland, will be in the varieties of nutritious food and clothing. This is a rebuke to a religious error, done in great kindness. And will not this do good? There is a chord even in the most corrupt, the most bigoted heart, that vibrates to kindness.

Let us now do what we can for Ireland—do our whole duty, and never again will the same strength of prejudice exist, that has existed, in a Catholic breast against the Protestants—a far more effectual method for opening their hearts to receive the truth as it is in Jesus, than to be constantly telling them how bad they are, without showing them "a more excellent way."

As the season is approaching for committing the seed to the earth, let me entreat the young men of the West to turn all their enterprize and strength, towards their productive soil—and not towards the dissipating speculations of "city life." I would sooner have my bank to consist in a bank of earth, than such as we find in Wall street and State street, and my share to consist in a plough share than to have the all shares that are bought and sold in those banks.

New England is fast becoming one great workshop, and Boston the counting room. Since the facilities for transportation have so greatly increased, we can buy grain and all kinds of bread stuffs, much cheaper than they can be raised from our more sterile soil. The mechanic arts, and manufacturing and mercantile interests, are fast becoming the only great leading object of pursuit. This constitutes us consumers, rather than producers of the staff of life. The West then is not only becoming the granary of New England but this year, of half of Europe also.

You see then what an interest we feel in the cultivators, and the cultivation of your soil. Should the pomp and glory of war, or the common desire to congregate in cities, attract your young men away from tilling the earth, or should any other event occur to prevent a golden harvest in the great valley of the Missisippi, our harps would at once be hung on the willows.

I feel a growing propensity to once gratify my love of the works of God in Nature, by looking at your fruitful fields, your wide-spread vallies, and your broad streams, and also see your growing towns and cities. My desire for seeing the "Father of waters" has, of late, been increased, by looking in several times upon Bauvard's Panorama of the Mississippi River. We regard it as the greatest painting which has ever been produced, of American landscape scenery. He gives us a view of the banks of the river, from St. Louis to New Orleans, a distance of nearly twelve hundred miles, painted on nearly three miles of canvass; so that I feel quite familiar with the appearance of St. Louis, the Platean Rocks, the majestic Bluffs of Selma, the mouth of the Ohio, with the appearance also of Memphis, Vicksburg, Natches, Baton Rouge and New Orleans.

But I should also like to see your schools of learning. I was much interested in the address of Gov. Slade, which you published several weeks since. What a noble plan have the citizens of Ohio conceived in bringing the subject of education to bear upon the attention of the masses—and what a noble man for its agent. And above all, I should like to see the churches of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the men who minister at their altars—to see if they have warm hearts—burning with love for souls.

To a Mother, on the loss of a beautiful Child.

A FRAGMENT.

Weep not, O Mother? for the early dead. Dry thy tears of sorrow, and let grief give place to joy. True, it was a fair, promising, and beatiful bud, blooming in they garden, the pride, the joy of thine heart. Its lovely countenance shed a charm around thy daily toil, and smiled upon thy cares; and when thou pressed it to thy bosom, and fondly dandled it upon thy knee, its pearly eye would peer into thine own rapt face, and twinkle with delight; while a heavenly smile would play about its ruby lips, and convey a tide of rapture to thine heart—its mother's heart—which only mothers know, but which no mother's tongue can e'er express. But yet it was too fair a flower, too rich a gem, to bloom in this vast and gloomy wilderness of woe, and

"Waste its sweetness on the desert air."

The incense that it shed around they path, was not extracted from the dreary scenes of life—it was a bud of heavenly being. A sweet exotic, too fair and fragile for the darkened shades and piercing breath, and rude storms of earth, the Great and Wise Horticulturist of the gardens that grow in all perennial loveliness, where no bloom ever fades, and the "sear and yellow leaf," is borne not rustling on the chilling breeze, transplanted it to the eternal Paradise, its native clime, where it now, in expansive beauty blooms and sheds its sweets around the throne of God, unfolding its glorious hues to the gaze of angels, and the admiration of the saints. Then, O Mother! dry thy tears. Rejoice that thy child has gone from the evils to come, escaped the pollutions and sorrows of a sinful world, and is now a sweet and ever living flower, in the garden of its Maker and God.

"This lovely bud, so bright and fair,
Cut down by early doom;
Just come to show how sweet a flower,
In Paradise could bloom."

Br. Bassett: I wish through your paper to inform the friends that I am yet on the shores of mortality, though I have been much afflicted. I was taken with fever on the 7th of September last, at my last Quarterly meeting on Crawfordsville circuit, and laid there eight days. I was then brought part of the way home in a wagon prepared for the purpose by some of the brethren, and rode on horseback the remainder of the way, which I think gave me a relapse. I was then confined to my house for three months or nearly so. But I have now so far recovered as to get out, and preach some lately, and have arrangements made to extend my labors some further into the wilderness. Though surrounded with many temporal difficulties, I feel like putting my trust in the Most High, and going on in the discharge of duty. But I must acknowledge the question of slavery has considerably effi[ected] my mind. But let us use our united effor[ts] prayer, and consultation on all proper occas[ions] and throw our influence on every side again[st] (slavery,) and it e'er long will be driven [to] own territory, or at least, it will be separ[ated] from the church. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES FROM GENERAL TAYLOR'S CA[MP]

Headquarters Army of Occupation,
Camp on the field of battle of Buena Vista,
Mexico, February 24, 1847.

Sir: I have the honor to report that, having come assured on the 29th instant., that the en[emy] had assembled in very heavy force at Encan[tada] cion, thirty miles in front of Agua Nueva, [with] the evident design of attacking my position broke up my camp at the latter place on the 2[3d] and took up a strong line in front of Buena Vi[sta] seven miles south of Saltillo. A cavalry for[ce] left at Agua Nueva for the purpose of cover[ing] the removal of supplies, was driven in during [the] night, and on the morning of the 22d the M[exi]can army appeared immediately in front of [my] position. At 2 o'clock, A, M., a flag was s[ent] bearing from General Santa Anna a summon[s] unconditional surrender. To which I immed[i]ately returned a negative reply. The summ[ons] and my reply are here with enclosed. The act[ion] commenced late in the afternoon between [the] light troops on the left flank, but was not seriou[sly] engaged until the morning of the 23d, when [the] enemy made an effort to force the flank of [my] position. An obstinate and sanguinary conf[lict] was maintained, with short intervals, through[out] the day, the result being that the enemy [was] completely repulsed from our lines. An atta[ck] of cavalry upon the rancho of Buena Vista an[d a] demonstration upon the city of Saltillo itself w[ere] likewise handsomely repelled. Early in [the] night the enemy withdrew from his camp a[nd] fell back upon Agua Nueva, a distance of twe[lve] miles.

Our own force engaged at all points in this a[c]tion fell somewhat short of 5,400 men, while t[he] of the enemy, from the statement of Gen. Sa[nta] Anna, may be estimated at 20,000. Our succe[ss] against such great odds is a sufficient encomi[um] on the good conduct of our troops. In a m[ore] detailed official report, I shall have the satisfa[c]tion of bringing to the notice of the governm[ent] the conspicious gallantry of particular offic[ers] and corps. I may be permitted here, howev[er] to acknowledge my great obligations to Brigad[ier] General Wool, the second in command, to wh[om] I feel particularly indebted for his valuable s[er]vices on this occasion.

Our loss has been very severe, and will [no]t probably fall short of 700 men. The Mexic[an] loss has been immense. I shall take the earli[est] opportunity of forwarding a correct list of t[he] casualties of the day. I am, sir, very respectfu[lly], your obedient servant, Z. TAYLOR.

Maj. General U. S. A. commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army Was[hing]ton, D. C.

(Summons of Santa Anna to General Taylor.

You are surrounded by twenty thousand me[n] and cannot, in any human probability, avoid su[f]fering a rout, and being cut to pieces with o[ur] troops; but as you deserve consideration and pa[r]ticular esteem, I wish to save you from a cata[s]trophe, and for that purpose give you this notic[e] in order that you may surrender at discretio[n] under the assurance that you will be treated wi[th] the consideration belonging to the Mexican cha[r]acter, to which end you will be granted an hour[s] time to make up your mind, to commence fro[m] the moment when my flag of truce arrives i[n] your camp.

With this view, I assure you of my particul[ar] consideration.

God and Liberty. Camp at Encantada, Fe[b] 22d, 1847.

ANT. LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA.

To Gen. Z. Taylor, commanding the forces [of] the United States.

Headquarters Army of Occupation,
Near Buena Vista, Feb. 22, 1847.

Sir: In reply to your note of this date, sum[m]oning me to surrender my forces at discretion I beg leave to say that I decline acceding to your request.

With high respect, I am, sir, your obedient serv't, Z. TAYLOR,

Maj. General U. S. A. commg.

Senor Gen. D. Antonio Lopez De Santa Anna Com. in Chief, La Encantada.

Headquarters Army of Occupation,
Saltillo, Feb. 25, 1847.

Sir: I have respectfully to report that the main Mexican force is yet at Agua Nueva. Our troops hold the positions which they have so well defended, and are prepared to receive the enemy should he venture another attack.

An arrangement has been made with General Santa Anna for an exchange of prisoners, by which we shall receive all, or nearly all, of those captured from us at different times, besides the few taken in the action of the 23d. Our wounded, as well as those of the Mexicans which have fallen into our hands, have been removed to this place and are rendered comfortable.

Our loss in the recent actions, so far as ascertained, amounts to two hundred and sixty-four killed, four hundred and fifty wounded, and twenty-two missing. One company of the Kentucky cavalry is not included in this statement, its casualties not being yet reported. I respectfully enclose a list of the commissioned officers killed and wounded, embracing many names of the highest merit.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant, Z. TAYLOR,

Major General U. S. Army, commanding.

The Adjutant General of the Army, Washington, D. C.

Agua Nueva, March 1st, 1847.

Sir: I have the honor to report that the troops of my command occupied the original camp at this place on the 27th of February, the last of the Mexican army leaving the morning of that day in the direction of San Luis. It is ascertained that the enemy is in full retreat, and in a very disorganized condition; the men deserting and dying of starvation in great numbers. I despatch a command this day as far as Encarnacion to harrass his rear, and secure whatever military supplies may be found there.

From the statements of Mexican officers, particularly of the medical staff left to succor the wounded, there seems no doubt that their loss in the recent action is moderately estimated at one thousand five hundred, and may reach two thousand men, killed and wounded; besides two thousand or three thousand deserters. Many officers of rank were lost. I enclose a list of the names of our own killed and wounded, made as complete as practicable at this time. One regiment (Kentucg cavalry) is not included, its return not being ndered.

The enemy had fully reckoned upon our total but, and had made arrangements to intercept our etreat, and cut off the army, stationing for that urpose, corps of cavalry, not immediately in ir rear, but even below Monterey. I regret to eport that they succeeded near the village of arin in destroying a train of supplies, and killg considerable number of the escort and teamers. Col. Morgan, 2d Ohio regiment, on his arch from Cerralvo to Monterey, was infested y the Mexican cavalry, with which he had sevral recontres, but finally dispersed them with mall loss on his own part. Capt. Graham, . Q. M., volunteer service, was mortally woundd in one of these affairs. I have no doubt that e defeat of the main army at Buena Vista will ecure our line of communication from further nterruption, but I still propose in a few days to hange my headquarters to Monterey, with a iew to make such further arrangements as may e necessary in that quarter. The dispositions ade to harass our rear, vindicate the policy and ecessity of defending a position in front of Salillo, where a defeat has thrown the enemy far ack into the interior. No result so decisive ould have been obtained by holding Monterey, nd our communications would have been conantly in jeopardy.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your ob't serv't,
Z. TAYLOR,
Maj. General U. S. A. commd'g.

The ADJUTANT GENERAL of the Army, Washgton, D. C.

PURCHASE OF ESTATES BY EMANCIPATED SLAVES.—In British Guiana, the emancipated slaves are eginning to get possession of the soil as freehollers. This is done chiefly by forming associaons to furnish the purchase money. The folowing instances will serve as a specimen. How he prices paid compare with the value put upon he lands during the existence of slavery, we are ot informed. And whether the purchasers work he estate as formerly, to furnish articles for exort, or only bestow upon them the little labor ecessary, in that climate, to sustain life, we do ot know. These examples are taken from a long fficial list:

Perseverance Estate.—Four hundred and sevnty acres, purchased by sixty-three laborers, in ssociation for $5,00; and two hundred and fifty cres purchesed by one hundred and nine laborrs, for $1, 715, in the same manner.

Littlefield Estate.—Five hundred acres, purhased by twelve laborers, in partnership, for $9,00.

Lovely Lass Estate.—Five hundred acres, ought for $1,715, by fourteen laborers, in assoiation.

NORTH BROOK ESTATE.—Five hundaed acres, urchased by eighty-four laborers, in partnership, or $10,000.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.—The Building Comittee of the Smithonian Institution have adopted, ut of thirteen plans submitted to them, that of ames Renwick, architect, of New York.

The successful competitors for the contract are ames Dixon, of this city, and Gilbert Cameron, f New York, who have agreed to complete the difice for $205,250, nearly thirty-seven thousnd dollars less than the amount the Building Comittee were authorized to expend.

The plan contemplated a museum, 200 feet by 0; a library, 90 by 50; a gallery of art, 125 feet ng; two lecture rooms—one ample enough for n audience of 1,000 persons; the other connectd with the laboratory; together with several maller rooms. The style is the later Norman, is it prevailed in the twelfth century.

The material for the external walls is a freetone of great durability, from the vicinity of eneca creek, on the Potomac, twenty miles aove Washington, pinkish or gray in color, and ecoming by exposure lighter and very hard, almost impenetrable.—National Era.

GRATIFYING INTELLIGENCE FROM MADAGASCAR.—The following intelligence from Madagascar, y Rev. J. Le Brun, of Mauritius, under date of October last, will not fail to awaken the devout hanksgivings of the friends of missions:

"Great and glorious news from Madagascar! he Christians, though still persecuted, are daily ncreasing in number. There has been of late a reat awakening among them; and there are ore than one hundred new converts. Among e number is the Prince Royal, presumptive eir to the throne, and only son of Ramavalona. here is yet in this young Prince a little of the pirit of Nicodemus; but he joins with the Chrisans for prayer, and reading the Bible. The ueen had given orders to apprehend all the hristians, and twenty-one of them were conemned to death, when the young Prince stepped orward to defend them. He succeeded so far, hat only nine of the twenty-one were obliged to ake the tangena, and one of them, I regret to ay, died in consequence. The rest were reduced to slavery, but were immediately redeemed y their friends. It is rumored that the Prince ontributed liberally to their redemption."

Power of Song.

Mr. Bushnell, of Utica, N. Y., a Wesleyan Methodist preacher, and zealous Washingtonian, aving business in a neighboring town, was obliged consequence to see the landlord of the village un, so he stopped at his house. When he enered the bar-room, he saw about twenty men in , most of whom were in a state of intoxication, several of them quite drunk. After a little me, one of the company said something to Mr. ushnell, who bowed in a courteous manner, and ooke of the subject of temperance. Immediate the attention of the assembly was arrested; and e cause was denounced as the work of priests nd politicians.

Mr. Bushnell, finding it impossible to stem the rrent of abuse by an appeal to their reason, roposed singing a temperance song, to which ey all agreed, and he accordingly commenced e "Staunch Tectotaler." On glancing round e room after he had concluded he observed the ar trickling down the cheek of almost every an. The sentiment of the song, and the melous, touching manner in which it was sung, ad awakened their purest sensibilities—had cared their thoughts back to their families and firesides, surrounded as they once were, with plenty, appiness and affection; and then, the contrast, of drunkard's home, its dark wretchedness and isery, were wisely presented to their minds, nd those hardened men could not resist the apeal, but acknowleded its truth by tears! The ong was unanimously called for again, and their wishes were gratified by its repetition.—Soon fter the landlord came in, and he was requested repeat it for his special benefit, it produced the me effect on him; and after Mr. Bushnell had oncluded, he grasped him by the hand and exclaimed: "I will never sell another glass of liquor s long as I live!" He acted immediately upon s resolution—cut down his sign post, and closed s bar—the others promising to go to the temerance meeting that evening and sign the Pledge, nd they all did so except one.

TEMPERANCE IN VERMONT.—A State vote was tely taken in Vermont upon the license question; nd the result was—no license, 21,798; license, 3,707.

Mr. Adams on the Admistad Case.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, MARCH 2, 1847.

The question coming up on agreeing to a proposed appropriation for making indemnity to the proprieties of the Admistad (the Spanish vessel which became some years ago the subject of litigation before the judicial tribunals of the U. S.)

Mr Adams rose to address the House, and immediately there was a general forsaking of the more distant seats of the hall, and the members came flocking from all sides to listen to the only speech made by Mr. A. this session. His voice, though still feeble, was firmer in its tone than it had been when he lately spoke a few words on resuming his seat.

The Reporter was suffered to approach very near to the venerable speaker, and took such notes as he could.

When first heard, Mr. A. was observing that the Secretary of State (in a letter from him, which had been read at the Clerk's table, in relation to the claim of the Spanish Government) must have been mistaken as to the facts of the case. It was impossible he could have known the merits of the case, or he never would have signed his name to such a paper. He said the Secretary must have been mistaken, because it was not a fact that the Spanish Ministry had ever demanded the negroes of the Amistdd as slaves, but as freemen—as they had been declared to be by the Supreme Court of the United States. In consequence of which declaration, they had been discharged and sent back to their own country as free. But, whether free or slaves, the Spanish Minister never demanded them as slaves. What he demanded had been that the President of the United States, should not suffer the courts of the United States to notice the case; but that the men should be seized and delivered up as assassins. Any one who would look into the history of the case would see this to be so.—When the Secretary of State refused to deliver them up, on the ground of their not being slaves, the Spanish Minister disclaimed having ever demanded them on that ground: he had demanded not as slaves, but as assassins. He wanted to have them delivered up to the Spanish Government, and sent to Havana to be executed as murderers; in which case, all claim of their owners to them as property must have been forfeited. He wanted to have them tried and executed for liberating themselves.

Mr. A. insisted that there was not even the shadow of a pretence for the Spanish demand of indemnity. These negroes were not slaves; they never had been slaves. The Supreme Court pronounced them to be freemen; and, as such, entitled to the value of the vessel which they had taken possession of. And this, after they had suffered two years' imprisonment. The Secretary of State could not have been acquainted with the facts, or he never would have sanctioned the demand of indemnity as afair claim on the Government.

It was true, these men had been demanded by Ruiz and Montez, if there was any property in the case. These men, after the negroes had risen and liberated themselves by slaying the captain, had deceived the m by steering the ship, not back to coast of Africa, as the negroes supposed, but to the coast of America, so that the was ultima tely wrecked upon the beach of Long Island. There the ship was taken possession of by Lieut. Gedney, in the United States naval service and the men committed to jail. Ruiz and Montez were at once liberated, and demanded the negroes as their property; but the Supreme Court decided that the had no just claim, and directed the men to be liberated. The demand of the Spanish Minister never looked to them as slaves at all. It it was the opinion of the Secretary that his demand was fair, and ought to have been complied with under the 8th 9th or 10th articles of our treaty with Spain, the negroes must have been given up, not as slaves but as criminals, and they would have been sent to Cuba and executed; so those who claimed to be their owners must have lost their value entirely. Their claim had occupied the Supreme Court for two weeks, and the court declared that these negroes were the slaves of no man on earth.

Was the very extraordinary letter of the Secretary of State, which had been read here, giving his opinion on the claim of these Spanish slave dealers, in opposition to the finding of the Supreme Court, to be a law to the two Houses of Congress? If the question was yet to be decided, let it be decided by the Congress of the United states, and not by the opinion of the Secretary of State.

There had been a long correspondence between the Secretary and the Spanish Minister; and it was true that in the Supreme Court the instructions of the Secretary of State to Capt. Gedney were considered. The Spanish Minister made one demand for these negroes, and the district attorney of Connecticut another, but the Secretary of State had not demanded them. The ground of the Spanish Minister was, that the court could not take cognizance of the case, but that the President, "by his gubernatorial power" as President, should seize the ship and the negroes, and send them to Cuba.

And now the same Spanish Minister came here and asked the people of the United States to pay $50,000 to the pretended proprietors of these men, when he had, at the time, never demanded them as property, but as assassins. Such a total perversion of the whole subject never had been witnessed. God forbid that any claim should ever be allowed by Congress, which rested on such a false foundation!

He hoped therefore, that the House would not agree to make any such appropriation. The demand, if successful, would be a perfect robbery committed on the people of the United States.—Neither these slave dealers, nor the Spanish Government on their behalf, had any claim to this money whatever.

His friend from Ohio (Mr. Giddings) had told the House what was the real history of the case. This Ruiz and Montez were negro slave traders at Havana, in open violation of the laws of Cuba itself. They purchased a cargo of fresh negroes recently brought from the coast of Africa, and shipped them, contrary to the laws of Spain, having complied with the custom of those engaged in the same infamous occupation, by giving the Spanish Governor a bribe of ten dollars apiece for their negroes, for overlooking the laws and winking at their violation. In this manner they carried on their trade. The negroes rose in defence of their natural rights as men, and put to death the captain of the vessel and one of the owners; and, having thus recovered their liberty, were deceived by those traders who guided them here, when they were seized and treated as pirates, while their betrayers were at once set free. Their whole case had been adjudicated after full investigation, and the men set free and returned to their native country. And this claim for indemnity, set up by Spain, was utterly destitute of any foundation in justice or truth.

[Several other gentleman having also spoken to the question, the appropriation was, as heretofore report, rejected.]

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES.—We give to day very important despatches from the army. They are from Old Rough and Ready and Commodore Conner. The battle of Buena Vista and the landing of our troops at Vera Cruz, are most interesting and important events.

NOTICES.

To the President of the Iowa District, M. P. Church.—At or near Red Rock, Marion County, Iowa, you will find a lot of Methodist Protestants, who have been there fifteen months, and not seen a Radical Preacher. They are anxious to have preaching. Enquire for Thomas Karr—(a Union Society man.) D. C. CARSON.

New Subscribers this week, 9; discontinuances, 3.

Brother Finkbine, all right, save that Brothers D. and K. had delayed more than six months. They are each credited for three-fourths of the volume, for the sum sent, which is the best we can consistently do for them. Much obliged for your exertions in behalf of the paper.

Brother Cushman, our claim against Brother R. is only from beginning of Volume seven, having received nothing from him yet. Should there be error in previous account, as he thinks, we are not responsible for it. The account of Brother C. is just the same, and the dear man must not expect us to discontinue till he pays up. The law fixes that matter. Please let us hear again, soon, and receive, too. The money you speak of, was not enclosed.

A COUNTERFEIT.—Please send us no note of $2, Indiana S. Bank, unless it is known to be good. There is a base counterfeit in circulation, many specimens of which have been sent us, which we have in each case promptly returned to the sender.

L. Firestone, of Congress, Wayne county, Ohio, writes to us to procure a copy of Mr. M'Caine's Defence of Slavery. We inform him that wenever possessed a copy of the work. But the Post Office Address of Rev. A. M'C. is, Lotts' Edgefield District, South Carolina, at which place he can address him if he sees proper.

Brother Sears, we will write to Brother P. for explanation. We have changed the paper of E. J. to I. S., as requested at middle of the volume. Let Brother J settle to that time, and we will take S. as a new subscriber from that date. It is inconvenient for us to make such fractions.

OBITUARY.

DIED,—At Bainbridge, Ross county, Ohio, about the 25th of January last, MRS. ELIZA MURPHY, consort of Mr. John Murphy. Many will remember the amiable departed one, by her having been raised in the family of our friend, D. C. Carson, of Bainbridge. Mrs. M. was a member of the Methodist Protestant Church, enjoying the entire confidence of society, and much esteemed for her goodness of heart.

"Soon, soon, thy vacant seat,
And thy closed book of prayer,
The silence and the gloom,
Will whisper, death is there."

—At Marion, Ohio, on the morning of the 28th of March, 1847, MARGARET ELLEN, daughter of John and Rebecca Shunk, of that place, aged 2 years & 4 months.

Early, daughter, hast thou been called to realize the anticipated enjoyments of a world, far from mortal view.

WELLMAN'S ILLUSTRATED BOTANY.

VOL. II., 1847.

EDITED BY J. D. COMSTOCK, M. D.

Author of Botany, Natural Philosphy, Chemistry, Mineralogy, Geology, Natural History, Phylology, etc., assisted BY J. C COMSMOCK, ESQ.

THE success of the Illustrated Botany is no longer an experiment, for altho' it has been in existence but one year, it already has a circulation of about five thousand, a sufficient number to warrant its support, which cannot be said of any other work of the kind. Indeed, it is the only work of this character published in this country, which promises stability and a long life. We think the prospects of the second year of the Botany are very flattering. One reason for this opinion is, the fact that it is now very popular, having a large circle of friends. Another very important reason is, the securing of an Editor for the coming year, whose popularity as an author in the various branches of Natural Science, is so extensive as to leave his name familiar to every student in the sciences in this country. We are fully satisfied that the Botany will, under its present Editors, bear the severest criticism, and we intend that it shall become the

The last great Moral Fight.

BY REV. T. HARRISON.

The last great moral fight
Of freedom, truth, and right,
Is gloriously going on,
And soon the conquest will be won.
Oppression long has reigned—
Long his curs'd power maintain'd,
And millions in all lands
Have groaned beneath his crushing hands.
But now his demon sway
Begins to pass away,
And soon shall all our race
Be cheered by Freedom's smiling face.
The last great moral, &c.

And Error long has shed
His darkness, deep and dread,
Upon the heaven-formed mind,
Making it wretched, sad, and blind,
But soon his hour of doom
In righteous wrath will come,
And Truth on all shall shine
With light effulgent and divine.
The last great moral, &c.

And Wrong, too, long has hurled
His terrors round the world,
Marring its once-bright face,
Its moral beauty and its grace.
But he shall rule no more—
His rage ere long, be o'er,
And Right shall nobly stand,
By God enthroned, in every land.
The last great moral, &c.

From the National Era.

TO DELAWARE.

BY J. G. WHITTIER.

Thrice welcome to thy sisters of the East,
To the brown tillers of a rocky home,
With spray-wet locks to Northern winds released,
And hardy feet o'erswept by ocean foam;
And to the young nymphs of the golden West,
Whose harvest mantles, fringed with prairie bloom,
Trail in the sunset! Oh! redeemed and blest,
To the warm welcome of thy sisters come!
Let the weak chains which bind thee fall apart,
At the strong swell of thy awakened heart.
Broad Pennsylvania, down thy sail-white bay,
Shall give thee joy, and Jersey from her plains,
And the great lakes whose echoes, free alway,
Moaned never shoreward with the clank of chains,
Shall wave new sunbows in their tossing spray,
And with their waves keep cheerful holyday.
And, smiling on thee through her mountains rains,
Vermont shall bless thee, and the Granite peaks
And vast Katahdin, o'er his woods, shall wear
Their snow crowns brighter in the cold, keen air.
And Massachusetts, with her rugged cheeks
O'errun with grateful tears, shall turn to thee,
When at thy impulse the electric wire
Shall tremble northward with its woods of fire:
GLORY TO FREEDOM'S GOD! A SISTER STATE IS FREE!

The Immigrant's Lament.

[BY REQUEST.]

I'm sitting on the stile, Mary,
Where we sat side by side,
On a bright May morning, long ago,
When first you were my bride.—
The corn was springing fresh and green,
And the lark sung loud and high,
And the rose was on your lip, Mary,
And the love bright in your eye.

The place has little changed, Mary,
And the day as bright as then,
And the lark's loud song is in my ear,
The corn is green again.
But I miss that soft clasp of your hand,
And your breath warm on my cheek,
And I still keep listening for the word
You never more may speak.

'Tis but a step down yonder lane,
And the little church stands near;
The church, where we were wed, Mary!
I see the spire from here.
But the Grave yard lies between, Mary!
And my step might break your rest—
For I've lain you down to sleep,
With your babe upon your breast.

Oh, I'm very lonely now, Mary,
For the poor makes no new friends;
But, Oh! they love the better far,
The few our Father sends,—
And you were all I had—Mary!
My blessing and my pride:
Since my poor Mary died.

Your vows that have ———, Mary!
That still kept hoping on,
When the trust in God had left my soul,
And my arm's young strength was gone.
There was comfort ever in your life,
And a kind look on your brow;
I thank you for that same, Mary,
Though you can't hear me now.

I thank you for that gentle word,
When your heart was fit to break;
When the hunger-pain was gnawing there,
And you hid it for my sake.
I thank you for that pleasant smile,
When your heart was sad and sore;
Oh, I'm thankful you are gone, Mary,
Where grief can't reach you more.

I'm bidding you a long farewell,
My Mary, kind and true;
But I'll not forget you, darling one,
In the land I am going to.
They say there's bread and work for all,
And the sun shines always there;
But I'll not forget old Ireland,
Were she fifty times as old.

Elementary Principles and Articles of Religion.

MR. EDITOR, SIR: Permit me if you please, to call the attention of your readers to the elementary principles contained in our excellent book of discipline, and to a part of the articles of our faith. It will be entirely unnecessary for me to enter into a detail of circumstances, connected with the organization of the M. P. Church, the history of the transaction is before the world, the present and future generations will judge of all the matters connected with it, and award to each their respective dues. There is one thing, however, connected with the organization of the M. P. Church, with which I am particularly pleased, and that is, her elementary principles; the noble men who formed the convention of 1830 entered upon their duties with a determination to secure the rights of all parties and persons concerned, perhaps there never was, and perhaps there never will be more liberal and christian principles penned, and compressed in the same space, than is to be found on page 14 and 15 of our book of discipline. Here the church is defined as a society of believers in the Lord Jesus Christ with the Savior as its Head. Here the membership of the lover of Christ is secured, here the right of private judgment, and the freedom of expression is maintained, guarded only by the term, that it shall not violate the laws of God or the rights of man. Here excommunication is prohibited, except for immorality, unchristian doctrines, or neglect of duties enjoined by the word of God; with an absolute declaration, that church trials shall be conducted on gospel principles ONLY. Here we have the equality of the ministry, and none are allowed to lord it over God's heritage, or to have dominion over the faith of the saints. Here we have it declared no rules are to be enforced but in accordance with the holy scriptures, and none but those, that may be necessary to carry into effect the great practical system of christianity. Here the great principle of representation is secured, and here the giving and retaining of power, to form rules and regulations, is said to be inherent in the ministers and members of the church, and may be delegated from time to time, as circumstances may require, under the above restrictions. Here the duty of ministers and members to maintain godliness and oppose all moral evil, is set forth, and here the obligations of ministers, to be faithful in the discharge of their pastoral and ministerial duties are forcibly declared, here also the membership are taught their duty to respect and support the faithful minister of Christ, and lastly the church is instructed to secure to her official bodies the necessary authority to secure good government; but at the same time, she has no right to create any distinct or independent, sovereignties. In glancing over the items contained in those elementary principles, there appears to be no redundancy, neither any deficiency. The rights of all are secured, membership—private judgment—freedom of expression—faith—reprepresentation and in fact all that is necessary to the enjoyment of fellowship both with God and man. Now Sir, I have examined the disciplines of several of the Orthodox churches throughout the land, and find them all destitute of a bill of rights, the proper guards are not thrown around the legislative bodies, matters are left too much at loose ends, hence the desire to increase clerical power, and to bind burdens upon the shoulders of the membership, which the priests are not willing to touch with one of their fingers, consequently we find for want of elementary principles, and a constitution, the church whose legislative, judicial and executive body are all the same set of men, may enact what laws they please, and carry them into effect, the restrictive rules to the contrary notwithstanding. And yet as heartily as I wish this divided, distracted and retrograding church to amend her discipline, I am inclined to believe with all her faults, she has too high a sense of honor, to commit either grand or petty larceny on any other church, to build up and support her claims before the public. I suppose sir, churches may be guilty of Larceny as well as individuals, and churches may be guilty of Plagiarism as well as individuals, any church therefore who can take an entire set of elementary principles, out of the discipline of a sister church, without the consent of the church, or without the proper acknowledgement from whence they came, is either guilty of larceny, or plagiarism. For larceny, there may be some apology under certain circumstances, for instance if the crime is perpetrated to perpetuate life, this would be a palliation of the case, the individual may indeed be arrested and a jury may find him guilty, but under the circumstances, may recommend him to mercy, and if indeed that secession from the Methodist Episcopal Church in whose book of discipline, I found almost all our elementary principles embodied, without giving us due credit for them, or without asking leave of our church in her ecclesiastical capacity, to allow her to copy those articles, and insert them as her own, if she really needed them to bring her into life, or to keep her alive after her birth; were I a jury man with those facts before me, I would pronounce her guilty, yet at the same time the case may be palliated; she could not struggle into life without them and the current of life could not be kept up without them, they had been thrown out before the American people, they loved them, the M. P. Church under her elementary principles constitution, and book of discipline, according to her age had out grown any other christian church in the land. Episcopacy in a good degree had been exploded,—and the abolition leaders of the new church came to the conclusion right or wrong, hit or miss, the elementary principles of the M. P. Church, must be embodied in the new discipline and palmed upon the world as the production of the northern abolitionists, that formed the Wesleyan secession. Now sir, I think this is radically wrong, the grand and noble sentiments contained in those principles, are alike the production of northern and southern men, and were brought into existence by a set of men who were not schismatics, or separationists, but men who were cruelly persecuted, and driven to the necessity of going out, and setting up for themselves, having felt the rod of oppression, and proscription and still smarting under the lash of clerical usurpation and power, from every part of our land they met, and framed those articles comprising our elementary principles, our constitution and book of discipline, presented it to the inhabitants of the republic of North America, it found favor in their eyes, it was based upon the noble principles of equal rights, churches were established, thousands and tens of thousands flocked to the banner of lay representation, the experiment was tried, it proved successful, and such was its success, that when a new church is to be formed, our elementary principles to stand in front of its book of discipline, and that too without giving any credit for them. If it be denied that this is larceny. I call upon an ex-president of the Wesleyan Methodist connection, whether or not it be plagarism, I would suppose he well understands the nature of this crime, as he stood charged with it in the M. E. Church. The definition of the term as given by "Baily is plagiary (from plagiare French, of plagiarius Latin,) one who steals other people's works and puts them under his own name, a book thief." Well sir, these principles and book of discipline a considerable part of which is, verbatim, et literatim, et punctuatim, with the discipline of the M. P. Church, and ought, as such to have been acknowledged, it would have been easy to have placed inverted commas at the beginning and end of elementary principles, it would have shown it was extracted from some author or book, and it would have saved the mortifying acknowledgment, that these principles were M. P. principles.

I was very much diverted, Mr. Editor, with the advertisement to this Wesleyan book of discipline, it says, it is not presumed it is perfect, but it is believed to be better than any extant, pray sir HOW MUCH BETTER ARE THE ELEMENTARY PRINCIPLES THAN THOSE OF THE M. P. CHURCH? They say it will be better still when it shall have passed the ordeal of the 1st General Conference, it has passed this ordeal, I suppose the 2nd edition is better, for I should think the General Conference would determine on moral honesty and have annexed to their discipline, in large letters ELEMENTARY PRINCIPLES FROM THE M. P. CHURCH DISCIPLINE, and so with many other things we shall find in this best discipline now extant, churches as well as individuals should go upon the principle "honesty is the best policy," and whilst one church cries out against man-stealing, be careful of book stealing; and whilst they say "render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's," we say render to the church the things that belong to the church. I claim those principles to be amongst the best of human production, and no church that slanders us by charging us with being PRO-SLAVERY, ought they being judges, and witnesses, to take any thing of ours, without at least acknowledging, so much good has come out of Nazareth. Come ye Wesleyans, toe the trig, step up to the mark, tell us where you got your elementary principles from, then I will ask you a little about your articles of faith, and discipline. Yours.

ELIZABETH CRAPS.

Elizabeth, daughter of Elizabeth and Asa Beal, and wife of Rev. Jacob Craps, departed this life February 15th, 1847, age 38 years.

Sister C. was born in Jefferson Co. this state in the month of November 1809. When about fourteen years of age she experienced the benefits of religion, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, where she remained 'till, after her marriage which was in the year 1823, but upon an organization of a Protestant Methodist society in the neighborhood where she lived, she, with her husband, joined the M. P. Church in the year 1830, in the communion of which she lived, without just cause of rebuke until the day of her death.

Her exit was that of one who had made death a matter of reflection and preparation in life. She was not taken on surprise, but was found having on the wedding garment, and waiting the coming of her Lord to receive her to himself to eat the supper of the Lamb.

Sister Craps possessed a heart of friendship and kindness but rarely surpassed, making happy the circle in which she moved. Her attachments to her husband and children were warm and unabating. She was emphatically the dutiful wife, the sympathising and affectionate mother, industrious almost to a fault, laboring almost incessantly for the welfare of her family. As a member of the church to know her, was to esteem her highly for Christ's sake. But alas, her seat in the church is vacant, or filled by another the weary herald of the cross will no more receive from her lips, the kind and pressing invitation to her frugal meal manifesting her anxious solicitude for his welfare. The old church where she used to worship, will no more echo back the tones of her shrill clear voice, while she talks of Jesus, and glory. No! She has passed away like the flower of the field, but not until having taken an affectionate farewell of all her relatives, and friends who were present, and spoken to them of the bright prospects which lay before her, then with the shout of victory upon her tongue, she stept to her place in the skies, she is dead. O reader, have you ever seen a christian die? Then you may know how she died. With serene, holy, transporting rapture, the spirit in prospect of soon quitting the cumbrous clay, seemed only to hover near the surface of its tenement waiting the coming of the celestial chariot to convey it away to mansions of glory on high. This triumphant death and the sweet resignation she manifested through her sickness were the rewards in part of a devoted life in a Redeemer's cause. She has left an affectionate husband and ten children, the youngest of which was but a few days old at the time of her death. May the Lord in the tenderness of his mercy and compassion sustain our dear brother under his painful bereavement.

JOHN JORDON.

It is made our painful duty to record the death of brother John Jordon who departed this life Feb. 27th 1847, being 75 years old.

Father Jordon was born in Franklin county Pennsylvania, January 17, 1772. His father was killed in the Revolutionary war when he was but two years old, but he remained in the same Co., and was raised by an Uncle.

Immediately after his marriage he removed to Westmoreland county in the same state, where he was, some few years afterwards, bereaved of his wife. He then removed to this State in 1812, and settled in Muskingum county where he married his second wife, Miss Orpha Hoagland in 1813, with whom he lived until separated by death. In 1816 he became greatly alarmed for the salvation of his soul, and in this excited state of mind he united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and soon after he was enabled to rejoice, having a lively sense of God's forgiving grace. In 1827 he removed to the farm where he spent the remaining part of his life.

Br. Jordan was possessed of a sound and discriminating mind and upon an examination of the goverment of the M. P. Church he gave to it his decided preference, and united with that body, and gave his hearty aid for its advancement and prosperity.

His house was emphatically the home of the pilgrim while passing to his home in the skies, and was the place of public preaching for many years, and he was the leader of the small society organized in his neighborhood. The old soldier has ceased to fight, the battle is o'er, the victory won. The sword is laid down for the harp, and the noise and air of battle for the enrapturous, and God honoring shouts of praise. The victor sleeps in the grave, covered with the glory of conquests, and triumphant victory. Yes he has gone, gone from the bosom of a numerous and highly respectable family over which he presided as a priest in his own house to the bosom of God—to the society of the blest—to the family of God in its exalted and glorified state. Yea to the church of the first born in heaven, whose names are written in rainbow colors in the Lambs book of life, and who shine as the stars, yea, as the sun, in the kingdom of their father, forever and ever.

His afflictions were severe, and protracted, but he endured all with christian resignation, no complaint or murmuring word escaped his lips.

Our brother was possessed of that kind of a disposition so peculiarly calculated to make and retain friends, a large circle of which he has left in connection with a devoted wife and some 12 or 14 children to lament his death.

He died a christian, peaceful in mind,—joyful in spirit—triumphant in hope, and strong in the faith, giving glory to God.

His remains repose in the grave-yard near the place where he has passed many years of his life, there to await the resurrection of the blest. While we stand by his grave may reflection upon his virtues, and end, inspire the prayer. Let me die the death of the righteous, and my last end be like his.

MRS. ELIZABETH MORRISON.

BR. BASSETT: With your approbation I would lay some of the sorrows of heart before my friends. A wise and righteous Disposer of events, has been pleased to take from me my companion. She departed this life on the 6th inst., after an illness of only three days 6½ hours, of confestive remituant fever. And although her health had been quite poor for the last twelve years, yet for the last 18 months it had improved so that we began to hope that she might see some years of comfort. But how short sighted are we? And how uncertain all earthly prospects? The stroke falls heavy and I feel it hard to say: Thy will be done, especially when I look at the burthen she bore, and trials she endured, while I was called to leave the care of a growing family, and the weight of my pecuniary matters on her hands. Yet in her judgment, discretion and decision as well as her devotion to God, I felt secure. Few are they that can appreciate the loss, perhaps none but those who are similarly situated.

Her maiden name was Elizabeth Johnson, daughter of William and Phebe Johnson, born July 11th 1799, in that part of Monongahela now Preston, Co. Va. We were united in marriage, Feb 16th 1823, and emigrated to this county in 1826. In her 17th year she became deepiy concerned about her eternal interests (having been early taught to fear the Lord) and in a short time embraced the Savior with a loving heart. She united with the M. E. Church, and although the only one of a large family at that time that professed religion, and had much to learn; yet such was the depth of her piety and her deportment as to command the confidence of all who knew her. From the dictates of her judgment, in 1833, she withdrew from a large circle of friends in the M. E. C. and identified her interests with the M. P. C. using her own language, with them to live and die. Better to obey God than men. And duty is ours but consequences belong to God.

During the last year of her life from her own affliction and my absence from home, she was deprived of almost all the public means of grace, yet her ardent attachment to the cause of Christ, was undiminished. She always expressed a willingness to die, although she had a strong desire to see her young family raised before her vigilant eyes were closed in death. Her reason was dethroned a great part of the time during her last illness. She suffered much, but at last died easy.

She filled the various relations in life, that of daughter, sister, companion, mother, as well as member of the church with dignity and honor, so as to command the confidence, esteem and warm regards of all the virtuous who knew her. But she is gone and we must soon follow. Oh may we be ready.

Your afflicted and sincere brother,

SAMUEL MORRISON.

Freeport, Ia. March 18, 1847.

Breaking off the Telegraph Wires.—Fatal accident.—A most singular accident occured on the Boston and Albany railroad, on Saturday last 27th inst. A freight train was passing along at a rapid rate between Boston and Springfield, when the wire of the electric telegraph which runs within a few feet of the track, suddenly broke. It is a practice for the brake men to stand or sit on the top of the cars. The force of the wind, it is supposed, carried the flying end of the wire against the train. It struck the locomotive, wound around the smoke pipe, snapped, and swept across, the top of the train. The forward brakeman was badly cut about his head and arms. His right arm will probably be amputated. Mr. Pratt, the conductor, who was in the middle, was slightly injured. The last brakeman, named Coleman, was instantly killed. The wire seems to have wound around and dragged him to the ground.—His body was horribly cut and bruised.—N. Y. Sun.

The fire at Columbus, Geo., 20th inst., began in Harken's cotton warehouse, occupied by Hall and Deblois, agents for the Lowell factories, which was destroyed, with Reed and Co's. store. Of the cotton burnt, 25 bales belonged to T. B. Howard, 125 bales to Gen. Lowe, and 1131 bales to the Lowell factories. Barnard & Schley lost 900 sacks salt, 125 bbls. molasses and 75 bbls. whiskey; total loss, 60,000, mostly insured. It was the work of an incendiary.

Advertisement Extraordinary.

DEATH & CO.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in Spirit,

Take this opportunity of informing their friends and a discerning public, that they continue the trade of making Drunkards, Bankrupts, Beggars, and Maniacs; on the most reasonable terms---at the shortest notice.

The advertisers return their most sincere thanks to their numerous, steady, and attached customers, and to all the Tippling part of the community, for the increasing countenance and extensive patronage which they now receive; and they hope that the many proofs which are to be found in every town, village, and district of America, of the success of D. & Co. in the above line of business, will secure to them the increased support of all Drunkards, Dram-drinkers, and occasional customers, as well as forever to silence the advocates of temperance societies, those bitter enemies of his long established and popular trade.

D. & Co. beg to assure the public, that the article in which they deal is the best and most pleasant Poison in the world, and has never been known to fail in any instance where the individual has preserved in the use of it for the limited time D. & Co. prescribe.

In order to do business in a respectable style, the advertisers have obtained a License from the State; under whose benevolent auspices they are legally authorized to bring the families of their customers, to misery and to wound, maim and beggar; and drive to delirium and death, as many as the public good requires. In particular D. & Co. will spare no pains to secure the Eternal Damnation of as many as will favor them with their countenance and support. To accomplish these desirable ends, it is only necessary for the individual to take half a glass occasionally till he feels that quantity insufficient to gratify the craving appetite, which it will soon create; and when this Whiskey appetite is formed, the results which D. & Co. aim are secured, as the person is then prepared to brave temporal and eternal misery for the sake of another glass.

For the accommodation of their numerous customers, and for the despatch of their increasing business, Death & Co. have appointed a sufficient number of active agents, who are stationed at convenient distances in the streets of cities, and along the highways, cross roads, and in the villages of every country district. D. & Co's. agents may be known by the Red-curtained Window, and the sign over the door—Entertainment for MAN and BEAST, Refreshments, &c. &c. And may be found ready for business at all hours, by day or night (SUNDAYS not excepted.)

Satisfactory references can be given to the Bridewells, Lunatic Asylums, Hospitals, the Gaols, the Gallows, or the Drunkard's Fireside.

N. B.—D. & Co. beg to caution all Tipplers and Dram-drinkers from giving heed to whatever Parsons, Preachers, Medical Men, and all advocates of Temperance Societies, may say against spirit-drinking as these gentlemen are avowed enemies to this respectable soul-and-body destroying business.—Christian Observer.

SITTING UP WITH THE DEAD.

There are many wrong customs found in this world of error and sin. One of those, to which I wish to call the attention of the readers of the Advocate, prevails to some extent in different parts of the west; and I do not remember to have seen any thing published against it. I refer to the manner of sitting up with the dead. When a death occurs on the evening immediately succeeding, the house where the death occurred, is visited by quite a number of young people of both sexes, with the ostensible design of watching with the corpse, and sympathizing with the bereaved friends; but, if we may judge from their conduct, the real object is very different. It should be recollected that many families are not furnished with a sufficient number of rooms, so the family have to sleep in the same room where the corpse lies. They retire in order to rest, after spending sleepless nights of anxiety with the sick. But, alas for them! no rest can they find; for there are from eight to ten young men and women in the room, whispering, giggling, laughing, talking, joking, and almost every thing else but praying and meditating, until one might suppose it to be more like a bar-room of a crowded hotel, than the house of mourning. The family are not only deprived of the rest which they so much need, but their lacerated hearts are pained by the unbecoming levity of the company—unfit, at any time, for a rational being, and much more so when they should weep with those that weep. Even the feelings of pious persons, and ministers of religion, are at times wholly disregarded. There are many evils connected with this custom. It is a shame to keep it up any longer. I hope it will be abandoned. It would be much better to have no person at all to sit up with the corpse, and the family be left to their grief alone, than to have such miserable comforters. A FRIEND TO MOURNERS.

POPERY IN HAYTI.—Rev. Mr. Graves, editor of the Christian Reflector, in a letter in that journal, gives the following information in reference to the Roman Catholic religion in Hayti:

"The Haytien Catholics refuse any allegiance whatever to the Pope of Rome. They regard the Papal authority as opposed to their national and civil liberty; and in consistency with their republican principles, they allow of no archbishops, bishops, deans, or other Church dignitaries, save the single order of priests; and of the appointing or deposing of these the President claims the right and power. The Roman Catholic religion is, therefore, not only recognized by the government as the state religion, but is subject to legislations and executive authority. Protestantism has thus one decided advantage over Romanism; for entire toleration is granted; and with the internal regulations of Protestant Churches, and the conduct of their ministers, there is no governmental interference."

DEATH OF A PATRIARCH.—Our readers well remember elder Harvey, who preached in this city about a year ago, and attracted great interest on account of his extraordinary age. He died in Franklin, Herkimer County, on the 18th inst, in the 112th year of his age, having lived two years longer than Joshua of old. The probability is that travelling, change of climate, diet and excitement hurried his departure. He was a soldier in the revolutionary war in New England, but commenced preaching after peace, and continued a faithful pious member until the day of his death He did not appear as old as he was represented to be, but his age was well authenticated. Great events transpired in his life time.—N. Y. Sun.

Death of an eminent colored man.—The colored population of this city have met with a painful bereavement in the death of the Rev. Theodore Sedwick Wright, pastor of the First Colored Presbyterian Church. He died on the 25th inst. in the 50th year of his age. He was greatly esteemed by all classes of the community. His funeral will be attended this (Monday) morning at 11 o'clock from his late residence, corner of West Broadway and North Moore street.—N. Y. Sun.

BURNT.—The Brig Diploma from New York bound up the Rappahanock river, while lying at anchor caught fire and was burnt to the water's edge.

TO persons who are acquainted with the character and objects of the CHRISTIAN WORLD, as they have been developed during the last six years, it is only necessary to say, that as soon as one thousand paying subscribers are secured, the paper will be put to press. The Old Subscription List ought to supply this number at once.

To other persons, it is proper to remark, that the Christian World, in print, is intended to reflect the Christian World, in action—in a word, daguerreotype it: and then for purposes of common advantage, to compare the organized and operature Religion of the Age with the Religion of the Bible.

The enlarged literary and business agencies of the Establishment, are deemed amply sufficient to assure the public of successful management. Its immediate connexion with the CHRISTIAN ATHENEUM—an Institution which is to be furnished with many of the principal organs of Church and State, both in Europe and America,—will give its conductors early access to invaluable sources of universal intelligence.

DIRECTIONS

1. On receipt of this Prospectus, let the Old subscribers at every Post-office, appoint one of their number, or some other suitable person, an Agent. Let him send us, at once as many names and as much money as possible. In cases where substantial agents make themselves responsible for their subscribers, this responsibility will be regarded as equivalent to payment in advance—provided they settle their accounts within six months. Even in such cases, however, immediate payments are decidedly preferable; and, to encourage them, the commissions to agents are arranged thus:—On cash orders, 25 per cent.: on deferred remittances, 12½ per cent.

2. As the Prospectus will be widely distributed, let all persons who see it, and feel an interest in it, act promptly in the manner described above. It is thought that little effort will be sufficient to procure a company, or club at almost any Post-office in the Union. The times increasingly demand just such a publication as is proposed.

Address,—W. S. STOCKTON, General Agent, Philadelphia, Pa.: or either of the Associate Editors. All orders will be punctually attended to.

MEMORIA TECHNICA:

Or, the Art of Abbreviating those Studies which give the greatest labor to the Memory; including Numbers, Historical Dates, Geography, Astronomy, Gravities, &c.; also Rules for Memorizing Technicalities, Nomenclature, Proper Names, Prose, Poetry, and Topics in general.—Embracing all the available Rules found in Mnemonics or Mnemotechny of Ancient and Modern Times. To which is added a Perpetual Almanac for Two Thousand Years of Past Time and Time to Come. Adapted to the use of Schools. By LORENZO D. JOHNSON. Second edition, revised and improved.—Boston.

PRICE—50 CENTS.

In presenting to the public the "Memoria Technica," which, in some respects, may be said to contain a new theory of instruction, the publishers beg leave to call the attention of Teachers, School Committees, and others interested in education, the peculiar merits of the work.

It has been already introduced into several of our best and most popular schools in Boston and vicinity, and has also received high commendation from many of our most distinguished clergymen and other literary men who have examined it.

Notices of the Press.

'This system of Mnemotechny, differing considerably from the one introduced by Prof. Gouraud, is designed to furnish all the rules for aiding the memory without lessening mental culture, which can be made available during the course of elementary study. The illustrations may be easily comprehended by any person of ordinary mental capacity, and the application of the principle upon which the system is based must necessarily furnish an agreeable and useful exercise to the mind. It is well adapted to common school instruction, and may be made a very profitable study, if rightly pursued. Every page of the work gives evidence of a desire to present the laws of association distinctly & clearly, so as to enable the learner to establish such relations between things, events, &c., as will aid the memory. We commend the book to teachers and all interested in this important subject.'—N. Y. Teachers' Advocate.

'The art of improving the memory is surely a very important one, and whoever contributes any thing to further this end, certainly renders an important service to the public. Mr Johnson, we believe, has succeeded in bringing his system of mnemonics into such a practicable form, as will render it an essential aid to all who do not naturally have a great power of memory.'—Ch. Witness

'This is a treatise on artificial memory prepared for the use of schools. The subject is a curious one, and worthy of attention.'—Boston Recorder.

'This system of mnemonics, being the first work of the kind ever prepared for the use of schools, and being arranged and simplified that any one of ordinary capacities may easily acquire a knowledge of its principles, is certainly worthy of examination and study. It is most emphatically an aid to the memory, and as such, is well adapted to common school instruction. We heartily commend it to public notice, while we hope that Mr Johnson will receive the reward due to his industry and perseverance by seeing this work extensively introduced into our schools, public and private.'—Tem. Standard.

'The author promises to endow his pupils with an infinite faculty of memory. If he can do it without much trouble on the part of the recipients, he will do a good thing, and as far as we can judge, he seems likely to accomplish it. While his system is much more simple than any we have before examined, it contains a great deal more. Moreover, it makes the thing a matter of practical education, within the reach of all.'—Chronotyp.

'There are minds of a certain class that are wont to be interested in mnemonics, and we doubt not that such may find valuable assistance in a work of this kind.—N. E. Puritan.

'The book, although designed and adapted to the use of schools, is nevertheless worthy the attention of all persons who wish to assist or strengthen memory.'—N. E. Washingtonian.

'A very ingenious and useful book, designed to shorten the labor of those studies which require the exercise of memory, by a system of memorizing.'—Reading Gazette, Pa.

We feel no hesitation in recommending this work to the deliberate attention of teachers, and the guardians of youth. We learn that it is received into several of the schools in Boston, and used as an auxiliary help to the studies now pursued by the pupils.'—Boston Courier.

'We noticed the first edition of this book a short time since, and in addition to what we then said, will only say now, that it is prepared by one who has paid great attention to the subject, and who has been employed to teach his system by some of our most experienced teachers and wisest men.'—Ch. Register.

'We have given the work a partial examination, sufficient to become convinced that the subject is one of importance.'—Ch. Watchman.

The Memoria Technica is now studied in some of the best schools; and the system taught in it appears to be much approved by those who have made trial of it.—Evening Traveller.

The work contains a vast amount of important and useful information; which, aside from its value as a system of instruction, render it, as has been justly said by many who have examined it, well worth the price of the work as a mere book of reference. Published by

OF THE FIRST SETTLEMENT OF OHIO.

NO. VIII.

Friend Bassett: In my last number I gave several incidents during the war, without fixing the date, because I cannot determine them, nor do I think it material. I have heard the facts related by those who were actors and they serve to illustrate the difficulties the early inhabitants had to encounter; and, though this state has now risen to be a nation, and this great valley is now teeming with Millions of inhabitants, they ought to remember their origin; and that He who raises up, and putteth down nations as it seemeth good unto Him, hath given to us great and precious privileges which if we abuse, we must expect his chastisements.

The following, incident I have received of Mrs. Dr. Mathews, whose father, (Mr. Leavens,) and large family lived in the Stockade at Newberry, at the time. I wish however to protest against these things being suffered to excite enmity and hatred of the primitive inhabitants of this land;—because they kill, and scalp, women and children. I can cite cases of more intense barbarity of the whites, towards their race; and in all the cruelties they have practised towards us, I have never heard of their violating females, or practising cruelty other than killing, to children, when they were prisoners. To men they will add torture to captivity, because they are warriors; but to women and children never. On the 16th of March, 1792, a Mr. Brown who had arrived at Newberry with his family the day before, went to a lot he had purchased near half a mile above the Stockade, where some land was cleared, and a cabin to put up, to set out some fruit trees, which he had brought down the river with him. He had with him a man, and a boy, his son. The day was mild and very pleasant. A party of men were working on the second bottom, back of the Stockade, and Mr. Leavens chopping wood on his lot next above the fort, near the river. Towards night, Brown's wife thought she would go and see the place they were to live, and took with her two little girls her daughters, and an other girl of the name of Dunham; she had also a child at the breast, of about 10 months; a daughter of Mr. Leavens wished also to go, but was prevented by her mother, or sisters. As they passed Mr. Leavens, they stopped a few minutes to talk with him:—when they had passed him about forty rods, he heard the woman scream,—saw two Indians run from the second bank to where she was, and retreat again to the woods, in two or three minutes. The men back of the fort were also alarmed, and hastened to secure it against attack;—Mr. Leavens also escaped to the fort. The act was so daring they expected that a large party of Indians were in the vicinity, and would attack the Stockade; but after waiting a suitable time, and hearing nothing of Indians, or of Brown and those with him, they concluded that Brown and his companions were killed or were prisoners. A part of the men of the fort, (there were but seven in all) went out and found the woman dead. The three little girls missing, but two tommahawked, scalped and insensible; the other scalped and sensible, but unable to walk. Brown and his companions, they could not find. The dead and wounded were carried to the fort. The suckling child was alive, but had a bruise on the side of the head; whether from the fall, or a stroke of the tommahawk, did not appear. It was covered with the blood of its mother. It was given into the care of Mrs. Mathews (then Miss Leavens) who undressed, and washed it. It was not scalped, and survived. In undressing the little girl who had her senses, they found a deep wound from a knife, and she soon after died. The other two, before morning. About 10 o'clock at night, Brown and his companions demanded admission at the gate. The garrison were greatly alarmed, supposing that they had been taken prisoners, and now were forced by the Indians to make the application, in order to get the gate opened, and were at hand to secure the benefit. The men in the Stockade made them walk round it, two or three times, to satisfy themselves that now Indians were present, as well as questioned them as to the circumstances of their escape; when, they were admitted. It seems Brown heard his wife scream, saw the Indians, and ran to the bank of the river, and secreted themselves; where they lay until after night had spread its sable curtains over the whole scene, the families after this, for a time went to the different forts in Belpre, Mr. Guthries to the upper Stockade, and Mr. Leavens to farmers little. They returned however before the war was over. Previous to this when Mr. Leavens left his cabin to go into a Stockade, he was under the necessity of leaving some property in the house—this was destroyed by the Indians; though it did not appear to be the policy to burn or destroy the houses. The big bottom block-house was burned, but most of the deserted buildings were not.

One spy was killed on the little Hocking not far from the mouth. A Mr. Davis who lived in the upper Stockade of Belpre, had been complaining for some time of toothache; he was missing for some time, and it could not be told what had become of him. His body was eventually found some distance above, under the bank, where an old skiff had been left on the bank. It was supposed he went to get the iron, or something from it, and was killed by the ever watchful enemy.

When we look over this western world, and see the teeming millions peaceably, and busily engaged in the various pursuits of husbandry, the arts, mechanics, and mercantile affairs; our canals, turnpikes, and rail-roads, loaded with the produce of the soil, and the industry of our people, and 'find none to molest or make them afraid' we can hardly realise that this transformation has all taken place within the memory of one individual, I can hardly realise its truth, or the trials of the pioneers—fifty-nine years ago the 7th day of this month, saw the first settlement of this state. Then most of our bread-stuffs were brought from the Monongahela. Our salt had to be packed over the mountains on the backs of horses, and cost the consumer from six to eight dollars a bushel. Now we make millions which is sold for 25 cents, or less per bushel, and taken to all parts of the State. Iron and nails, also had the same method of transit, and a like comparitive value. A little flax, and a few skins formed the articles taken East to barter for salt and iron, &c. Now we are sending immense quantities of our bread stuffs to relieve a famishing population in Europe; and building not only steamboats, almost innumerable, to carry on the commerce on our rivers and lakes, but large ships, both of wood and Iron, designed to navigate the ocean to any part of the world. Truly the dealings of Providence towards us, have been a wonder of mercy.

I have mentioned that it was scarcely ever known that the females who were taken prisoners, were violated, still those nations that are savage, treat the females as inferiors, and as war and the chase is the province of the men, so the women are made to do the labor, and carry the burdens; and female prisoners are the victims of this prejudice. Mr. J. C. Guthrie has given me the following case of this kind.

On a Sabbath afternoon, towards the close of the war in 1794, Stephen Guthrie and Joseph Leavens went into the woods to find the cows, they soon heard the bells, and followed the cattle down the river, as they were going from home; they did not overtake them until they got into the bottom at the mouth of big Hocking, some miles below: most of the way narrows; the consequence was, they did not get back until after dark; their friends were alarmed, supposing they might be lost in the woods, they fired several heavy guns, that they might direct their way by the sound. The next year, after the treaty with Wayne had caused the prisoners to be given up; one a woman, going up the river in a boat, stopped at Newberry, and enquired what caused the firing, on a certain Sabbath night? they recollected the circumstances, and told her;—she said it had caused her great distress. The Indians had gone to where she had lived on Cheat river, killed her husband and taken her, with two small children. They had travelled all day and crossed the Ohio on a raft, and were encamping in the narrows below Newberry, when these guns were fired, which alarmed the Indians, so that they hastily renewed their march, and she was obliged to carry her children all night, fearing that if they lagged they would kill the children, rather than be hindered by them. It was probable that the lives of the two, Guthrie and Leavens, were saved by the decamping of the Indians, for it was in their track home that the Indians had located for the night.

A Mr. Armstrong lived in Virginia near the head of the Island now called Blanerhasset's, and had a floating mill on the Virginia side. He, his wife, and several children were killed by the Indians in 1794. Two sons who were at the mill escaped. One of these now resides in Columbus. Mrs. Mathews recollects the killing of them but cannot give all the circumstances.

The Flight of Time.

CHAPTER I.

Perceivable only in the distance gone over, by the past and passing events.

It was on an evening in autumn, when the forest was tinged with golden hue, and sky serene, and elements calm; no roaring wind among the trees, but a slight quaking of the leaves, as if in the last quiver of death, that I arrived in the vicinity of my place of nativity, after having been absent from there a number of years.

It was in the pleasant valley of the Little Miami, below the confluence of "Tod's Fork."

I stopped at a friend's near by, and after taking refreshment, had a desire to visit the particular spot of my juvenile days; commingled by recollection, with my boyish hopes of future prosperity and greatness. Greatness alas! all hope is vain, all greatness folly; all pleasure pain, but that found in virtue's path, and an unflinching determination to maintain moral order; even, if need be, at the expense of all worldly glory and prosperity. How wonderfully all things here had changed—it seemed as though the location of places had undergone a change; for how different the common appearance of the country.

The various internal impprovements, had evidently shaped both roads and farms, to suit the convenience of their projectors. Meditating on these changes, reflections of my youthful associations became connected, which upon second thought, I found also to have changed. And being transmitted, though imperceptibly, into that melancholy frame peculiar to such scenes and trains of thought; I realized, in a manner I never before did, that solemn truth attested by matter of fact, as well as by revelation, that all things earthly are but transient; having no permanent existence here.

At length I found myself atthe desired place; it being a few hundred yards from any of the above mentioned improvements, had not been meddled with. It hence retained many of its original features, which brought fresh to my recollection, many a playful sport, with many a parental smile and reproof. The periods when those scenes transpired, lie buried in the lapse of time; while the scenes themselves, to aid our conceptions of its flight, and our equal velocity down its ever rolling current, by the sight of well remembered places and objects, are present to the mind in recollections.

But where now are my father and mother, and some of my sisters and brothers; and many who were actors with me in the scenes now passing in fancy before me? They have passed from here: they are gone forever.

CHAPTER II.

Night drew on.

It was twilight gray, and my curiosity satisfied so far as the nature of the case, and the circumstances would admit; so I set out for the dwelling of my friends, which stands on an elevation, hard by the "Little Miami rail-road." Here the steam waggons pass and repass, both daily and nightly; whose appearance, in the night, resembles that of a flaming torch; and their speed, on a straight and level plain, that of lightning; and their jarring sound, that of distant thunder. As I approached the brow of a hill, studded with sugar maple, overlooking the railroad, distant near a mile, I stopped to gaze on the candles that peeped from the windows of the houses, that dotted the opening plain below, on either side of the river as if in imitation of the "star spangled" concave above. I could perceive, with infallible certainty, that the lights in the plain below, were imperceptibly "passing away," excepting by the amount consumed; and at this rate, would soon be extinct; hence my contemplations passed from these, to those above in the etherial blue. Will they also pass away? Will they too, become old, and worn from use, in holding forth the glory of God to man; that he may learn righteousness, fathfulness, and truth, and acquire a change? Yes, "they shall perish, but thou remainest; and they shall wax old as doth a garment; and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed: but thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail." Then O! my soul, hope thou in God, and in His son Jesus Christ with unshaken confidence and love; and though all things earthly should fail thee—He will not fail thee, or ever deceive thee—He is forever the same. Lost in the amazing and incomprehensible contrast, between life's short day, and eternal duration; me thought I could discern the human soul, my own soul while in the body, as it were in a state of embryo, yet of that perfection, to lay a foundation for a wonderful accountability for its moral actions here. And though, by faith, conceiving the soul or spirit of man a perfect one in point of attributes, possessing in a very small and limited degree, every one possessed by its Creator; yet, these small and limited attributes of the human soul, though perfect in their nature, in point of perfection in rectitude, wisdom, truth &c., could but be regarded as in a state of embryo. The inexhaustible means provided for this perfection, and the inexpressible glory at the end of the race presented, to induce man to run in wisdom's ways, seem alike unavailing. Unthinking soul; and sin, how strong it binds; he turns a deaf ear to wisdom's voice, and his back toward her prize, and plants his heel upon the mercy of God; thus determines not to be prevailed upon to comply with the terms of goodness, and to be saved from sin through grace; and thankfully submit to the discipline necessary to wear out vicious habits. Whilst thus considering the unaccountable stupidity and infatuation of a world submerged in wickedness, my meditations were interrupted by a rumbling sound from the northwest. I anticipated the cause, and turned my eyes in the direction to see what I had never seen, but was anxious to see. A moment—and, from a rounding curve in the track, the fleet messenger of time appeared; but it passed like a meteor, and the volley of sparkles that ascended from the chimney, formed the trail behind. As I heard the sound of the cast wheels on the iron bound rails, dying away in the distance; the melancholy frame from which I had been aroused by its approach, again returned with the thought, it is "passing away." Again in the realization of the certainty of the approaching end of all things visible to mortal eyes—the evening zephyr gently rustling among the leaves on the trees; and here and there one losing its hold, would fall to the ground in imitation of the demise of the human family; and hearing my heart beat distinctly, and a burying ground a few paces to the right, impressed me with the thought, that I too, am also "passing away."

But where Lord? The autumnal frosts are now cropping the leaves and tendrils of the trees, and stripping the forest of its folliage, and taking its glory away; but spring will return and clothe it anew: but as for me, sin has tarnished my beauty and written death on my brow; and my glory is departed in consequence of coming short of thine. Here lies the slumbering dead; and ere long, I shall be slumbering with them: "but man's faded glory what change shall renew?" A Saviour is found; and the poet further sings:

"See truth, love, and mercy, in triumph descending,
And nature all glowing in Edens's first bloom!
On the cold cheek of death smiles and roses are blending,
And beauty immortal awakes from the tomb."

On Jesus then, the root and offspring of David, and bright, and morning star, may all our hopes be stayed; and on Him depend for present peace, and future bliss in the regions of immoratality.

A Word to the Ministry.

"Judgment begins at the house of God." Oh, let me bespeak you, brethren, in the name of the Lord, especially those that are more young and weak, that you tremble at the greatness of the ministry, and run not up into a pulpit as boldly as into the market place. Study and pray, and pray and study, until you become workmen that need not be ashamed; rightly dividing the Word of Truth, that your people may not be ashamed, or weary to hear you; but that besides your clear unfolding of the doctrine of the Gospel, you may also be masters of your people's affections. It is a work that requires your most serious, searching thoughts. When you are the most renowned doctors in the church of God, alas! how little is it that you know, in comparison of all that you are ignorant of!

Be sure that your conversation be teaching, as well as your doctrine. Do not confute your doctrine, by your practice. Be as forward in a holy and heavenly life, as you are in pressing it on others. Let your discourse be as edifying and spiritual, as you teach them theirs must be; for evil language give them good; and blessing for their cursing. Suffer any thing, rather than that the gospel and men's souls should suffer. Become all things (lawful) to all men, if by any means you may win some. Let men see that you use not the ministry only for a trade to live by, but that your hearts are set upon the welfare of their souls.—Whatsoever meekness, humility, condescension or self-denial you teach from the gospel, O, teach it them also by your undissembled example. This is to be guide and pilot, and governor of the church indeed. What on odious sight it is to see pride and ambition preach humility! and an earthly-minded man preach for an heavenly conversation.

WM. M. BAKER.

Charlestown, Ia., April 4th, 1847.

Ministerial Accounts at the Great Day.—A divine in the former part of the last age, preaching before an association of ministers, and in order to quicken their regard to the principle, end, and motive, from which they acted, pointed them to the last and awful day of judgment; and having brought in Christ the Judge as taking his place on the throne, he then by an excellent prosopopoeia represented him as calling his ministers to an account, examining how they had preached, and with what views they had undertaken and discharged the work of the ministry. "What did you preach for?" "I preached, Lord, that I might keep a good living, that was left to me by my father, of one hundred and fifty or two hundred pounds per annum, which, if I had not entered into orders, had been wholly lost as to me and my numerous family." Christ says to him, "Stand by, thou hast had thy reward." The question is put to another, "And what did you preach for?', He answered, "Lord, I was applauded as a learned man, and I preached to keep up the reputation of an excellent orator, and an ingenious preacher." Christ's answer to him likewise, was, Stand by, thou also hast had thy reward." The Judge puts the question to a third, "And what did you preach for?"—"Lord," said he, "I neither aimed at the great things of this world, though I was thankful for the conveniences of life which thou gavest me; nor did I preach that I might gain the character of a wit, or of a man of parts, or of a fine scholar; but I preached in compassion to souls, and to please and honor thee; my design in preaching was, Lord, that I might win souls to thy blessed majesty."—Upon this, the Judge called out, "Room, men; room, angels! Let this man come and sit with me on my throne, as I am set down with my Father on his throne; he has owned and honored me on earth, and I will own and honor him through all the ages of eternity."

The result of all then was, that the ministers went home much affected, resolving that, through the help of God, they would mind the work of the ministry more, and look better to their aims and ends than ever.—Gospel Treas.

Obligations to the Heathen.—Such is the heading of an article in the February number of the Baptist Missionary Magazine. The writer takes for his text the words of Paul, "I am a debtor both to the Greeks and barbarians, both to the wise and unwise; so, as much as in me lies, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also." His object is to show that all Christians sustain the same relation to the heathen world as did the apostle, and that the only way to prove the sincerity of a Christian profession is by showing a readiness to labor for their salvation. The article concludes as follows:—

1. What we do for the salvation of the heathen is not to be regarded as charity.—We are their debtors. We cannot evade the obligation.—Why, then, should we not conform our language and behavior to the fact? Is it charity to pay a debt? We owe it. Why treat it as if payment or non-payment were optional? Why regard this obligation as less binding than any other?

2. Let us be honest men, and pay our debt.—We cannot plead want of ability, for it is required of a man only according to what he hath.—What right have we to contract other obligations that will interfere with our duty to the heathen? What right have we to live in a style that shall disable us from paying a debt long since contracted?

3. A day of settlement is approaching.—We must all appear before our original Creditor, and answer to the inquiry whether we have been honest debtors, and, according to our ability, discharged our obligations. The heathen will be there to testify to the measure of our fidelity, and we shall be held responsible for every deficiency in our duty. How will stand the account of the present generation of Christians? Reader, are you in arrears to the heathen?

Plain Truths,

IN WHICH WISE AND GOOD MEN CANNOT FAIL TO BE INTERESTED.

We should be glad to have our Western friends understand that if we do not help them to the extent of their wants, it is because we have not the means. The publications of the Society are put at a price barely sufficient to cover the cost of manufacture and sale and the ordinary risks of business. If they exceed that limit, the excess is at once absorbed in the appropriate work of the Society: and if it falls short, we rely on the business of the following year to make it good. We are therefore dependent on the benevolence of Christians, and those well disposed towards the institution, for the means of supplying the Sunday-school wants of our Western States. As to what these wants are, and how they are to be supplied, we never heard but one opinion from candid and unprejudiced men. We have always been assured by residents at the West, and by Northern and Eastern travellers in the West, that, in the present state of their society, Union efforts for Sunday-schools are almost, or quite indispensable; that aside from a few large, and comparatively long settled places, denominations were not compact, nor numerically strong enough to sustain schools of an exclusive character, and hence that such an agency as ours must be regarded as essential to introduce the blessings of the gospel, in their elementary form.

We employ as many suitable men as we have means to pay, to explore the neighborhoods of the Western States. It is their exclusive business to open Sunday-schools, every where, where they can besustained, & to supply the needy with books. They have no concern with the local or denominational interests of the places they visit, but only to see to it that children and youth of all classes are brought under Sunday-school influence. The Sunday-school missionary knows, that whatever denominational or other relations they may sustain, the school he proposes to open, and the books he proposes to supply, will exert an influence that no true friend of God and of the human race would oppose. All the books he purposes to supply, from the Way of Life and the Holy War down to the Infant Library and the Two Cent Hymn-book, are scriptural without being denominational. In establishing new schools and supplying them with books, we suppose our missionary is doing a work which no one else is likely to do better. If there are other means of accomplishing the same object in a given place, it is his business to seek places where no such other means exist, and which we know and he knows are to be found all over his field of labor. Now is that service needful? If so, to what extent? Do we overrate its value or necessity? Can we modify the plan so as to render it more appropriate or efficient, or less costly? We think not. We have always supposed that a Sunday-school, established on Union principles and supplied with a judicious assortment of Union books, was an invaluable accession to a neighborhood where no stated permanent religious privileges are enjoyed. We have supposed, that in the absence of an organized church and an evangelical minister and the more general influences of the gospel, a little perennial fountain of good might be opened, in the form of a Sunday-school, that might supply some of the cravings of a child's moral nature. If a few of Watts' Divine Songs were learned, and a few passages of scripture, (like the decalogue or the sermon on the mount,) and all from dictation, it would be something gained from an absolute waste of mind and heart! We are aware, of course, that the influence of an educated and pious ministry is all important to give stability and permanency to any and all of the achievements of Christian benevolence, and even to the common pursuits of life. God's arrangements for this end are too obvious to be overlooked or mistaken.—But how many neighborhoods are there unsupplied with the blessings of such a ministry? To these places our missionary wends his way, with such helps as our benevolent friends enable us to afford him. He gathers together from 20 to 50 children in the best place he can find, and persuades one or more adults that may have even the semblance of qualifications to adopt the school as their own, and do what they can to sustain it. If we only distribute over such a neighborhood so much moral influence as the keeper of such a school for twelve successive Sabbaths would diffuse, (connected, as it would be, with the books and tracts, and conversations and associations which such an event would occasion,) we suppose we have done a great good there; and if our mission ceases at that stage, the servant of Christ who next visits them will find several verdant little spots which the overflowings of our Sunday-school rill has made green, and the possession of which will be of great advantage to him and his work. So we have been assured, times without number, by ministers and laymen, by individuals and associations, by men of all Christian denominations. Have we exaggerated the value of these preliminary and elementary labors? Is not this a work that the moral husbandman must have done to his hands, before the seed can be generally sown with a reasonable prospect of a harvest?

At the close of the fiscal year, March 1, the expenditures had exceeded the receipts over $5000, and the Society's sole dependence to make up this deficiency, and supply $15,000 to meet the present engagements of the Board, is upon the Church. Will not ministers of the gospel, and other friends of the Union, without the expense of other agencies, aid us by their contributions, addressed to Findlay and Carey Branch Rail Road.—We learn from the Sandusky Clarion of Tuesday, that Messrs. Wood, Beach and Potterfield, have contracted for the grading and superstructure of this work, to be ready for the iron by the 1st. of July, 1848, for $44,080. The county of Hancock has, by a a vote of the people, authorized issue of bonds to the amount of $86,000. The length of the line from Findlay to Carey, on the Mad River and Lake Erie Road, is fifteen and five-eights of a mile.—Urbana Gazette.

Female Curiosity.

A naval officer, who lately went to reside in Edinburgh, having engaged a large mansion on a short lease, despatched his butler to receive his furniture, and have the house put in order. The butler engaged a young woman residing in the neighborhood to clean out the rooms and arrange part of the furniture, and he assisted her himself to carry up a large chest of rather singular appearance. This gigantic box his master had purchased as a curiosity; but unlike that described in the song of 'The Misletoe Bough' it did not shut, but opened with a spring attached to the lock, which being touched the lid flew open, and a tall brawny Highlandman, in full costume, stood erect and struck out his right arm, in which was a wooden sword. The gentleman purchased it as a piece of curious mechanism, and was wont to amuse his children with it.

"That's a heavy chest," said the woman as she placed it on the floor.

"Yes," answered the butler, who was a wag of the first water, "there's some thing heavy in it, certainly; but there's something mysterious about it also, for, although the key hangs at the end of it, none of us is allowed to open it."

"Did you ever see the inside of it?" replied she, walking round it.

"Never," said he. It's as much as any of our places are worth even to speak about it." So saying, the knight of the corkscreww looked first at the woman, then at the chest on the floor, and then retired slowly down stairs, whistling, to work on the gaound flat.

The girl proceeded to put things to rights in the room; but every time she passed the chest she thought it looked the more odd. "Frailty,—thy name is woman!" She rapped on the lid with her knuckles; it had a curious hollow sound,—very! And none of the servants had dared to open it! what on earth could it contain? Well, it was none of her business; so she went diligently to work for five minutes, at the end of which time she saw herself standing, with her arms akimbo, gazing on the chest.

'It can do harm to look into it,' no thought she; so quietly took the key from the nail, and applied it to the lock. Of course she heard footsteps on the stairs, as every one will do when afraid of detection in the commission of some act they wish to keep secret. Again she regained confidence, and returned to the chest, she stooped, and turned the key. Up flew the lid; and the wooden Highlandman kilt and philabeg, sprung on his leg with more than human agility, and fetched the petrified girl a sharp whack across the shoulders with the flat of his "Andrea Ferrara." A prolonged shriek, ended in a moan of dispair, indicated that the poor woman had sought relief in a swoon.

In the course of a few minutes the woman rose on her elbow, looking wildly round the room, till her eyes caught the Highlandman bending over her. Seeing nothing but destruction awaited her, two springs took her to the door; down stairs she went, nor did she slacken her pace till she found herself standing in the house of a lady in the neighborhood. The poor woman did not recover from her fright for several days.

Prussia and Popular Liberty.

The first step is at last taken. Prussia is now on the high road to the enjoyment of popular liberty. When Germany was about being overrun by Napolean, the King of Prussia, to nerve the arms of his subjects against the invader, solemnly promised them a Constitution. The danger passed, the promise was disregarded, and Prussia lingered under the indignity of this disgraceful falsehood. But, what the father failed to do, the son has at last done. The promulgation of a Constitution has long been contemplated by him, but deferred from time to time, till a more convenient season. The extinction of the republic of Cracow, it is thought, furnished an occasion. That act, it is said, was repugnant to the views of the Prussian monarch, and the new constitution is an evidence of his indignation. Russia and Austria, as might be expected, have significantly protested against policy. The three-fold cord is broken. A breach is made in the bulwarks of despotism, through which marches the spirit of popular freedom.

"Henceforward, then," says the London Economist, "the alliance of the three Northern courts is served, because they will have different interests to pursue. Constitutionalism is arrayed against absolutism. Should the fate of arms have to decide the case of European freedom, Prussia will form the advanced guard of the independence of nations. Perhaps, under her ægis, Poland may be destined to rise from her prostration; nor is it improbable that Southern Germany, animated by her example, may claim a representative government from Austria; if so, Northern Italy may shake off her chains. We have disclaimed the character of the prophet, and yet we are predicting: but we will desist; and though not venturing to anticipate the future, we will fervently express a hope that the emancipation of Prussia, through the influence of the Germanic mind, may aid in the universal overthrow of autocracy and absolutism."

The constitution is a very imperfect one, but better than none. Prussia is divided into eight provinces, in each of which has existed a local diet, which had the power of deliberating on such questions respecting provincial matters as might be submited to it by the Central Government, without, however, the power of deciding them.—By the royal letter of February 3d, these provincial assemblies are organized in a general one, to be convoked at Berlin, under the name of the United Diet of Prussia, and to consist of two Chambers, one representing the nobility, the other the gentry, towns, and boroughs. This assembly is to have power over the creation of taxes and loans except in case of war, or where there shall be difficulty in convening the States.

The constitution is valuable chiefly a as stepping-stone to further restrictions on the monarchical power. "Revolutions never go backward." unless our own country prove an exemption to the remark.—National Era.

Steamboat Burnt.—Loss of life.—The steamboat Clinton, Capt. Adams, left New Orleans 20th March, for Bayou Sara, but took fire at three o'clock, P. M., just above Bonnet Carre Point, and was totally consumed, with a valuable cargo. The fire broke out in the wood pile near the boilers, and spread with such rapidity that the cabin was soon in flames. She was run immediately on the bar, when all on board precipitated themselves into the river. All were saved, with the exception of one deck hand, two deck passengers, the barkeeper, the second engineer, (Mr. Weaver,) and the cook and chambermaid, colored persons, who were unfortunately drowned.—*N. Religious Intelligence.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Morgantown Ct., Va., April 14th, 1847.

Br. Bassett: I would just say that I have closed two protracted meetings since my last communication, first at "Stewarttown" embracing the first of April 1847. Here I was favored with the aid of Br. Laishley, who preached two sermons. We had a few conversions, and 14 gave their names to enter probationary ranks, in the Methodist Protestant Church. Most, I may say all of whom are good material. May the Lord bless them, by keeping them faithful. (Second) At "Avery Chapel" only continued two or three days. Br. Pool preached on Sabbath night—invitations for seekers of religion—none come forward, strange! Among an intelligent community favored with gospel advantages, we fear that some though reluctantly, with many voluntarily, will go down to the pit.

Br. Laishley was present on Tuesday evening preached for us a good discourse. The result of this meeting will likely be seen in the future. Farmers being very much engaged in their Agricultural pursuits, (which must not be neglected) evenings short, we wound up the meeting by commending the whole into the hands of a covenant keeping God. Yours respectfully,

N. GILLESPIE.

Birmingham Allegheny county Pa. April 12, 1847.

Dear Brother Bassett: Please say through the Recorder to our President (Br. Brown) that I wish to receive from him a dismission from my present field of labor. Any communication for me had better be directed in care of Br. Reeves or Robinson as I may be absent for some time. Such has been the affection of the Larynx and still is, that it is even painful to me to converse. I have therefore concluded to desist from preaching and all irritating exercises as much as possible for some considerable time.

I am not in a mood for lengthy details. A report could be given partly cheering and partly humiliating. The good that has been done I trust will in some measure counterbalance the mischief of the Devil.

In some efforts during the winter to do good,—I was kindly assisted by various ministerial brethern from Pittsburgh and Allegheny. All of whom as well as those brethren of the laity who put their shoulders to the wheel have my most hearty thanks.

The Sabbath School will be continued by the society and preaching by various brethren from the adjacent cities. If in this arrangement there is perseverance, Methodist Protestantism will never become extinct in Birmingham. May God bless the little vine, that its fruit may be abundant. And may such as have lent themselves to Satan to betray the Lord and vex the faithful, repent and find mercy, though they should never again be admitted into church fellowship.

WM. BROWNING.

Sharpsburgh, Pa., April 16, 1847.

Br. Bassett: It may be pleasing to some of your readers to know that there is yet a hope that our society in Sharpsburgh will live, and be a blessing to our connection. Although we can contribute but little to the revival department of your excellent paper, yet we would be glad to say that we are doing as well as we can under the circumstances, which seemed to be altogether against our prosperity. A few of them I will mention. Our house of worship I found deeded to James Clark, who left us some time ago, because the society would not—as I have been told, and Br. Stevens, who left us at the last Conference, occupying it, laboring as hard as he could to build up a new fangled something on the ruins of our poor illfated society, which seemed distracted and forsaken hardly knowing what would become of them. Having been taught that our church was pro-slavery and Babylonish, and that they were communing with slave holders, fearing therefore that the blood of the slave would be found in their skirts they feared to remain longer in the bosom of that church in which God converted their souls, and had blessed them a thousand times. Under these and an endless variety of circumstances equally afflicting, I commenced my labor on this circuit, hardly knowing what would be the final result, whether we should live or die. This season of doubt lasted but for a season; as the time for holding our first quarterly meeting drew near, the clouds began to disappear, and there appeared in the congregation some omens of better times. At the quarterly meeting we were favored with labors of Brs. Robinson from Allegheny and Br. Reeves from Pittsburgh, and best of all the Lord was with us, and a number professed to find peace at that meeting. We have held a number of meetings since that, all of which have been attended with good. Our congregation is still large and attentive, and we have received thus far this year 23 members into the church. Besides retaining our former members we have also succeeded in obtaining a deed of our house of worship permaneatly to the M. P. Church. I hope there will be no more shuffling about that. We have also discharged a claim of $267 which was against the property and we are now looking for better times. Will you pray that the good Lord may

WM. H. DOE.

Martinsburg Mission, April 20, 1847.

Mr. Editor: I would say for the encouragement of our brethren, and your readers in general, that this mission is in a prosperous condition. We have had some difficulty to encounter. Being warmly opposed by some of the older establishments around us, I say, some, but I feel encouraged to believe that the good Lord has controlled all this for the opening of our way and for the prospering of our cause.

We have had a number of good, warm, and satisfactory protracted efforts. We have had some revival. We have had some ingathering; we have commenced some societies, of which I will particularise more hereafter.

Brethren, pray for us.

Morganville Ct., Triadelphia O., Ap'l. 9, 47.

Mr. Editor:—While we pour over the pages of profane history, we learn that wars, bloodshed and devastation, have more or less infested every nation under heaven; and that from these fields of blood, the voice of lamentation, of wailing and of woe, has been heard, while there was fixed in the lineaments of each contenance evident marks of victory, or dismay. Nor can we call in question the correctness of the above remark: if we but consider that notwithstanding our claims to virtue and morality as a nation, we nevertheless are involved in, and agitated by, a war of no small magnitude, with a neighboring nation: and this favors us with a practical comment on the saying of Christ. "And ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars. For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom," &c. But amidst this state of moral darkness and human wretchedness, we learn from sacred history, that, "to those who sat in the region and shadow of death, a great light hath appeared," which doubtless will continue to increase until the "Lion and the lamb shall lie down together, and the nations of the earth shall learn war no more." When from the most civilized to the most savage tribe of mankind, God's name shall be known, and his praise echoed from hill to hill, and from to dale to dale, from the redeemed on earth to the saved in heaven, and our ears no longer be saluted with the war whoop, nor the wail of woe from the field of battle. How beautiful the language of the Poet.

"Jesus shall reign where'er the sun,
Does his successive journeys run;
His kingdom spread from shore to shore,
Till moons shall wax and wane no more.

From north to south the Princes meet,
To pay their homage at his feet;
While western empires own their Lord,
And savage tribes attend his word."

To facilitate the cause, and to aid in the onward march of the Gospel car, we have not forgotten on this (Morganville) Circuit, to contribute in some way our share; that we may yet see the speedy and universal reign of the Prince of Peace.

We commenced our labors on this Circuit the first Sabbath after the rise of Conference, and found the state of Religion quite low: and as might be expected from having but one Preacher, and having but one sermon in a place every four weeks, continues at a low ebb. Our first quarterly meeting was held at Malta, November the 14th and 15th, had a pleasant meeting but no special excitement. Our Presidential meeting was held at Morganville embracing the first Saturday and Sabbath in January. Brother Clancy was not able to be in attendance, being prevented by sickness. But notwithstanding we were disappointed in our expected ministerial help;—yet the Master of assemblies was there, "to revive the spirit of the humble, and revive the heart of the contrite ones." One gave his name to the church, and if faithful promises much usefulness. Our second quarterly meeting was held at South-fork Meeting House, on the 6th and 7th of February; we had an excellent meeting, not distinguished so much for convictions—and conversions, as for the gentle showers "of refreshing from the presence of the Lord," which continued to fall upon the church, at each coming together, until all who enjoyed the grace of God, were graciously "revived in the spirit of their minds." Here amidst the shouts of the sons of God, and the songs of Zion, might be heard the deep toned sighs of the humble and sin sick penitent; one joined the church, and could we have continued our meeting longer, perhaps more than a score might have been added; but for the want of ministerial help, we were compelled to close, when to every appearance, all was ripe for a thorough revival of religion. We have also organized two new societies, one at Brother James Wilsons; and one at Father Hatfields; at both of which places, we have flattering prospects of doing good.

There must have been some mistake made by my predecessor, as to the numercial strength of this circuit. There were returned to me something like 240, but on going around I could find but about 160, which would make a decrease of 80, these I have never found. I make this statement, that when my report comes in, it may not appear, that by mismanagement or otherwise, this decrease has been brought about.

I remain yours as ever,

Br. Bassett: I have written but little this conference year, for the reason, I have had but little to write respecting the prosperity of this circuit. Owing to the indisposition of my companion's health, I have been prevented from making protracted efforts, (the only sure method of general success.) Yet I have met the most of my ordinary appointments. At our first quarterly meeting, good was done. We were met by the great Head of the church. Saints rejoiced, and sinners cried for mercy, and some professed to obtain pardon through Christ, and a few accessions to the church. We were favored with the labors of Brs. M'Guire and Stephens. The Lord smiled—the church was revived, and some seekers presented themselves at the altar of prayer, requesting the prayers of God's people. May the Lord speak peace to their troubled souls. Here we were again favored with the zealous labors of Br. M'Guire, our Conference Missionary. Pray for us.

Boston Conference.

The Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, for Boston District, held its session in East Weymouth, by special invitation from the Evangelical Methodist Church in that place, commencing on Wednesday, March 3d, 1847, and closing with the services of the Sabbath.

Conference was duly opened by the Rev. Horace G. Barrus, President, who favored the Conference with an able and important opening address, embracing various subjects relating to the interests of the Church.

Rev. Wm. Tozer was chosen Secretary.

For the Standing District Committee, the following brethren were chosen—Stephen Lovell, Thomas M. Latham, Wm. Tozer, Wm. Wyman, George Newhall, and John Blake.

Rev. T. F. Norris was elected Conference Steward, and Simon W. Wilde, the committee to assist him.

The small societies in Boston, Cumberland, Marlboro', Holland, Ware and Prescott, not being supplied from Conference, are left for the President to make such arrangements for them as may be in his power.

Thomas F. Norris, Stephen Lovell, Horace G. Barrus and James Wheaton, were left without an appointment at their own request.

Stephen Oakes, deceased.

Among others, the following resolutions were passed.

Resolved—That we deem it essential to the interest of Methodism, that the memoirs of Rev. Joseph Snelling be published, and that we will aid in bringing said publication before the public.

Resolved—That the President be requested to preach a sermon during the sitting of the next Annual Conference, on the nature, duties and obligations of the Christian Ministry.

Resolved—That it is the earnest and unaltered purpose of this Conference, to use every just and practical measure that shall tend to free our church, our country and the world, from the dominion, curse and shame of slavery.

Voted, that the time of holding the next Annual Conference, be the first Thursday in March, 1848, at 2 o'clock, P. M.

Voted, that the place of holding the next Conference be left at the discretion of the President,

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO.

THURSDAY, APRIL 22, 1847.

A Counterfeit.—Please send us no note of $2, Indiana S. Bank, unless it is known to be good. There is a base counterfeit in circulation, many specimens of which have been sent us, which we have in each case promptly returned to the sender.

Planets.—Our evenings just now, afford us a view of the two brightest of the planets, Jupiter and Venus, both in the western hemisphere, together with a most brilliant portion of the sidereal heavens. Jupiter has for several months been ranging across the constellation Taurus, and is now approaching Gemini, which will be his place next year. At this time, he occupies what would seem rather a critical position. He is precisely between the horns, not of a dilemma, but the horns of Taurus. We have no apprehensions however for his safety. A few days ago he was just half way between the stars Aldebaran and Auriga, but we see him now, a little south of that point. Venus, has recently entered Taurus from below, or from the west, and is now near the cluster called Pleiades. She is making her way hard after Jupiter, and will overtake him in about two weeks. The conjunction of those two beautiful planets will be a rare phenominon. Until then it will be interesting to the admirer of Heaven's works, and the lover of science, to observe from evening to evening, their motions.

In connection with this view of the two planets, we have also before us in the southwest, the constellation Orion, which is acknowledged the most beautiful cluster of fixed stars. A little to the left, or a little west of south, is Sirius of Canis Major. This is the brightest, and supposed to be the nearest of the fixed stars. Some principal stars form an outline of a large semi-circle, covering the western horison. Commence with Sirius—then above him is Procyon, (Canis Minor;) then higher up, and further north we find Castor and Pollux (Gemini;) then towards the north west are Beta and Capalla of the constellation Auriga, and below, near the horizon is Perseus. Within this semi-circle, are the two planets above mentioned, and seven stars of the first magnitude. These are Sirius, Rigel, Capella, Aldebaran, Procyon, Betelguese, and Castor. The view we speak of, is had early in the evening, say eight o'clock.

Condolence.—General Taylor has written a sympathising letter to Hon. Henry Clay, on the death of his son in the battle of Buena Vista.

Ho! for Oregon.—The Cincinnati Commercial states that on the 8th inst. ten wagons of emigrants passed through that city, on their way to Oregon. They must be hardy folks to endure such a journey.

Sad Disaster.—A remarkable series of calamities has befallen a number of our steamboats engaged in the Muskingum trade. The steamer Newark, was snagged and and sunk a few months ago, but she had been raised and repaired, and put in good order. She had announced to run regular trips to Pittsburgh, but on her very first trip, on Thursday last, as we learn by the Zanesville Courier, she collapsed a flue at Liverpool, on the Ohio river, by which eleven persons were severely, and some of them fatally scalded. The Courier says:

The boat had just landed a passenger, and was shoving off, when the explosion took place.

A nut had come off the cylinder head, and the engineer, to repair this, had directed the firemen to put out the fire, and just as they were throwing water in the grates, the boiler flue gave way, and the following persons were scalded:

George Nixon, Carpenter.
Christopher Castle, deck hand.
Lafayette Hubble, 3d Engineer,
James Coyle, 1st Cook.
James Stewart, 1st Engineer.
George Ross, 2nd do.
Ad. Everet, Steward
John Day, 2d Cook.
Thomas Harris, Fireman.
——Hyatt, a deck hand.
William Tignor.

The back plate of the boiler was thrown up through the cabin and deck to the hurricane deck. Five or six of the State rooms were also broken up. The hull of the boat was not injured.

The citizens of the town immediately came to the assistance of the distressed, and a fire which had broken out on board was extinguished with little damage.

P. S. On Tuesday afternoon, the Zanesville Packet arrived with the bodies of those who had died, and the persons of the other scalded ones. A very solemn scene occurred on the arrival of the packet. The first four above named, have died.

Bad.—During the rejoicings at Louisville, on account of Taylor's victories, a premature explosion of a cannon took place, by which a young man, named Baptist Irwine was horribly mutilated, so that he died on the following day. Is proof wanted, of the folly of those 'demonstrations'?

Rail Road to Newark.—Our neighbor of the Zanesville Courier is quite zealous for the construction of a railroad from Zanesville to Newark, in view of the prospect of one to be laid from the latter place to Lake Erie. Surely this wealthy county has means to spare for works of public utility. Success, to internal improvements, Deaths of Physicians.—Hon. John Cotton, M. D., died at his residence in Marietta, on the 2d instant in the 55th year of his age.

Dr. Noah Worcester, of considerable eminence in his profession died at his residence in Cincinnati, on the 3d inst. in the 36th year of his age.

Dr. Samuel Woods, died at Hamiton, O. on the 25th ult.

Another Newspaper Change—We see by the last number of the National Era, that the Baltimore Saturday Visiter has been discontinued, and its subscription list transferred to the former paper. The Visiter was an Anti-Slavery paper conducted by Dr. J. E. Snodgrass, a man of unyielding firmness in the cause of humanity. An attempt was made to menace him, and suppress his paper, some two years ago in the Legislature of Maryland, but it only served to advance the interests of the Visiter and the cause it advocated. The Era says; The Visiter has wrought a good work in Maryland and other slave states. Dr. Snodgrass is to be a regular Baltimore Correspondent of the Era. A letter from him is to be published every week. His first appears in the last number.

Another proposed Union.—We see by the Watchman of the Valley and Cumberland Presbyterian that some preparatory steps have been taken, to effect a Union between the New School Presbyterian and Cumberland Presbyterian Chs. Committees of conference were appointed by the General Assembly of each of the churches at its last session, in view of this object. The 'Watchman' only fears, that as the great body of the Cumberland Presbyterians are found in slave States, that the denomination may not consent to be identified as an anti-slavery church. If they take this ground, he bids them: 'Come, go with us, and we will do you good,' and he adds—'you will do us good.'

Zanesville Whig.—We omitted last week to mention that this paper has been discontinued, and its subscription list transferred to the Zanesville Courier. Meanwhile, the enterprising publisher of the last named paper, steadily contemplates issuing a daily, after the Telegraph shall have been completed to Zanesville.

Henry Clay.—On the 13th April, 1847, Henry Clay attained the age of 70 years.

New Nation.—We learn by the N. Y. Sun, that a National Convention is to be held at Monrovia, on the first Monday in July next, to form a Constitution for the Government of Liberia as an independant nation.

Six delegates are to be chosen from Monrovia, four from Grand Bassa, and one from Sinoe, eleven in all, to be elected on the third Tuesday in February; the constitution to be presented to the people, for their rejection or approval, on the last Monday of September. Should it be rejected, the Convention shall go on ad infinitum, preparing and submitting a Constitution, until one is adopted.

Ladies' National Magazine.—Always first.—The May number reached us soon after our last week's paper had gone to press. It contains two engravings, one mezzotint, and the other lithograph. From the pages of this number we copy an interesting poetical article, which will be found in its proper place. Terms of the Magazine, $2 per An. C. J. Peterson, Publisher, Philadelphia. Mr. P. has not observed the change of our address, from Zanesville to Putnam.

Army News---Battles---Victories.

This is the great topic of the day. The columns of many of our exchanges have been crowded with the details of the battle of Buena Vista, for two or three weeks past. And now the particulars of the storming of Vera Cruz, and the Castle of San Juan de Ulloa, as we have them in some of our large eastern exchanges, would fill from one to two pages of our paper. The statement we gave last week of this engagement, proves to be substantially correct. Victory seems invariably to attend the American arms. A wise Providence is permitting the Mexican nation to suffer a series of chastisements. We only fear that it may be the turn of our nation, ere long, to suffer chastisement, though it may be in a different form. The Almighty saw fit to employ Nebuchadnezzar, an ambitious heathen, to chastise various nations, calling him the rod of his anger,—and afterwards he punished him in turn, because he did it not in view of performing the will of the Lord, but through ambition and cruelty. It is not unlikely that Mexico may be obnoxious to divine chastisments. But we are by no means a nation without sin, that we should be the first to cast stones and bomb shells at her, and to thrust her through with sword and bayonet. May Heaven save us from becoming an ambitious & blood thirsty nation.

Later News.

The Zanesville Courier has obtained via Pittsburgh, telegraphic despatches from Philadelphia and Washington, with important intelligence from Mexico. The Archbishop and the Church, had determined to sustain Santa Anna in prosecuting the war. Out of its revenues the Archbishop had advanced five millions of dollars!

Col. Doniphan had taken possession of Chihuahau, without a battle.

General Taylor, had pursued and overtaken General Urrea. A fight ensued. The Mexicans were totally defeated, with great slaughter, and fled in utter disorder. Further particulars have not yet reached us.

Doubtful, this last, we should say.

Fire at New Richmond O.—We learn by the Cincinnati Commercial that on the night of the 5th inst. a fire broke out in the Steam Distillery of Mr. Gibson, at N. Richmond, which was entirely consumed, with the cribs containing 25,000 barrels of corn, all the buildings attached, and several dwelling houses. Rain was falling in torrents at the time, or the town would have suffered much greater loss. We wish no ill to the proprietor of that great distillery, or to the numerous hands he has employed. But as that engine of mischief and death has met its fate, it ought never to be rebuilt. And those who found employment within its unholy precincts, had better dig or beg than ever again take part in any such work of darkness.

Political prediction.—The Charleston Mercury of the 6th, alluding to the nomination of General Taylor for the Presidency, says, "As the General is a Southern man a Slaveholder, a Sugar and Cotton planter, we doubt very much whether his name would find much favor in any national convention, a majority of which will be Abolitionists of the Giddings or Wilmot Stamp."

Cincinnati Election.—At the recent election in Cincinnati, Henry E. Spencer Esq. was re-elected Mayor of the city.

Worthy of note.—Mr. A. G. Hibbs, proprietor of Mills near the Canal, 8 miles south of Columbus, has given notice through the Ohio State Journal, that he will grind free of charge all the grain which shall be contributed by citizens of Franklin County towards the relief of the sufferers from famine in Ireland and Scotland, and delivered at his mills. It does one's heart good to meet with an occasional case of generosity, whilst so many withhold from giving.

Western Christian Journal.—This is the title of a goodly sheet published in Columbus O. heretofore called the 'Cross and Journal.' It is the Western organ of the Baptist denomination. It seems that Brother Cole, the former Editor has retired, and Messrs Randal and Batchelder have now taken charge of the paper. Their salutatory which we have just perused, takes the right ground in reference to the subjects of Peace, Slavery, Temperence, Education, and Foreign and Domestic Missions.

The Western Christain Advocate, has just entered upon its fourteenth volume, Rev. Dr. Elliot, the able, and laborious Editor, says, "In closing the present (thirteenth) volume, we desire to receive deep impressions in reference to the time in which we will close up the volume of our earthly race." The Advocate has a very extensive patronage, and since its enlargement last year contains an extensive variety of useful matter, and is a very interesting paper. We do not admire the very labored articles of Rev. Messrs Lovell and Connel, on the Lebanon case. But the editor is not responsible for these. We do not admire every thing we publish in our own paper. It is evidently a sore trial to those brethren that a secession from their church in Lebanon has occurred. And they are evidently grieved to see that the new Methodist Protestant organization prospers well, and has succeeded in erecting one of the neatest and handsomest churches in that beautiful town. That no little value was attached to the secession, in the estimation of those writers, is most evident from the circumstance that so much ado is made about the matter, all upon one side, so far as the newspaper press is concerned. Messrs Lovell and Connel's account of the Lebanon affair, is voluminous indeed. They have been pursuing it for many weeks, and have not yet concluded. Thus far the seceding party have published nothing in reply, that we have seen. Should they hereafter see cause to do so, we doubt not that they will do it in the spirit of meekness. But we set out only to express our kindly compliments to the Editor of the W. C. Advocate, and to say that we are ever interested with its weekly visits at our table.

Crops in Missouri.—Br. James Knox, of Arrow Rock, Saline County, Mo. writes us that the crops of wheat in that part (the interior of the State) denote an entire failure. The same brother expresses a desire to be visited by some of our ministers. If this should meet the eye of any who can visit him, we trust they will do so.—From his promptness in paying for his paper, and postage too, we feel assured that he understands what is right. Hope he will get a crop, and a preacher too.

The New Postage Regulation, is universally condemned. Postmasters who at first thought that the provision respecting transient newspapers &c., would save them much trouble and also add to the revenue, already see that it works the other way, and that it also diminishes their own revenue. The law too is complex, especially when encumbered with the Post Master General's authoritative construction of it. The rule for prepayment of three cents on each occasional newspaper &c. has led some Post Masters to suppose that they may demand 3 cents on each, at the office to which it is directed, when not prepaid.—The Olive Branch says that suits have in some cases been entered against Post Masters for this, and verdicts rendered against them. The Editor of the Ohio Cultivator thinks that the health of Mr. Cave Johnson must suffer from the climate of Washington, and thinks that he should be permitted to retire to private life.

DEDICATION.

Mr. Editor:—I wish to announce through your paper, that the dedication of our new Meet-House will take place on the last Sabbath of May next, at 10½ o'clock, A. M., at which we solicit the attendance of our Ministerial and Lay brethren generally.

By a vote of an official Meeting, Br. Joel Dalbey jr., is requested to deliver the dedicatory address. And, perhaps, it would be well to state just here, that, one of the great objects of the meeting is to obtain additional subscriptions equal to the amount yet required for the completion of the building. And we hope that our friends will not forget the old adage: "A friend in need, is a friend indeed."

We expect to succeed our dedication, with a protracted effort, during which our third Quarterly Conference will be holden. Will our brethren of the ministry come prepared to tarry with us several days? And may we witness such manifestations of the Divine goodness, as to realize a second fulfilment of the promise that was made to Israel respecting the second Temple, "And I will fill this house with glory."——"The glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former.——"And in this house will I give peace, saith the Lord of hosts." Haggai 2: 7. 9. Yours &c.,

Extracts from the minutes of my travels and labors as an agent and Missionary, M. P. Church.

Br Bassett: After long delay I have concluded to comply with the wishes of my friends, in sending some extracts from the minutes of my toils and success as an advocate for mutual rights, hoping they will meet your approbation, and be interesting to your readers. Suffer me first to state that I was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, twenty-nine years, and a traveling and Local Minister better than twenty-seven years, and have great cause to bless and praise the Lord, that through his abounding grace, no charge of immorality was ever prefered against me with success. When a young traveling Preacher, in Kentucky, I was threatened with the jail and the horse whip, for preaching against Slavery and whiskey distilleries, and a complaint laid in against me to the P. E. W. M. but the Annual Conference cleared me. I also in those days, frequently heard old Local Ministers talking about their being deprived of the right of suffrage in the church and that they had to submit to Laws made by junior Ministers, or leave or be expelled I frequently thought of the text, and always tried to live it and act it out. "Let an Elder be counted worthy of double honor especially those who labor in word and doctrine," but this text was seldom thought of then, and perhaps as seldom now. As to my labors both as a traveling and Local Minister, I have reason to be humbled and astonished before God, for his divine influence, and power which attended my feeble efforts, to the salvation of many souls, and while a local preacher I gave about one-third of my time to the church and while I was obedient to the laws and commands of old and young men in power; I was highly esteemed, but when the subject of reform began to be agitated, and the divinely authorized expounders, found me on the side of mutual rights I was soon prescribed and numbered with backsliders and schismatics, &c. and had many contests with the preachers, mostly with the presiding elders. For the space of six years, before I seceded they sometimes would flatter me and urge me to give up the contest, that I had many spiritual children and friends in the churches and it might be an injury to them if I persevered in opposing the Government of the church. At other times they would order me to leave the church saying if I did not I ought to be expelled. Finally after they had tried their utmost to find some charge of immorality against me and failed on that ground, at the last Q. Meeting for the conference year of 1828, when my name was called, and the question put, "Is there anything against Br. M'Guire J. P. a local preacher wished to know what course I intended to pursue on the subject of church Government, and after I had briefly stated the course I intended to take, and my rights as a free born American. W. D. son-in-law to J. P. brought forward two or three charges, relative to my opposition to church government, one of which was,

took the "Mutual Rights" and lent them to
I, I confessed guilty to the charges, and it oved that my case be laid over till the next ieting, but before this meeting closed (it was presence of two other preachers acknowledhad done wrong and was sorry he had taken urse he did, and agreed to make the same ac-ledgements at the next 2d meeting which was n the 13th Dec., '28, where he complied with omise, after which I requested a vote to be on my moral character, for according to le I must have a certificate having been

t. J. B. F. the P. E. refused to put it to vote conference, and said if any of the Brethren any thing against you let them speak. I red my certificate next morning.
this meeting Br. S. Bell read me a letter n he had received from Br. J. Fowler, a ber of the first convention held in Baltimore, ich letter Br. Fowler stated that I was ap-ed by the convention one of the agents to l and form Circuits, and organize Societies
's State. And after fervent prayer and med-n, and frequent consultations with my wife e soul trembled lest I should fail in the ipt to organize churches, about twenty-five after I received my certificate, I sent a note
B. F., P. Elder, stating that I was no longer a ster in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and e 9th of January 1829, on Friday morning I my wife and eight children, under the care protection of Almighty God, and trusting in grace, mercy and truth, for success, being convinced that it was my duty to bear open mony against a government which I believed e Anti-scriptural, and on Sunday 11th, I nized a class of 22 members, all from the odist Episcopal Church, at Br. Wicles, now d the Port William class; they now have a brick meeting house, and about one hunmembers. I must here state that Br. W. H.
ns, met me at this place and preached a mas-discourse before we organized. But to pro-
; on Monday 12, I organized another class of embers, at O. Walens, and there is a good ting house in this neighborhood called Mt. Ple-
, so you see that the Lord has prospered us so and all that is wanting in us, is, love to God his cause, to overcome all opposition.

FACTS.

is a trite thought, but whatever the subject be,
seem afraid of facts. Facts, says the proverb, stubborn things—hard to get over, hard to at, but hardest of all to use. Even they whose f avowed pursuit is the discovery of facts, the sical philosphers, have now and then been sed in their selection by the irresistible innces of some theory, to the very existence of ch they would be loath to plead; some theory ch, like other secret enchantresses, is power-n proportion to its concealment. But in mor-subjects, to know how to use facts fairly, is very rarest of gifts. Indeed it does require erhuman coolness not to suppress those little,
kward, knotty, unmanageable, incompressible, ducible, facts, which spoil a whole induction which break the line of a whole array of pre-ents, and distort the symmetry of an analogy.
r is this all: even though we do not warp and nch facts to suit a private pet theory, yet truths n up multiform, they are so polygonal—that the spider's eyes, which are said to be cut o a thousand planes, we do not know their real intentional aspect when we first come across m.

Facts ought always to be kept in sight, steadily nowledged, and met manfully, whether they firm our opinions, or conduct, or condemn

From the Zanesville Colporteur

The Presbytery of Zanesville met in Browns-e, Licking County, on Tuesday the 6th inst.,
closed its sessions on Wednesday evening.
the ministerial members (fourteen) were pres-
, and a fair representation of ruling elders. The owing items of business may be of interest to r readers.

A suitable record was made relative to the th of Rev. James Culbertson. Rev. J. E. xander of Washington was elected Stated rk in the room of Mr. Culbertson deceased.
e commissioners appointed to attend the next neral Assembly, which meets in Richmond
., in May next, were Rev. M. M. Brown, of mberland, and Hon. William Cooper ruling der, of Chandlersville. The pastoral relation ween Rev. M. M. Brown and the church in andlersville was dissolved according to the vious agreement of all parties concerned; and
l. Brown is hereafter to give all of his time to church in Cumberland. Rev. T. T. Smith
M. W. Robinson were appointed a committee visit Newton church to inquire what they are ng to support the gospel among them, and at are their prospects. A measure was adopt-to obtain the appointment of a Colporteur to l the books of our board of publication within e bounds of this Presbytery and in adjoining unties. As the question has been agitated to me extent in our church, whether our form of overnment shall not be so altered as to require e Synod to send commissioners to the General sembly instead of the Presbyteries as now, a erture, favorable to the change, was adopted by e Presbytery, and directed to be carried up to e General Assembly. A young man was ex mined and received on trial as a candidate fo e ministry. Reports from the churches on th ate of religion were by no means cheering. N vivals during the past year.

The Presbytery adjourned to meet in Wes shville on the last Tuesday evening of Sep mber next, at candle-light.

Discovery of a new Island.—Capt. Paulding the U. S. Ship Vincennes, on the 3d day of Oc ber last, discovered an Island in the latitude o degrees 27 minutes north, longitude 130 deg minutes east. It is moderately high, appeare be well wooded, and from six to ten miles long compliment to the Secretary of the Navy, it as called Mason's Island.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

From the Christian Citizen.

Very late from England.

Arrival of the Washington Irving, at Boston, on Saturday.

By the arrival of the fine ship Washington Irving, Capt. Caldwell, belonging to Messrs. Train & Co's. line of Liverpool packets, we are enabled to lay before our readers intelligence from Liverpool to the 20 March inclusive!—Capt. Caldwell performed the passage across the Atlantic in the remarkably short period of 19 days.

Breadstuffs are in great demand for some parts of the Continent, and there has been an advance on English wheat. Indian corn, however, has declined. Cotton has fallen, and the market is in a depressed condition. Money is becoming more scarce, in consequence of the amount of specie exported for breadstuffs. Trade in the manufacturing districts, generally, is dull.

All the accounts agree that the distress in Ireland; and suffering of the people are unmitigated, and surpass all that the imagination can picture. The Cork Examiner says:—

"From the melancholy accounts we receive, day after day, from gentlemen of undoubted accuracy and intelligence, of the general neglect of this propitious season for cultivation of the land—of the extensive tracts of country that are still untouched by the plough, spade, or harrow—of the stupid apathy and sullen despair that seem to hang like a dark cloud, over the minds of all classes—landlords, middlemen, and farmers—we are reluctantly compelled to believe that the present season of calamity is but the precursor of more terrible, more appalling, more destructive to human life."

The tide of emigration, it is also said by the Liverpool Mercury, "continues to flow with a rapidity really fearful, when it is considered that the class of emigrants is altogether composed of the more sound and healthy portion of society. The comfortable farmers, the temperate, industrious, and saving, the young and able-bodied, the possessors of a small capital—these are the individuals who are flying from their native country as if it were plague-smitten. What will be the end of it all, God only knows!"

SEVENTEEN LIVES LOST.

Wilmington, Del., April 14.

I regret to inform you that Dupont's Powder Mill establishment exploded this morning, killing seventeen persons, and horribly mutilating many more, the limbs of whom were scattered in all directions. There were five thousand pounds exploded, and the noise was like that of an earthquake.

Destruction of a Theatre by Fire and Loss of 70 Lives.—The Grand Ducal Theatre at Carlsrube was destroyed by fire about the 1st of March. The fire was first discoved in one of the court boxes, immediately after the gas was lighted.

The hangings were soon caught by the flames, which were driven by a current of air. As soon as the audience part of the house was beginning to be filled with the volumes of smoke, the alarm became general and frightful. Many persons on the third floor of the galleries were stifled. The number of dead and missing amounts, according to the police returns, to 70.

The License question in Ohio.—In Ohio there has been much diversity of opinion upon this question. Columbus voted "No License," 839 to 540. In Preble county six townships voted for License and six in opposition. In Cuyahoga county fourteen towns voted "license" by handsome majorities, and three towns "License" by small majorities. The vote in Willoughby, Lake county, was a tie; that in Russell, Geauga county, "License," that in Medina and Seville, Medina county, also "License."

Heavy Loss.—Two Elephants drowned.--Raymond and Waring have lost two of the most valuable animals in their celebrated menagerie—the elephants Virginius and Pizarro, drowned near Philadelphia on Thursday. Mr. Nutter, the keeper, could not persuade them to cross in the steamboat, and being celebrated swimmers, frequently crossing the broadest rivers of India in droves, he concluded to swim them across. Both were yoked together, they descended into the water and followed the call of their keeper, Mr. Nutter, who preceded them in a boat. There was a strong ebb running at the time, and when fairly in the channel of the river they found it difficult to stem the current, and therefore swam with it for nearly two miles. At length Virginius began to sink, drawing Pizarro down with him—the trunk or proboscis of the latter elevated as long as possible, but sinking slowly, gradually beneath the waves. A hook spear was extended to Pizarro by Mr. Nutter, who held on with such force that the iron hook was fairly torn out of its socket. All in vain, however. Both went down, and their last looks toward their keeper were of regret and agony, as if sorrowing to leave him. Their value was $30,000. Pizarro a few years ago killed his keeper at New Orleans.—N. Y. Sun.

Damages for Death on a Railroad.—An adjustment has been made of the claims of the widow and heirs of Dr. Henry D. Hichcock, (who was killed by a collision of the Fall River Railroad,) against the company, who have paid to the claimants $4500.

Bitten by a Cat.—Miss Baily, of Alexandria, Va., has died from a bite in the foot by a cat.

Smithsonian College.—It is said that the corner stone of the Smithsonian College will be laid at Washington about the first of May with suitable honors. It should be made quite an imposing ceremony.

Rocky Mountains.—Major Drips arrived at St. Louis, from Fort Pierce, on the little Missouri, above the mouth of Yoneton river. His trip was made through severe storms of rain and snow.—On the way down Major Drips passed severel encampments of Mormons. In every instance he represents them as enduring great privations and sufferings, many being entirely destitute of provisions; he passed numbers returning to the settlements. They have endured more privations this winter than any who are now famishing in Europe. Notwithstanding the interest taken for the suffering Mormons, nothing of a positively beneficial result has occurred. They have been despoiled of their property and are now wanderers in the wilderness, having committed no wrong and having done no injury to any one.—N. Y. Sun.

Accident.—A serious accident occurred on Friday, 9th inst., on the Little Miami Railroad, about six miles below Xenia, a log was laid across the track, which was not observed in time to prevent a collision. When the locomotive struck, the engineer, Mr. Davis was thrown some distance, falling upon a wood-pile with his face downward. The bridge of his nose was broken, and the cap of one of his knees fractured. No other damage was done.—Batavia Sun.

Accident.—We regret to learn that a serious accident occurred at the Walhonding Aqueduct of the Ohio Canal last week. The workmen were engaged raising one of the long timbers to its place on the piers, when some part of the tackling gave way and the stick fell among a large number of the workmen, breaking one man's thigh, and so seriously bruised another that he lived but a few hours. It is a wonder that no other lives were lost or bones broken.—Zanesville Courier, 13th.

Pigeons.—The breaking of one of the Telegraph wires is attributed to millions of pigeons which the late snow and storm have driven back to the South.

Relief for Germany.—At a meeting for this object held at Cincinnati on the 30th ult., some $1500 was announced as subscribed.

Stage Accident.—We regret to learn that a stage coach upset yesterday morning between one and two o'clock, near Mt. Vernon, causing the death of a Mrs. Courtney, of New Bedford, Massachusetts, and slightly injured E. S. Sill, of this city, Secretary of the Board of Fund Commissioners, and a Mr. Bell and lady of Circleville, O. There were other passengers in the coach, none of whom were seriously injured. We have not learned how the accident occurred. —Ohio Statesman, 9th April.

A Man and two Horses Drowned.—Mr. Burk, of this city, with his son twelve years old, Peter Kragg, and Christian Krauss, father of Geo. Krauss, of this city, left here on Wednesday morning last for Canal Winchester in a two horse wagon, & in attempting to cross Alum creek, which was very high, they missed the regular ford, and upset the wagon, drowned Mr. Krauss and two horses, the others barely escaping with their lives. Mr. Krauss had not been found last night. He had a rifle in his hand when upset, which was found. He was an elderly man.—Ibid.

Postmasters,—Whose salaries amount to less than $200 a year, have the franking privilege restored to them, as formerly. They can now remit subscription money to Printers free of charge, as well as the names of new subscribers.

Sabbath Traveling.—A minister of the Gospel asked the captain of a steamboat, if he thought the time would ever come when the boats of Ohio would stop on the Sabbath? He said, "Yes." He asked when. The captain answered, "When no Ministers of the Gospel, or church members, will go on them on the Sabbath. There is not a boat on the river that would run now, if no good man would go on it." Can this be doubted? Think, then, of the enormous guilt resting upon church members.—The Golden Rule.

Fruit of Missionary Labor.—Rev E. L. Abbott, a Babtist Missionary, after laboring several years in Arracan, returned to this country, bereaved of his companion, and with health impaired by a debilitating climate. Some might suppose this circumstance an indication that he had better have remained in his native country. But God has testified to the usefulness of his labors by permitting him to baptize some seventeen hundred converts from paganism, of whom about three hundred have already passed into eternity with a good hope of heaven through Jesus Christ. Let those who shrink from the missionary work because of its sacrifices and dangers, consider this fact. In what way could a life be spent so as to give greater satisfaction in a dying day?—Sab. Recorder.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

The sacred volume authorizes us to expect that the kingdom of Christ will become universal. The leaven hid in the measure of meal impregnating the whole mass; the grain of mustard seed producing a tree to be inhabited by the fowls of heaven; the handful of corn, scattered on the mountain top, producing a crop as vast and majestic as the forests of Lebanon; are figures employed to illustrate the small beginning and prolific results of the gospel of Christ. Prophecy, with inspired tongue, speaks too in strains of heavenly eloquence, assuring us that the gathering of the nations shall be to the great Shiloh—that the earth shall as certainly be filled with the knowledge of the blessed God and his Christ, as the waters cover the sea—that all the potentates of the earth shall bow before the King of Zion, and that all the kingdoms and nations among men shall merge in the kingdom of the Redeemer. All Christians are looking with intense desire for an event so glorious, and fraught with the happiest results to the human family. There is a voice issuing from the sanctuary of the Lord; it is the voice of prayer, "thy kingdom come." It finds its way to the eternal throne; the ear of the Almighty hears it; it is the most grateful portion in the "golden vials full of odors" which perfume the temple above. Nothing but the full realization of this object will be a compensation to the Saviour, or satisfy his benevolent heart. Oh! what intense agonies he bore!—what groans he uttered, which made the earth's pillars tremble, and the heavens gather blackness! How kind must that heart be, which voluntarily offered its richest blood, and endured the keenest sorrows of the cross! For what purpose was all this endured, but that he might lay a foundation for a kingdom—a kingdom peculiar in its nature and extent, consisting of redeemed souls, and subjects equivalent in number to the incalculable cost? Perhaps, if we look around us, we may discover indications that the time is at hand for the age of wonders to commence, which is to run for a thousand years, and in which the mighty march of knowledge, purity, and love, shall astonish all worlds, and the consummation of which will occasion one universal burst of triumph and praise, "Hallelujah, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." It is true the present state of the church wears in some respects a painful aspect; as there is much disunion, want of confidence, and impurity, both in doctrine and in practice. But may we not suppose that this falling away is among the harbingers of a better day? May we not imagine, that this will eventually bring on a time of trial and purification? The Lord is still the purifier of his people. He will bring them through the fire, and purify them as gold and silver are purified in the furnace; it may be the fire of persecution, or a national calamity. The present state of things may wake up the truly godly to a strict inward and personal scrutiny. It may lead them to more earnest prayer for themselves and others, and compel them to cut off, with holy indignation, those unseemly excrescences which give the ungodly an unfavorable impression of the Christian religion. When the church is purified —when she is dressed in her own beautiful attire—she will go forth "fair as the moon, clear as the the sun, and terrible as an army with banners." It may be well to inquire, whether the present state of the world does not indicate an important and glorious era approaching? The thirst for knowledge, especially among the young—the real acquisition of it through the numerous facilities afforded—the new opening for missionary enterprise, calling upon the church to send forth laborers into the "field white for the harvest"—the unparalled disposition of men to encourage missionary operations—the progress of temperance, and of temperance societies—all these induce the hope that the Lord is on his way, and temple, the head stone of which is to be brought forth and laid "with shoutings of grace, grace unto it."—Sabbath Recorder.

NOTICES.

Fredericktown, Ohio, April 12, 1847.

Dear Br. Bassett: You will please insert in the Recorder, that if spared, I will visit Portsmouth	Circuit,	4th	Sunday	of May.

Columbia,	"	5th	"	"
Woodsfield,	"	1st	"	June.

As I intend to reach these fields of labor by water conveyance, it will very much accomodate me if my appointment on Portsmouth Ct. could be fixed near the River. Also, I wish brother Lawson to inform me, (either through the Recorder, or by private letter directed to New Alexander Jefferson county Ohio,) of the place of my meeting for the Woodsfield circuit, and the place at which I must leave the river in view of getting to said meeting; also. I wish brother L. to procure for me a conveyance from the river &c., at my expense, if any is involved. As Summerfield circuit, is taken into Br. L's. charge, I suppose my visit to Woodsfield circuit will suffice for it also.

If Br. Case has an appointment for me at the Plain Chapel, on Friday evening, 30th inst., I will try and meet it. Also, I will meet an appointment at Amity on Pleasant Hill circuit, on Wed. the 5th of May, if Br. Ragan has one published for me.

In love and haste,

GEORGE CLANCY.

Martinsburgh Mission, Muskingum District.—Our third Quarterly Meeting is appointed on the 8th and 9th of May. It will be at the Old Acre Church, three miles South of Martinsburg; to which I would invite, of the unemployed Brethren, the Honored Joseph Thrap, and Joel, his Son: The Venerable C. Springer, the Rev. P. Inskeep, and A. Channell. And to the engaged workmen of Israel, let me say, not wishing to hinder you who are or should be at your fields, already white or ripe for harvest, if you can come, Brethren, come and help. Men of Israel, help.

Yours, &c., J. K. DUFFY.

Morganville Circuit, Muskingum District.—My 3d Quarterly Meeting will be held at Morganville, on the 1st and 2d of May, 1847. J. W. SOUTHARD.

Woodsfield Circuit, Muskingum Conference.—Brother Clancy is requested to attend our third Quarterly Meeting, three miles South of Woodsfield, to be held in Jackson School House, the last Sabbath in May. Call with Isaac Pearce. We are getting along in harmony and peace.

H. T. LAWSON.

Maumee Mission, Ohio Conference.—The appointment of Brother Young, our President for this Mission, will be at Father Tipton's. We are still endeavoring to labor in the field assigned us, and have had some good meetings. Hope also for better days. WM. TIPTON.

Zanesville Circuit.—Our third Quarterly Meeting will be held at Claylick, commencing, May 22d. Brother Kinny is invited; Brother Munhall is engaged, and Brothers Bassett, Nicols, and Remsburg, have been invited, but have not definitely responded. C. S. CALLIHAN.

Annual Sermon.—The Annual Sermon in behalf of the American Sunday-school Union, will be preached on Sunday Evening, May 16th, at the Church on Washington Square, by Rev. George W. Bethune, D. D. Service to commence at ½ before 8 o'clock.

Annual Meeting.—The services commemorative of the twenty-third anniversary of the American Sunday-school Union, will be attended at the Musical Fund Hall, Locust Street, between Eighth and Ninth Streets, Philadelphia, on Monday Evening, May 17th.

☞ To avoid confusion and disappointment, tickets will be issued, as in former years, and may be obtained at any time after May 10th, at the Society's buildings, No. 146 Chestnut street, or of any of the Officers or Managers of the Institution.

To the President of the Iowa District, M. P. Church.—At or near Red Rock, Marion County, Iowa, you will find a lot of Methodist Protestants, who have been there fifteen months, and not seen a Radical Preacher. They are anxious to have preaching. Enquire for Thomas Karr—(a Union Society man.) D. C. CARSON.

Newark Circuit.—Our third Quarterly Meeting will be held at Elizabethtown, (Perryton,) Licking county, commencing, May 28th. Brothers Case and Bassett are invited; and Brothers Ragan, Marshall, and J. Thrap, are engaged to be in attendance. W. MAYNARD.

Pennville Circuit. Musk. Con.—Our third quarterly meeting will be held at Mt. Pisgah, commencing, May 20th. The brethren at this place have a meeting house well nigh finished, and intend to have it completed for this meeting, at which the dedication will take place. Br. W. Hatfield is expected to attend according to promise. And we invite any other brethren, either travelling or local, who can make it convenient to attend and help us. And we solicit the prayers of all whether present or absent.

C. J. SEARS.

Buchanon Circuit. Pitts. Con.—The meeting of the President Br. Brown, for this circuit, will be held at Mt. Gilead Meeting house, on Little Skin Creek. I would invite to our aid, Brs. Helmick, Clark, and others of the brethren that can attend. R. H. WALKER.

Bucyrus Circuit, Musk. Conference.—Our next Quarterly Meeting will be held at Everhart's School House, commencing, May 29th. To this meeting we respectfully invite Brs. G. R. Bowman, J. Jack, I. Thrap, G. M. Scott, and J. Sowder. Please remember, I am alone, and need help. Come, by all means.

A. S. Robinson

Received for Annual Register.

D. Moore, $1 00

Br. Clancy, we credit R. & T. H. one volume and a half for the sum sent. But we find no account of the $1 said to have been sent last year, though we have diligently searched files of letters as well as accounts. Good people forget sometimes.

Br. W. Huntsman, we pay over two dollars of your remittance to Br. Springer for vol. 6. and for the rest, credit you in full for vol. 7. and for one fourth of vol. 8. in consideration of the 3 months discontinuance last year. Is that right?

The P. M. at West Milford, (alias Lost Creek,) Va. writes us that he knows no such man as J. Nisely, for whom we send a paper to that office, but that "J. E. Knisley, refuses to take the paper, and we had better discontinue it, as he will be compelled to sell the papers on hand for the postage." And why did he not do in duty bound, notify us long ago that this paper was not taken out, as any faithful postmaster would have done, before the paper had been sent for 6 months and a half? And then, the agent who sent us that name—how zealous he must have been to get new subscribers.—

The P. M. at Ravenswood, Va. notifies us that the paper sent to Dr. A. E. Thomas is not taken out of the office. Has that gentleman forgotten his promise made to us fifteen months ago when he ordered the paper, to pay, so soon as he should receive it? Will our agent there, please settle with him for one volume and a quarter?

Br. J. Knox, Mo. you will see that we have credited you with one volume and five numbers, for the sum sent.

Br. J. Gay, we sent one dozen pamphlets, as requested.

The P. M. at Columbus, Ia. notifies us that the paper of J. Mawhirter is not taken from the office. He has had the paper one year and a half and paid nothing. Will Br. Shipp, or Br. Williams please obtain our dues for us?

MARRIED—On the 15th instant, by Rev. J. M Winn' Mr. HENRY MEEK, to Miss CATHARINE LUCAS' all of Belmont county, Ohio.

Sabbath Peace.

For the Sabbath peace we bless Thee
For the quiet hour of prayer—
For the holy stillness resting
On nature every where;—
For the soft bells gently chiming
Upon the quiet air;—
For our Sabbath peace we bless Thee—
For the quiet time of prayer.

For the calm and deep communion
Our wearied spirits feel,
With Jesus the Redeemer,
As in thy courts we kneel.
There is water for the thirsty—
Rest for the weary there;
For our Sabbath peace we bless Thee—
For the quiet time of prayer.

We fear not the oppressor,
Nor the stern avenger's rod;
We bless Thee, that in boldness
We may kneel before our God;
No chains, nor prison darkness,
Our trembling souls to scare;
For our Sabbath peace we bless Thee—
For the quiet time of prayer.

For the banner of Thy love,
That floats above our path,
When sorrow's angry billows
Rise in tempestuous wrath;—
For thy sustaining presence
Through six days' toil and care;—
For our Sabbath peace we bless The—
For the quiet time of prayer.

For the star of joyful tidings
That cheered the sheperd's sight,
The beacon of salvation—
The Gospel's glorious light—
Through sin and sorrow beaming—
Through darkness and despair;
For our Sabbath peace we bless Thee—
For the quiet time of prayer.

An Hour in the Woods.

BY T. HEMSTEAD.

Far up in the hills where the blue dashing rills
Through the green Summer forests speed on and away;
Where each flower of the wild gems of nectar distils,
Amid scenes all unfaned by the breath of decay;
Is a spot where the popular and tall mountain pine,
The storm-daring oak and the locust are seen;
And their grey trunks are wrapt by the parasite vine
In a beautiful garment of purple and green,
In the sweet Summer wild wood,
So dear to my childhood,
The dim waving wild wood so shady and green.

There the proud silver beech hangs its head in the air,
And sighs as the wind murmurs low through the shade;
And the ash and the elm wave a canopy there,
As they lead o'er the distance their long colonnade;
There the south wind at play 'mid the mosses and leaves
Breathes the grace and the beauty of love o'er the scene;
While the Spring for each young spray a coronet weaves
'Midst the tall twilight woods with its richness of green.

There grow the sweet primrose and proud mountain lily
In shades seldom stirred by the footstep of man;
And the lilac by streams in magnificence stilly,
Has bloomed since the cycle of ages began;
There at dusk on the spray the coy wood pigeon perches,
And the owlet moans sad from his ivy-wove screen;
There at morn on the meads the bright humming-bird searches
Amid odor and dew for the flowers on the green.

Oh! there as I stray on the bright lap of Spring,
And hear the low winds through the branches complain;
Then back to my heart and my brain do they bring—
And back in their fullness and freshness again;
And back to my bosom the voices that fell
On my ear in the morning of life's Summer scene,
When Hope's angels drew nigh for a moment to dwell,
And youth's visions were clothed in their glorious sheen,
And life's Summer wild wood
Brought joy to my childhood,
With its sweet-briers, its myrtle and primroses green.

Written for the Western Recorder.

On the Administration of the Lord's Supper, and what is called the Prayer of Consecration, as found in M. E. Discipline, Page 99--latest edition. NO. 1.

Mr. Editor.—I purpose tendering your readers, through the pages of the Recorder, (with your permission) a few thoughts on the scriptural mode of administering, and receiving the Supper of the Lord, in opposition to the anti-scriptural mode pursued by some of the modern sects of our land,—as well by her, who calls herself the Mother Church. It is acknowledged by all; the instituting the Lord's Supper, so called, was by the great Head of the Church, intended "to show forth the Lord's death until he come again," it was to be often performed, in obedience to the command of him, who said "do this oft as ye will in remembrance of me." One amongst the most interesting spectacles that ever presented itself to the human eye, was the group of disciples headed by the Lord Jesus Christ, met in an upper chamber at Jerusalem to celebrate the passover, and to erect an everlasting monument of the master's death, that he was presently about to suffer. In the erection of this monument, it was necessary, so to arrange all connected with it, that the tragic events of Calvary, should through all ages of the world, be vividly brought up to recollection. The sculptured marble monuments of the great and renowned of the world, had fallen into decay, the tooth of time had corroded them. Empires had risen and fallen, Kingdoms had appeared and disappeared, Cities had been founded and destroyed, names of great and good men had been forgotten in the lapse of years, but he whose name is the "Lord our Righteousness" intended to erect a monument at his death, that would be recognized as a memorial by all tribes and people, through all ages of time. It is true it was erected in the city of Jerusalem, but though Jerusalem was destroyed by Titus Vespasian, this monument of Christ's death remained. And although nineteen centuries are nearly passed by, since the Savior first instituted the Supper, to commemorate the sufferings of the Martyred Lamb, it is as fresh to day, as when the favored disciple leaned his head upon the Lord's breast. The circumstances connected with the instituting the eucharistic feast were few, but important. The Savior had appeared, had been initiated into the priestly office by the rite of washing or baptism, had for upwards of three years proclaimed his own gospel, had given the most incontestible evidences of the divinity of his mission by miracles of the most stupenduous nature, had chosen apostles or witnesses, to preach and bear testimony, after he should have left the world, had prepared the minds of his chosen ones, to expect his death, and his final departure from the world up into glory, the world hated him, wicked men and devils, had determined on exterminating him, from the earth, Judas had taken a sop, the devil had entered him, it remained now for the Lion of the tribe of Judah to come forth in the majesty of his strength and leave to all generations, a monument, that time itself should not destroy. In the institution of the Supper of the Lord we have such a monument. So long as the field shall yield to the tiller's toil, so long as the vine shall give her increase, shall the bread and wine be used to show forth the mangled body and shed blood of the Son of God. Oh! look at the simplicity of the ordinance, the Savior heads the table, around the board are the disciples, the Savior "took the bread gave thanks & brake it and said take eat this is my body which was broken for you, this do in remembrance of me. After the same manner he took the cup, and when he had supped said, this cup is the new testament in my blood, drink ye all of it. This do ye as oft you drink it, in remembrance of me." To take up the cath olic idea here, because the Savior says this is my body, and confine it to a literal meaning, would run us into a thousand extravagant and ridiculous things, which in themselves would be too silly to name, some of them may be glanced at. It would cause us to believe the Savior to be a Lion, a Lamb, a Door, a vine, &c., &c., which are all to be spiritually understood. In this first celebration, headed by the Savior himself, there is no kneeling down to worship the host, I really fear the act of kneeling to receive the elements in the feast of the Supper of the Lord has come from the church of Rome, and perhaps derives origin from the very act of the worshipping the host. It appears to me the mode adopted by the Saviour would be the most proper to be practiced in every branch of the church, it said "he sat down with the twelve, and as they were eating, Jesus took the bread &c" Mat. 20th & 26, V., no change of posture is intimated.

Another practice of the Catholics is here exploded, the denying of the cup to the laity, the Saviour says "drink ye all of it." 'He gave the cup; who then dare to deny it. The cup was received in the ancient church for upward of 1400 years, and is confessed by two popish councils. The popish council of Constance speaks plainly but impudently, that although Christ instituted and administered the Sacrament, in both kinds, the bread and the wine, yet the authority of the holy canons and the custom of the mother church think good to deny the cup to the laity.

Popish priests make Christ but half a Saviour, so they administer to the people but half a sacrament, says Christ "this is my blood of the New Testament." Now to take away any thing from a man's will or testament is notoriously wicked, what is it then to alter and mangle Christ's last will and testament. Sure it must be a great effront to the Saviour. But again to the simplicity of the ordinance, the Saviour blesses and breaks, each communicant partakes of the bread—he blesses the wine, he sups, he gives the cup to the communicants and says, drink ye all of it, and then adds, do this in remembrance of me. Here is no con or transubstantiation, all the mystery thrown around the consecrating, the taking the cup, and the plate, all is gratuitous, it is simple bread and wine, received in memory of the death of Christ; as an humble believer in the Saviour, desiring to obey the command and shew forth the death of the Lord until he come again. Our minds are carried back to all the circumstaaces connected with the Supper, the agony & bloody sweat of the Redeemer. The arrest, the mock trial, the conviction, the sentence, the execution, the covetousness of a Judas, the weakness of a Peter, the fortitude of a John, the maternal affection of a mother, the groans of a Saviour, the forgiveness of his enemies, the yielding up the ghost, the darkness of the Sun, the rent of the templ's vail, the rending of the adamant rocks, the yawning mouths of opening graves, events that marked the period when he cried "tis finished." At the Supper of the Lord, these matters by the erection of this monument by the Saviour, are as fresh as when they first transpired, yes, and the moment when Gabriel's trump shall announce the judgment of the martyred Lamb, there shall be many celebrating the feast of the Lord, and crying, come Lord Jesus; and behold he shall say, I come quickly, and my reward is with me. In the receiving the elements at the Lord's table, we are reminded that we eat by faith, and that by faith an application of his precious blood is made to our souls to the washing away of sin, so long then as sinners are pardoned, and saved by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost, so long will this feast be a monument of his unexampled love, in the world's redemption by the giving his own flesh and blood a sacrifice for our sins. I am entirely pleased with the mode of administering the Supper in the Methodist Protestant Church except the general posture, that of kneeling, I am more favorable to the posture practiced by the Presbyterians and Baptists, because I think it is the most scriptural. I would be glad, for the honor of Methodism, if that little scrap of popery could be dispensed with, styled consecrating the elements. Oh, it looks so much like I would if I could, why not use that excellent prayer in the discipline, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, page 99 without mimicking the apish actions of romish priests—the whole matter is a plain affair, Jesus has thrown around it no veil of mystery, it is simply, eat & drink, in remembrance of me. "Oh for this love let rocks and hills, their lasting silence break," it is the duty of all the lovers of the Saviour, to obey this last injunction, and he who neglects it cannot be guiltless. No earthly consideration should keep us from our places at the feast. Ye are my witnesses says Christ, and they who own me here, I will acknowledge before my Father and all his holy Angels. May we, Mr. Editor, be of the number of the Saved, is the prayer of your friend, and correspondent. PAUL PRY.

The reply of Mr. Jefferson, to an enquiry of an eminent functionary on his presentation at the court of France as Minister of the United States, was in excellent good taste.

'You replace Dr. Franklin, Sir?'

"I succeed Dr. Franklin," was Mr. Jefferson's prompt reply—"No man can replace him."

Written for the Western Recorder.

Attention, the Whole!!

"All hands, ahoy! Paul Pry & the Local Preachers, look here."

Yes, yes, Sir; You have our attention. We concede you have said some things good and true; though, Mr. Pry, you will confer a special favor on your humble friend, and others, if you will be so kind as to advance a step or two, and inform us whom the unstationed ministers of the Methodist Protestant Church represent, when elected as delegates to the Annual Conferences of this Church. You shall, so far as I am at present concerned, be excused from giving your "proper name, or post office address, &c.," if you will condescend to inform us, and the public generally, through the medium of the Western Recorder, what advantages result to the unstationed ministers of said Church, from the organization of the electoral colleges, to elect representatives to the General Conference, while they are always in the minority when associated with the itinerant ministers belonging to any Annual Conference, as a component part of these Colleges; and with whom, under present usages, they must of necessity vote for delegates? You will, from your known attachment to "Mutual Rights," readily excuse me, when I respectfully request you not to dodge these questions; but, as a man true to his purpose, boldly march up to the work, and never lay down your quill, until every objection is silenced; and so plain may these subjects by you be made, that even the unlearned may be able to comprehend their force.

You say, "In the Methodist Protestant Church an unstationed minister may be a delegate to the" (Annual) "Conference, three years out of four, if his brethren will elect him to the office, and thus participate in all the business of the Conference; and even the fourth year, he may be elected by his brethren to the electoral College, and when there, is eligible to a seat in the General Conference, as much so as any minister in the district." Step this way a little, Mr. Pry. Now, that which I wish you to tell us is, whether you intend to insinuate that when an unstationed minister is elected to serve as a delegate in an Annual Conference, he acts in the capacity of a layman alone, or in the capacity of an unstationed minister. The unstationed Minister who is elected by his brethren, (not lay-brethren,) to attend the Electoral College, "when there, is eligible to a seat in the General Conference, as much so as any minister in the district." True, O, Paul! And whether he is there or not there, at the Electoral College, he is eligible to a seat in the General Conference, if his brethren, both ministerial and lay, composing the Electoral College, think proper to elect him. But, Mr. Paul Pry, do pry a little deeper into this matter, and spread before the public whom these local ministers represent in the General Conference.—I well know you can say there is no difference between ministers in the Methodist Protestant Church, and you then say what was, by the Convention of 1830, contemplated: but while every itinerant minister, without any election, claims the right to a seat in the Electoral College, and every local minister, who there takes his seat, must be elected by his ministerial brethren of his circuit or station, there is, at least, some difference now existing, and which will continue, while the present usage continues, of making both classes of ministers vote together as one portion of these Colleges.—My wish is, Mr. Pry, that you will distinctly certify, how the unstationed ministers are, as a department in the Methodist Protestant Church, any more represented in the law-making bodies, than the local ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church are represented in the General Conferences of this Church. Batavia, March 31st, 1847.

Give it to the Light.

Monday, March 1, 1847.

Mr. Editor—In your paper of 27th February I see with pleasure an article on 'The Degradation of the Stage.' I wish to give you a fact connected with the circumstance of Miss Mary Taylor's personating Satan. It is this: Miss Mary Taylor is engaged as a singer in St. Peters Church in New York. On Saturday the 13 of February, she personated the character of the DEVIL in the Bowery Theatre the very vestibule of hell, and on Sunday, the 14th, sung sacred music at St. Peter's, a house dedicated to the worship of God. I thought perhaps you did not know this fact.

Yours, very respectfully,
JOHN B. GOUGH.

P. S. I heard from those who attended Church on the 14th. that the galleries were filled with young men, congregated to hear her sing.

Of the above, received from one of the most fearless champions and advocates of temperance, morality and religion; and of all facts of the same enormity, we say, give them to the light. Let the church see and feel them, and emblazon them upon her door posts; and besides them let the true disciples of Christ, Luther like, hang up their thesis of Bible doctrine, and challenge the world to prove, that the play house and the church are so alike in usages and apartments, that an actor in the one can be a worshipper in the other; that both alike tend to virtue and religion, and light the pathway from earth to heaven.

Behold the gathered crowd, from pit to gallery yea, even to the third tier. Examine the various characters, from the seemingly virtuous to the openly abandoned, assembled for one common object. Note the brilliant, dazzling, fascinating scene; the witchery of the hour; the damask, the purple and embroidered linen; the breathless, suspended excitement of the throng; the moving, lifting curtain; the stage, peopled with actors, in richly wanton attire; and chief among them, one who in other place and attire, might be called a beautiful delicate female. None would know her now; for she has transformed herself into the proud, fiendish, heaven-defying, fallen Lucifer; and there she stands, in the centre of her pandemonium, Satan of the hour! Look at her, mark her even thro' her disguises, that you may know her, when next she claims your gaze. Hark to to the wild, and incoherent shouts that greet her presence, increased according to the perfection of her demon-like performances. Her fearful acting is over—and the last peal of applause has followed her retreating form, and died with the midnight hour away. You may trace her to her rest, and paint her dreaming reveries.

Peaceful and holy dawns the sabbath morn—Upwards on his glorious track rises the Sabbath's sun. Sweetly sound the welcomes of Sabbath bells—'come to the sanctuary, bow, adore.'—Blessed music that calls men to the altar af God. Thousands hear it, and obedient to its invitation crowd the sacred aisles, and bend in devotion.—The minister of the altar appears, and ascends the consecrated desk. Humble in bearing, he attracts but little attention. A female form enters, and glides up the stair way. All eyes are directed towards her. Along the galleries are ranged young men, attracted there by the present passer in. They cast glances of admiration after her, as she moves in queenly majesty to her place, as female leader of the songs of heaven.—Nods, and expressions of delight pass through the crowd. She is the deity hundreds have come to worship. The services commence. She swells the strains, that angels would fain warble. Who is she, the goddess of the hour, standing thus as chief leader of the praises of the sanctuary? Who, but the actress of the bowery theatre, the Lucifer? fresh from the burning pit of the evening before. She hath lain aside her scenic, satanic robes, and stands before God and his people, leading in his psalms of worship!! Where sleep thy thunderbolts, O Jehovah! Where tarry thy lightnings!! We are dumb before thee;—we cover ourselves with sackcloth and ashes;—we dare not look up! Have mercy upon us; O Lord; and purify and save thy church, while thy wrath is kindled but a little.—Albany Spectator.

The Burning of Moscow.

BY J. T. HEADLY.

Mortier, as governor of the city, immediately issued his orders and was putting forth every exertion, when at daylight Napoleon hastened to him. Affecting to disbelieve the reports that the inhabitants were firing their own city, he put more rigid commands on Mortier, to keep the soldiers from the work of destruction. The Marshal simply pointed to some iron-covered houses that had not yet been opened, from every crevice of which smoke was issuing like steam from the sides of a pent-up volcano. Sad and thoughtful, Napoleon turned towards the Kremlin, the ancient palace of the Czars whose huge structure rose high above the surrounding edifices.

In the morning, Mortier by great exertions, was enabled to subdue the fire. But the next night, September 15th, at midnight, the sentinels on watch upon the lofty Kremlin, saw below them the flames bursting through the houses and palaces, and the cry of 'fire! fire!' passed through the city. The dread scene had now fairly opened. Fiery balloons were seen dropping from the air and lighting upon the houses—dull explosions were heard on every side from the shut up dwellings, and the next moment a bright light burst forth, and the flames were raging through the apartments. All was uproar and confusion. The serene air and moonlight of the night before had given way to driving clouds, and a wild temptest that swept with the roar of the sea over the city. Flames arose on every side, blazing and crackling in the storm, while clouds of smoke and sparks in an incessant shower went driving towards the Kremlin. The clouds themselves seemed turned into fire, rolling in wrath over devoted Moscow. Mortier, crushed with the responsibility thus thrown upon his shoulders, moved with his Young Guard amid this desolation, blowing up the houses and facing the tempest and the flames—struggling nobly to arrest the conflagration.

He hastened from place to place amid the blazing ruins, his face blackened with the smoke, and his hair and eyebrows singed with the fierce heat. At length the day dawned, a day of tempest and of flame, and Mortier, who had strained every nerve for thirty-six hours, entered a palace and dropped down from fatigue.—The manly form and stalwart arm that had so often carried death into the ranks of the enemy, at length gave way, and the gloomy Marshal lay and panted in utter exhaustion. But the night of tempests had been succeeded by a day of tempests; and when night again enveloped the city, it was one broad flame, wavering to and fro in the blast. The wind had increased to a perfect hurricane, and shifted from quarter to quarter as if on purpose to swell the sea of fire and extinguish the last hope. The fire was approaching the Kremlin, and already the roaring of the flames and the crash of falling houses, and the crackling of burning timbers were borne to the ears of the startled Emperor. He arose and walked to and fro, stopping convulsively and gazing on the terrific scene. Murat, Eugene, and Berthier rushed into his presence, and on their knees besought him to flee; but he still clung to that haughty palace, as if it were his empire.

But at length the shout, 'the Kremlin is on fire!' was heard above the roar of the conflagration, and Napoleon reluctantly consented to leave. He descended into the streets with his staff, and looked about for a way of egress, but the flames blocked every passage. At length they discovered a postern gate, leading to the Meskwa, and entered it, but they had only entered still farther into the danger. As Napoleon cast his eye around the open space, girdled and arched with fire, smoke and cinders, he saw one single street yet open, but all on fire.

Into this he rushed, amid the crash of the falling houses, and raging of the flames—over burning ruins, through clouds of rolling smoke, and between walls of fire he pressed on; and at length, half suffocated, emerged in safety from the blazing city, and took up his quarters in the imperial palace of Petrowsky, nearly three miles distant. Mortier, relieved from his anxiety for the Emperor, redoubled his efforts to arrest the conflagration. His men cheerfully rushed into every danger. Breathing nothing but smoke and ashes—canopied by flame, and smoke and cinders—surrounded by walls of fire that rocked to and fro and fell with a crash amid the blazing ruins, carrying down with them red-hot roofs of iron; he struggled against an enemy that no boldness could awe or courage overcome. Those brave troops had heard the tramp of thousands of cavalry sweeping to battle without fear; but now they stood still in terror before the march of the conflagration, under whose burning footsteps was heard the incessant crash of falling houses and palaces and churches. The continuous roar of the raging hurricane, mingled with that of the flames, was more terrible than the thunder of artillery: and before this new foe, in the midst of this battle of the elements, the awe-struck army stood powerless and affrighted.

'When night again descended on the city, it presented a spectacle the like of which was never seen before, and which baffles all description. The streets were streets of fire—the heavens a canopy of fire, and the entire body of the city a mass of fire, fed by a hurricane that whirled the blazing fragments in a constant stream through the air. Incessant explosions from the blowing up of stores of oil, and tar, and spirits, shook the very foundations of the city, and sent vast volumes of smoke rolling furiously towards the sky. Huge sheets of canvass on fire came floating like messengers of death through the flames—the towers and domes of the churches and palaces, glowed with red-hot heat over the wild sea below, then tottering a moment on their basis, were hurled by the tempest into the common ruin. Thousands of wretches before unseen, were driven by the heat from the cellars and vaults, and streamed in an incessant throng through the streets. Children were seen carrying their parents—the strong, the weak; while thousands more were seen staggering under the loads of plunder they had snatched from flames. This, too, would frequently take fire in the falling shower, and the miserable creatures would be compelled to drop it and flee for their lives. Oh, it was a scene of woe and fear indescribable! A mighty and close packed city of houses, & churches, and palaces, wrapped from limit to limit in flames which are fed by a whirling hurricane, is a sight that this world will seldom see.

But this was all within the city. To Napoleon without, the spectacle was still more sublime and terrific. When the flames had overcome all obstacles, and had wrapped everything in their red mantle, that great city looked like a sea of rolling fire, swept by a tempest that drove it into vast billows. Huge domes and towers, throwing off sparks like blazing fire-brands, now towered above those waves, and now disappeared in their maddenning flow, as they rushed and broke high over their tops, scattering their spray of fire against the clouds. The heavens themselves seemed to have caught the conflagration, and the angry masses that swept it, rolled over a bosom of fire. Columns of flame would rise and sink along the surface of this sea, and huge volumes of black smoke suddenly shoot into the air as if volcanoes were working below. The black form of the Kremlin alone, towered above the chaos, now wrapped in flame and smoke, and again emerging into view—standing amid the scene of desolation and terror, like virtue in the midst of a burning world, enveloped but unscathed by the devouring elements. Napoleon stood and gazed on this scene in silent awe. Though nearly three miles distant, the windows and walls of his apartment were so hot that he could scarcely bear his hand against them. Said he, years afterwards:—

"It was the spectacle of a sea and billows of fire, a sky and clouds of flame, mountains of red rolling flame, like immense waves of the sea, alternately bursting forth, and elevating themselves to skies of fire, and then sinking into the ocean of flame below. Oh! it was the most grand, the most sublime, and the most terrific sight the world ever beheld!"

Post Office Suit.—A suit was commenced against the Post Master of Onondaga village for refusing to deliver a newspaper to a citizen, for which he offered to pay newspaper rates of postage, but which was charged with 15 cents in conformity with the Post office regulations, the wrapper being endorsed with a single initial.—The jury gave a verdict against the post master, six cents damages and costs. This we presume will be the result of every action on a similar charge. It is very embarassing to the circulation of newspapers and injurious to the public interests, and we hope the Post Master general will see the necessity and urgency of changing the system he has adopted with regard to transient newspapers generally.—*N. The New York Medical Examiner says:—A young lady with whom we are acquainted gave birth lately to her first child. The little one was about a fortnight old, when we asked a lady how it and the young mother were. 'The mother is doing well,' she answered, 'but the child is very cross; and indeed it is not to be wondered at, for they are all so pleased, they seem hardly to know what they are about. The mother feeds it, and the sister feeds it, and then the grandmother feeds it, and then the nurse feeds it, and and thus they make the child ill.' Our friend was right. We should like to have shown the young lady the stomach of a new born infant now in our museum. It would not hold more than three tables spoonfuls, and yet they were trying to cram food down the little innocent's throat by teacupfulls.

In presenting to the public the "Memoria Technic which, in some respects, may be said to contain a new t ory of instruction, the publishers beg leave to call the tention of Teachers, School Committees, and others terested in education, the peculiar merits of the work. has been already introduced into several of our best most popular schools in Boston and vicinity, and has a received high commendation from many of our most tinguished clergymen and other literary men who h examined it.

Notices of the Press.

'This system of Mnemotechny, differing considera from the one introduced by Prof. Gouraud, is designe furnish all the rules for aiding the memory without less ing mental culture, which can be made available durin course of elementary study. The illustrations may easily comprehended by any person of ordinary me capacity, and the application of the principle upon wh the system is based must necessarily furnish an agreea and useful exercise to the mind. It is well adapted common school instruction, and may be made a ve profitable study, if rightly pursued. Every page of t work gives evidence of a desire to present the laws of association distinctly & clearly, so as to enable the learner establish such relations between things, events, &c., will aid the memory. We commend the book to teache and all interested in this important subject.'—N. Teachers' Advocate.

'The art of improving the memory is surely a very i portant one, and whoever contributes any thing to furth this end, certainly renders an important service to the su lic. Mr Johnson, we believe, has succeeded in bringi his system of mnemonics into such a practicable form, will render it an essential aid to all who do not natural have a great power of memory.'—Ch. Witness

'This is a treatise on artificial memory prepared for t use of schools. The subject is a curious one, and worth of attention.'—Boston Recorder.

'This system of mnemonics, being the first work of t kind ever prepared for the use of schools, and being arranged and simplified that any one of ordinary capac ties may easily acquire a knowledge of its principles, certainly worthy of examination and study. It is mo emphatically an aid to the memory, and as such, is w adapted to common school instruction. We hearti commend it to public notice, while we hope that M Johnson will receive the reward due to his industry a perseverance by seeing this work extensively introduce into our schools, public and private.'—Tem. Standard.

'The author promises to endow his pupils with an i finite faculty of memory. If he can do it without t much trouble on the part of the recipients, he will do good thing, and as far as we can judge, he seems likely t accomplish it. While his system is much more simpl than any we have before examined, it contains a gre deal more. Moreover, it makes the thing a matter practical education, within the reach of all.'—Chronotyp

'There are minds of a certain class that are wont t interested in mnemonics, and we doubt not that such ma find valuable assistance in a work of this kind.—N. E. Puritan.

'The book, although designed and adapted to the use o schools, is nevertheless worthy the attention of all person who wish to assist or strengthen memory.'—N. E. Washington.

'A very ingenious and useful book, designed to shorte the labor of those studies which require the exercise of th memory, by a system of memorizing.'—Reading Gazette Pa.

We feel no hesitation in recommending this work to th deliberate attention of teachers, and the guardians o youth. We learn that it is received into several of th schools in Boston, and used as an auxiliary help to th studies now pursued by the pupils.'—Boston Courier.

'We noticed the first edition of this book a short time since, and in addition to what we then said, will only say now, that it is prepared by one who has paid great attention to the subject, and who has been employed to teach his system by some of our most experienced teachers and wisest men.'—Ch. Register.

'We have given the work a partial examination, sufficient to become convinced that the subject is one of importance.'—Ch. Watchman.

The Memoria Technica is now studied in some of our best schools; and the system taught in it appears to be much approved by those who have made trial of it.'—Evening Traveller.

The work contains a vast amount of important facts and useful information; which, aside from its value as a system of instruction, render it, as has been justly said by many who have examined it, well worth the price of the work as a mere book of reference. Published by

Rev. Dr. Reese in reply to Rev. A. M'Caine.

REV. AND DEAR SIR:—A few words, if you please, in reply to the notice the Rev. A. M'Caine has been pleased to take of my communication, respecting the position he occupied at the General Conference, of 1842.—I shall not afflict you or your pious readers with any reply to Mr. M'Caine's rude flourishes about my "unfair and dishonorable method of defence—my begging for quarters" and many such foreign jems which adorn his pseudography,

I desire to have no ambition to excel in that style of writing. Mr. M. is justly enough entitled to the extensive reputation for severity and "disingenuousness" which he has won for him self and has so long enjoyed. Let the laurels be ever green on his veteran head—let the eye that sees him bless him and let the young men rise up to him. I now wish to say that it is my pleasure to correct any error or misstatement that I may make at any time. In my last communication these words were written viz: "No man, I believe, on the floor of the General Conference from North or South intimated that to pass that resolution would be to exceed the powers of the General Conference!!—I did so "believe" when I wrote, but it appears that Brothers Bellamy, N. C. and Fletcher from Miss. did say that the conference would exceed its powers. Now let me notice a grave charge which Mr. M'Caine prefers against me.

He says that I and my "coadjutors the abolitionists" forced the resolution on the Southern members.

For the notes see extract from the minutes W. R. vol. 8. No. 18.

Because I introduced that resolution I am regarded, by Br. M'Caine, as acting in union with the abolitionists. For the same reason I am classed by others, with slave-holders. An aged brother a highly respectable Minister in our church, recently wrote me thus—"I fear that the vilest slave-holders will shelter themselves under Dr. Reese's resolution." You see then Br. Editor, that one of these venerable men binds me fast to the abolitionists and the other to the vilest slave-holders.

No very pleasant position—O, wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me? I have only now to say, the resolution embodies concisely my views, and has received the approval of a majority of the members of two General Conferences. With the brethren of the minority I have no quarrel, but respect and love them as brethren and companions. With the brethren of the majorities I have no blushes to be associated—where they live I will live, and where they die let me die. Mr. M. may continue to make bold strokes at the members of the General Conference and talk wisely and trippingly of "mental imbecility and moral obliquity, but let him know that he will be expected to "define his position" and put himself rectus, before any reply to his boasting "strictures" will be regarded as proper. In my notice of Rev. A. M'Caine's position, I stated that he had voted at General Conference of '42 for a resolution expressing the same "opinions" as that of '46, against which he now so vehemently makes battle. Inasmuch as he did not give his reason, at the time, for his vote in '42, nor did he favor us with his reason for that vote in his "strictures", I thought the most charitable conclusion was that he had changed his opinion since the conference of 42. I was unwilling to think that Br. M'Caine voted for the resolution, and at the same time believed that he was doing an act, for which he had no constitutional authority and thus aiding the conference to "exceed its powers" and then lashing the conference of 46, with merciless severity for the same act.

But to my surprise and grief, and no doubt to the amazement and sorrow of his friends and the whole church, Mr. M'Caine actually tells us that he has not changed his opinion. "I will tell him, I have not "changed my opinion" of the language, the principles or the objects of that resolution from the first day to the present time." Alas! alas! I beg the patient indulgence of the reader while I present some of the views that Mr. M'Caine entertains of the resolution in question. We shall see presently who has robbed him of the "jewel of consistency."

"There is not a man of common sense in the United States who can believe that the brethren from the South would be well satisfied with the adoption of a measure which was intended to work their expulsion from the church, if it did not ultimately involve them and their families in blood-shed and slaughter."

This is from the pen of Rev. A. M'Caine; and yet he voted for that vile and "absurd" resolution! and now tells us he has not "changed his opinion of the objects of that resolution from the first day to the present time!

He believes it was intended, indeed he asserts it in the most positive manner, to work the expulsion of the South from the church, but with this firm persuasion, he voted for its passage. What is such a vote, under such conviction, but a vote to expel the Southern brethren from the church? And, brethren, this is the man who volunteers his services to defend the interests of the South. He thinks too that it is probable the passage of that resolution might "ultimately involve them and their families in blood-shed and slaughter." One would think that an honorable man holding such opinions would lose the fingers from his right hand rather than vote for such a horrid resolution and yet Mr. M'Caine did absolutely vote for the passage of that blood-shedding document, as he says he thought it might be. What is such an act, with such a faith, but an act to involve the South in "ultimate blood-shed and slaughter? This is the excellent brother who feared that the acts of the conference would not be characterized by "wisdom justice and truth." Is such a course becoming in one who loves the church and professes so much anxiety to secure her well-being? How doss such conduct accord with christian patriotism? Let the reader judge.

But Mr. M'Caine has said more of that resolution. He says it is "double-faced, vague, contradictory and absurd, a Janus-faced production intended to entrap by placing two sentences of such opposite qualities in the same resolution. He affirms that it contains bad theology, that the principles contained in it strike at all religion, natural and revealed; that taking the resolution all in all, it exceeded any thing he had ever seen in the same number of words for bad divinity—pure, universal nonsense—and covered malevolence."

This is a pretty fair specimen of what constitutes the excellence of Mr. M'Caine's reply. It abounds in strong, bold and vulgar assertions. Let us take out one of these affirmations only—"the principles the resolution contains, strike at all religion natural and revealed." Why then did that brother vote for such a resolution? The Rev. A. M'Caine, an aged minister of the Gospel voted for a resolution so horridly wicked as to strike at all religion, natural and revealed! "He thought so in '42, he thinks so still, he has not changed his opinion." Is the "jewel of consistency" found in all this? We have been taught to believe that religious men will oppose, with a becoming spirit, every measure which in their judgment is calculated to operate against religion. But here is a resolution that "strikes at all religion" and a pious minister "opposes it,—in all its phases" how? By voting for it!

It affords me no pleasure, but indeed rather pain, thus to present to the church and the world, the unhappy position in which Mr. M'Caine has placed himself by his own act and declaration.

Nothing but a sense of justice to the church, to the General Conference, and to myself would induce me to notice any of these things. Mr. M'Caine will have it so—he commenced and urged on his "strictures" in a spirit, tone and temper, that would not allow us to be silent, though we deeply regretted the necessity of a reply. But to do Mr. M'Caine full justice we must say that he now gives us his reason for his vote. He tells us that he voted for the resolution because he wished to "get rid of the subject of slavery." I will not say of this as he said of the resolution in question that it "caps the climax of absurdity," but I will say that it does not appear to me to be a very strong reason why a good man should vote for a resolution so monstrously wicked as he "thought it was in 1842 and thinks so still."

It does seem so strange that a good man should vote for a resolution which he considered so vile and base. And why? Because he "wished to get rid of the subject of slavery!" Does not Mr. M'caine and every body else, know that he could have secured the same object by voting against it? The question must have been decided in the affirmative or negative. In either case the conference would have been "rid of the subject of slavery" for the time being—and Mr. M'Caine would have been gratified in the result, and his "wish" fully realized.

If Mr. M'Caine had voted against the resolution the result would have been precisely the same and then he could have written his "strictures" on the act of the General Conference of '46 with some face and consistency and would now be free from the sad perplexity which must so greatly afflict him.

How Mr. M'Caine could hold the resolution in such utter abhorrence and yet vote for its passage, —for the reason stated by himself—is a question too mighty for me.

Can it be possible that Mr. M'Caine is so deluded as to suppose that the church will be satisfied with such a reason, for such a vote, by such a man, with such a view, under such circumstances? I know the church is kind and confiding, and I am glad it is so, but there is a point beyond which even the strongest attachment cannot venture.

The many friends of Mr. M'Caine and my own personal friends will regret that he and I should be engaged in controversy, but I am sure no one can regret it more than myself.

Religious Strictures.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Letters to an Eminent Minister.

LETTER I.

Introductory.

It has been the peculiar boast, and I may say the glory of Methodism, that the doctrines which she promulgated to the world, were the doctrines of the Bible; and as such, breathed nothing but the purest philanthropy—a philanthropy as extensive as the universe, and as comprehensive as the human race. Her sympathies and kindled feelings, in the commencement of her career, were manifested, in the most praiseworthy extent, to those for whom although Heaven had bled, yet generally, the world, even the then religious world, cared not, I mean the poor. Of whatever country or clime—whatever character, situation, or circumstances in life, all witnessed her divine sympathies, and shared in her benevolent operations. But the poor especially, or rather preeminently, experienced the warmth of her charity, and rejoiced in her disinterested affection and care. She rendered unpopular, also, and demolished to a great extent, the partial and limited tenets of Calvinism, and in midair held them up before the world as doctrines derogatory to the pure and disinterested benevolence of the Deity, who will have all men come to a knowledge of the truth, and be saved,—as manifesting towards one an exclusive partiality and mercy, which they denied to others equally meritorious by the claims of nature, and more so probably by the actions of their lives. The declaration of the Apostle, "that God is no respecter of persons," was wielded with powerful success, and to the discomfiture of many advocates of the extensive theory.

We have always looked upon Methodism as the offspring of the Deity—the child of heaven; and to Him we attribute the power, and mercy, and glory, of nursing her in the bitter storm that assailed her in her opening history, and cradling her amid the wild persecutions of an infuriated and wicked populace, and an hireling ministry. She was peculiarly and providentially adapted to the wants and necessities of the great mass of human society; carrying to the hearts of the desolate, and the homes of the poor, the rich treasures of religious consolation and joy, who had been overlooked, neglected, or forgotten in the partial administrations of at least one other prominent and powerful denomination. Her enemies have awarded her this just meed of tribute and honor. And sir, are we anxious to discover the grand cause of her triumphant and glorious career, the reason why such a vast multitude have become communicants at her altars, and the cloud of witnesses that rise up and call her blessed?—we can read it in living colors—colors that beautify and adorn the subject they illustrate:—God raised her up to care for the poor, to carry the lamp of revelation to their desolate abodes, and there administer to their perishing necessities. Well did she fulfil her glorious destiny; and the humble poor, the forsaken of men, have wreathed around her altars garlands of beautiful flowers, that no time can wither, no pestilence destroy. Her early ministers were plain, modest, self-sacrificing and holy men—men of iron nerve, and unflinching and uncompromising integrity. Her followers were also modest, of deep piety, and free from those gaudy trappings, and refined trumpetry, in which we find so large a number of our modern professors arrayed. They enjoyed the rich blessings of the gospel of peace, full of love, full of zeal, and full of fire: and hence they carried about with them a heavenly and a powerful influence felt and acknowledged, by a formal christianity and a wicked multitude. Well might the spirit of poetical inspiration burn in the bosom of the immortal Wesley, and drop from his pen in the following beautiful stanza when contemplating her feeble origin but triumphant career:—

"Saw ye not a cloud arise
Little as a human hand?
Now it spreads along the skies
Hangs o'er all the thirsty land!"

It would afford us delight to trace briefly here the outlines of early Methodism, feeble as the attempt might be, and to give you more of her distinguishing peculiarities; but we are compelled to leave it for future letters, and pass now to notice that a change has come over her, a change for the worse, and one of fearful and ominous magnitude: and although "ICHABOD" be not written on her altars, may we not exclaim, to a great extent, that "the glory is departing!" The Wesleys, and the other luminaries that adorned her opening splendor, died when the reformation was in its ascending glory, or in the midst of its purity, excellence, and renown. Had they lived to see the departure of its followers from the modest and humble pretensions of its early votaries, and the pride, haughtiness, and worldly wisdom, that have swept the church like the simoon of the desert, or soothed her into lethean slumbers; had they lived to see the watchman closing their eyes to the enemies that surround her walls, and the poisonous and hidden dangers that lie in her path;—had they lived to see many of her professed watchmen become followers of the multitude in fashionable apparel, and costly array, and gorgeous vestments—crowding to the groaning tables of the wealthy, and, as far as possible, placing them high in official relations to the church, neglecting the humble poor, however pious:—I repeat, had those ancient worthies, and unostentatious followers of Christ lived to witness this great religious defalcation, in modern Methodism, their voices would have been heard in loud remonstrance, and in warning the church of her approaching desolation and ruin.

I shall in my future letters, sir, call your attention to some of the particulars briefly alluded to in the preceding paragraph, in a more extensive manner.

I remain, Rev. Sir, yours, &c., ANON.

SPIRIT OF REFORM.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Away with Tobacco.

MR EDITOR:—Believing that our Anti-tobacco pledge is worthy of imitation, and that its publication at this time will be useful, believing also that in the present scattered position of those who became members of it at our last A. Conference much good may be effected through their influence. We therefore transmit you a copy together with their names, which you will please publish in your useful paper.

It is suggested that it may have a tendency to stir us up to energetic action. And for the encouragement of the brethren I would just state that we are making some progress in this region. I am not able to give the particulars, but we have at least two societies in the bounds of our travels, one in Mt. Pleasant the other in Alexandria. My worthy colleague has signed the pledge, and there are but two small letters (if) in his way of becoming a staunch reformer.

As a member of this honorable society bear with me a moment as I dont write often. Tobacco as it is commonly used is a direct violation of the laws of human instinct to say nothing of intellect. Who by following the laws of his nature would ever thought of feeding his nose? Who would have dreampt of burning up his food in order to live on the smoke? Or masticating with his teeth that which he could not or durst not swallow, and from which nothing but poison could be extracted?

It is said of "Sir Walter Releigh, who first brought tobacco into fashion in England, he was accustomed, at first, to smoke in secret. One day having sent his servant for some beer, he entered, and for the first time saw his master fumigating his pipe. Supposing his master's head on fire, on seeing the smoke issue from his mouth, he threw the pot of beer directly in his face." All other ways of using the weed are equally as unnatural as smoking. None can deny but it is expensive. From the best statistics I am able to command at present, it costs this nation sixteen millions of dollars annually. And it is published on good authority that in the year 1843 Great Britain and Ireland alone, consumed forty millions of dollars in tobacco. (By the way if they had it in food now, it would be better for them.) A curious calculation has ascertained that if all this tobacco was worked into pigtail an inch thick it would be sufficient to gird the earth five times round. "WHEW!"

All must admit that it is a filthy practice and when used in the sanctuary of God, specially in the pulpit, it is an "abomination of desolation standing where it ought not."

Ministers' Department.

To Clergyman and Public Speakers.

We copy from the London Recorder the following reply to a correspondent, "who seeks a remedy for that affection of the trachea, of which so many active clergymen complain."

1. Let the throat always be kept at the same even and low temperature at which any one keeps the face. Few ladies are attacked with the tracheal irritation, because with them habitually the throat is open to the action of the cool air. Many men, and clergymen in particular, tie up the neck with a handkerchief with a pad in it, or with a thick stock, and in this way the glandular and highly vascular substance of the neck, becomes peculiarly tender and susceptible, and the tracheal passage suffers with it. Let nothing be worn about the throat, either in winter or in summer, but a plain thin mosella (marseilles) stock which will not allow the throat to become heated; and it will soon be protected by habit from all swelling of the tonsils by cold, and from the sympathetic irritation of the trachea.

2. As a preventive, before the deduction of the packing round the throat, begin the ablution with tepid water and vinegar, and gradually come to the copious use of cold water, applied by a sponge to the whole region of the neck and shoulders, rubbing afterwards with a course towel, till the skin is well reddened. If this plan is adopted in summer, by the time winter arrives it will be found quite sufficient to wear only the slightest stock in the coldest weather, and to sleep at night with the collar of the night shirt unfastened, without taking cold.

3. Many persons have a very injurious mode of speaking, by driving the sound from the chest harshly and gratingly thro' the windpipe, creating a sound which seems rather sepulchral within the body than flowing easily out of it. It is far better to keep the mouth itself well open, giving the whole instrument rather the character of a trumpet in which the effective sound depends rather in a gentle, steady filling the mouth of the trumpet for vibration, than blowing into it violently. I believe this erroneous method to be exhausting at all times, and rapidly destructive of the organ. If the lungs are regularly expanded at proper intervals, and the column of inhaled air is allowed to flow out at a moderate and quiet rate, and without the vehement muscular driving of the chest, while the articulation is easy, and independent, like the fingering of a flute, the natural instrument is treated fairly, and will endure a degree of wear and tear not often encountered.

These are the results of thirty years' experience, and though they appear minor matters; yet if properly attended to, they will be found of real importance. Men of peculiar delicacy of throat may by perseverance in this way, become robust and indomitable speakers.

Of course if there is a general constitutional debility, collateral measures for improvement must be adopted also, or these hints would be of little avail.

Public Prayers of Ministers for themselves.

MR. EDITOR—Your columns lately contained some just and reasonable remarks on the way in which ministers pray for one another: perhaps you will indulge me with a few, on the way in which they sometimes pray for themselves. It is not uncommon for a preacher, in his prayer before sermon, to load his own person with disparaging expressions, and to dwell on his insufficiency, weakness, and want of preparation. This is out of place. Without questioning the justice of such confession, which might be well enough in the closet, it may be asserted, that it is not by extravagant self-depreciation, or by calling himself "a worm," a "worm of the dust," an "unworthy and vile worm," that a man s humility is best exhibited. The comman prayers of God's assembled people do not require this particular view of of the minister's case. Sincere modesty is better evinced by the general requests for aid, and by as total a hiding of one's personality as is compatible with this.

In analogy with what has just been said, it is not amiss to add, that the less the preacher says about himself, the better. Let him be forgotten, that the word may have free course. Few things are more disgusting, than the egotism with which some pulpit orators interlard their discources with parenthetic references to their circumstances, their health, their hoarseness, or the interruption of their studies. Deprecatory statements and apologies are no part of the message, and no means of grace.

A prayer differs materially from an advertisement. We commend the distinction to those reverend gentlemen, who employ these parts of service to inform their people that they "have sought repairs of strength by a recent journey;" or that God's "servant has been called to aid a brother in affliction;" or that he is to be assisted "by a dear brother, in the latter part of the day."

All such abuses indicate a withdrawing of the mind from the true nature of prayer. There is irreverence in telling God that which you really mean to tell the audience. The affectation of particularity in prayer, or undue adaptation to the present circumstances, in minute and temporal things, is a gross evil. It may be doubted whether the spirituality of a worshipping assembly is in any degree promoted, by constant reference to the state of the weather, the roads, or the number of persons present. Our errand to the throne of grace involves matters of trancendent and eternal worth, and every word which is aside from these is injurious to the devotion. REDITURUS.

Family Worship.

A pious tradesman conversing with a minister on family worship, related the following instructive circumstances:

When I began business for myself I was determined, through grace, to be particularly conscientious with respect to family prayer. Accordingly I persevered for many years in the delightful practice of domestic worship. Morning and evening every individual of my family was present; nor would I allow my apprentices to be absent on any account. In a few years the advantages of these engagements manifestly appeared; the blessings of the upper and nether springs followed me; health and happiness attended my family, and prosperity my business. At length such was the rapid increase of my trade and the importance of devoting every possible moment to my customers, that I began to think whether family prayer did not occupy too much of our time in the morning. Pious scruples arose respecting my intentions of relinquishing this part of my duty; but at length worldly interests prevailed so far as to excuse the attendance of my apprentices, and not long after it was deemed advisable, for the more eager prosecution of business, to make the prayer with my wife, when we arose in the morning, suffice for the day.

Notwithstanding the repeated checks of conscience that followed this base omission, the calls of a flourishing concern and the prospects of an increasing family appeared so imperious and commanding that I found an easy excuse for this fatal evil, especially as I did not omit prayer altogether. My conscince was now almost seared with a hot iron, when it pleased the Lord to awaken me by a singular providence.

One day I received a letter from a young man who had formerly been my apprentice previous to my omitting family prayer. Not doubting but I continued domestic worship, his letter was chiefly on this subject; it was couched in the most affectionate and respectful terms: but judge of my surprise and confusion when I read these words, "O, my dear master, never, never shall I be able to sufficiently to thank you for the precious privilege with which you indulged me in your family devotions? O sir, eternity will be too short to praise my God for what I learned there. It was there I first beheld my lost and wretched state as a sinner; it was there that I first knew the way of salvation; and there that I first experienced the preciousness of 'Christ in me, the hope of glory.' O sir, permit me to say, never, never neglect those precious engagements; you have yet a family and more apprentices; may your house be the birth-place of their souls!" I could read no further; every line flashed condemnation in my face. I trembled, I shuddered, I was alarmed lest the blood of my children and apprentices should be demanded at my soul-murdering hands.

Filled with confusion and bathed in tears, I fled for refuge in secret. I spread the letter before God. I agonized, and—but you can better conceive than I can describe my feelings; suffice it to say, that light broke in upon my disconsolate soul, and a sense of blood-bought pardon was obtained. I immediately flew to my family, prepresented them before the Lord, and from that day to the present, I have performed this duty, and am determined, through grace, that whenever my business becomes so large as to interrupt family prayer, I will give up the superfluous part of my business and retain my devotion: better to loose a few shillings than become the diliberate murderer of my family and the instrument of ruin to my own soul.

Ladies'-Department.

Uneducated Women.

There is no sight so truly pitiable as that afforded by a rising family of children under the guardianship of an ignorant mother. I would be understood in the use of the term ignorant, as wishing to convey, the picture of a mother whose maiden days were devoted to the acquirement of fashionable accomplishments, to the exclusion of solid mental culture and acquirements. The woman who reigns the queen of the ball-room, is very seldom found capable of being the governess of her own children; and the time spent at SOIREE and route will be bitterly regretted when age brings experience and consequent remorse for the evil she has inflicted, and her incapacity to discharge properly the interesting and important duties of her station, when it was her natural duty to be at once an instructor and example. The maiden who casts aside her book for the cotillion will never win the love and esteem of a sensible man: and should she select a partner for life among her partners in the dance, she will find that her choice has been as unfortunate as the place where she first attracted his notice was injudicious. I ever look with pain upon that young wife who enters upon her second era with fashionable ideas of society. Her first era has been devoted to the attainment of certain rules and systems which are scarcely pardonable in the girl, certainly censurable in the wife, and criminal in the mother.

The following remarks by Hannah Moore so forcibly express my views on the subject, that I give them in lieu of anything farther from myself:

"When a man of sense comes to marry, it is a companion whom he wants, not an artist. It is not merely a creature who can paint and play, sing and dance—it is a being who can comfort and counsel him, one who can reason, and reflect, and feel, and judge, and discourse, and discriminate—one who can assist him in his affairs, lighten his sorrows, purify his joys, strengthen his principles, and educate his children. Such is the woman who is fit for a mother, and the mistress of a family. A woman of the former description may occasionally figure in a drawing-room, and attract the admiration of the company, but she is entirely unfit for a helpmate to a man, and to 'train up a child in the way it should go.'"

Extravagant Language.

There is an untasteful practice, which is a crying sin among young ladies—I mean the use of exaggerated, extravagant forms of speech—saying splendid for pretty, magnificent for handsome, horrid for very, horrible for unpleasant, immense for large, thousands or myriads for any number more than two. Were I to write down, for one day, the conversation of some young ladies of my acquaintance, and then to interpret it literally, it would imply that, within the compass of twelve or fourteen hours, they had met with more marvelous adventures and hair-breadth escapes, had passed through more distressing experiences, had seen more imposing spectacles, had endured more fright, and enjoyed more rapture, than would suffice for half a dozen common lives. This habit is attended with many inconveniences. It deprives you of the intelligible use of strong expressions, when you need them. If you use them all the time, nobody understands or believes you when you use them in earnest. You are in the same predicameat with the boy who cried "wolf" so often when there was no wolf, that nobody would go to his relief when the wolf came. This habit has also a very bad moral bearing. Our words have a reflex influence upon our characters. Exaggerated speech makes one careless of the truth. The habit of using words without regard to their rightful meaning, often leads one to distort facts, to misreport conversations, & magnify statements in matters in which the literal truth is important to be told. You can never trust the testimony of one who, in common conversation, is indifferent to the import, and regardless of the power of words. I am acquainted with persons, whose representations of facts always need translation and correction, and who have utterly lost their reputation for veracity, solely through this habit of overstrained and extravagant speech. They do not mean to lie; but they have a dialect of their own, in which words bear an entirely different sense from that given them in their daily intercourse of discreet and sober people.—Address of A. P. Peabody.

Thoughts on a Passage of Scripture.

For Christ hath also once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the spirit; by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which some time were disobedient, when once the long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the Ark was preparing, wherein few, that is eight souls were saved by water, 1 Pet. iii. 18, 19, 20.

Question. What are we taught in verse 18?

Answer. We are taught that Christ suffered, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God; that he was put to death in the flesh, and quickened by the Spirit, or raised from the dead by the Spirit.

Question. What are we taught by verse 19 and 20?

Answer. We are taught that Christ preached by his Spirit to the Antediluvians in the days of Noah, while the Ark was preparing; that these people quenched or resisted the Spirit and were lost; and that at the time of Peter's writing this epistle, they were 'spirits in prison.' Observe,

1st. They were not in prison when Christ preached to them, but beings on the earth as sinners now are.

2. The time:—it was in the days of Noah while, the ark was preparing.

3d. They repented not, were drowned in the flood and lost.

4th. In Peter's day, they were 'spirits in prison,—the place in the future state, which is assigned to all others who repent not of their sins.—Chris. Patriot.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Delaware Circuit, April 20, 1847.

Bro. Bassett: We commenced a protracted meeting at Hopewell, on the 28th day of March, and closed the 4th day of April. Hopewell is the hardest place I ever saw, and Satan tried himself. He exerted a powerful influence against us: First, on account of an old difficulty that existed about the meeting-house. Secondly, from individuals backsliding; and thirdly, by those Satan does not desire to have; and the reason is this,—he has them already, and I think they need no sifting, for it is already done; and from their conduct, I am sure they are like him, and are prepared to do his bidding. O, my God, have mercy on them. Now, the first difficulty was settled. Some of the backsliders were reclaimed. There was an effort made to break up the meeting. A notice was found, threatening me with a mob. So, accordingly, the same evening an attack was made upon the camp of Israel, and I intended to publish them, but they have asked pardon of the public. I therefore forbear giving you the particulars, and their names. As to the final issue, I can say, victory was on the Lord's side, and we shouted aloud for joy. Eight or ten embraced religion, and six gave us their names; and thus broke up Hopewell meeting,—shouting victory over the enemy. I then left for Westbrook's, to meet the President. He came, according to appointment, on the 7th, in the afternoon, and preached at night;—Thursday, at 11 o'clock, and also at candle-lighting. His health was as good as could be expected, until Thursday night, he took a chill; but he labored to the satisfaction of the people, and filled his station creditably.—May the Lord give him strength of body, that he may be able to finish his labors. I told him I would pick up the spoil after he left. We continued the meeting on, and on Saturday night, Br. Babcock, a minister in the United Brethren church, came to our help, and preached twice, with power. May the Lord bless him. On Monday night, the work of the Lord broke out,—three or four got religion. The next night the anxious seats were crowded; we continued the meeting until the 18th, when I was obliged to leave. We had a good time, for the Lord converted sinners at the meeting and at home. Fourteen gave us their names, all out of the world, and we expect more soon.—Pray for us all you, that wish the cause well.

Yours in Christ,
WM. HATFIELD, Jr.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Greenville Mission.

New Madison, Ohio, April 16th, 1847.

Dear Brother Bassett: Having to write to you on business, I will say something about our little Zion, in this Mission. Though we cannot report great revivals, yet we are not without some prosperity. The inclemency of the winter, and sickness, in these parts, have worked very much against our protracted efforts, and for the want of praying and singing Brethren, with pain we have seen good begun efforts go down. Protestant Principles are somewhat new in this region of country, and as all new things demand some notice, they are not without the scrutiny and rebuke, of some that would almost charge God of great injustice for not making them the sole instruments of the world's conversion. How unlike the spirit of one that said, He that is not against us, is for us. And how long shall we suffer under the false imputations of those from whom we should look for better things. May the Lord have mercy on such. Truth and mutual rights must prevail. We have had some valuable accessions this year—some from the world and some from the Methodist Episcopal Church. At our last Quarterly Meeting held in this place, we held on about ten days.

We were favored with the labors of our President, Br. Young, two Sabbaths. We organized a class of five members, there were two or three conversions—the first perhaps ever converted in the place. Good impressions have been made, and seed sown I trust that will spring up and bear fruit, unto eternal life. A fever has prevailed in these parts, the past winter, which has proved fatal to many, especially those who have indulged in the use of ardent spirits. And we fear some were called into eternity, illy prepared to meet their God, while others found it was good to depart and be with Christ. Well may we adopt the language of the Prophet,—O Lord revive thy work; in the midst of the years: and in wrath remember mercy. Pray for us, Yours in Christ,

S. P. KEZERTA.

A Painful Case.

We find in a late number of the Boston Medical Journal, a most melancholy case of accidental poisoning, the particulars of which we transfer to our columns. The narrative shows how extremely careful those should be who have to deal with such exceedingly powerful agents as chemical skill has developed. The fact that the seller was a regular apothecary, and the unfortunate buyer a regular physician, is a new instance of the risk incurred by the familiarity of people with danger. —Frequent handling of dangerous substances leads to the careless handling of them. The physician was Dr. Wm. C. Warner of Vermont, at the time of his death by this poison a member of the Legislature of that State.

Having just come to Montpelier to attend the last session of the Legislature, and being, as he had been for some time, out of health, Dr. Warner called at an apothecary's for a bottle of sulphate of morphine. This was handed to him by the apothecary, enveloped in brown paper, twisted at both ends. On the morning of the day, on which the Doctor died, he took a portion of what he supposed to be morphia, tearing off only the envelope at the mouth of the bottle. The effects of the poison began to be felt in less than five minutes; the quantity taken is supposed to have been from one fourth to one half of a grain.—Death ensued in about a quarter of an hour after the article was taken. In the authentic account of this occurrence, drawn up by the professional brethren of the deceased in the county where he resided, a great number of circumstances are related which give a very melancholy interest to the case. The first remark made by the deceased to the physician, who first came to his room after the fatal accident, was—"I have taken by accident an over-dose of morphine; help me, if you can"—not being aware that he had taken poison. The last words he uttered were, "I fear, I fear, O God deliver me"—retaining his mind clear throughout. "When death ensued, says the account, a number of the medical fraternity being present, we retired to an adjoining room, when the fatal bottle was produced with the wrapper still around it. On removing the wrapper it was found labelled 'strychnine.'"

Strychnia is said to be endowed with a wonderful destructive energy. One writer says that he killed a dog in two minutes with the sixth part of a grain. A wild boar was also killed in ten minutes with the third part of a grain. That such a poison should be kept in an apothecary's shop wrapped up—the label of course concealed—in brown paper, is most marvellous.

Poisons are not unfrequently taken, through accident, by those who have not the means or intelligence to distinguish poisons from healthful substance. But this is a case where all the parties were familiar with poisons. It is therefore peculiarly instructive, and deserves to be especially noted and remembered.—Neall's Sat. Gazette.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO.

THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 1847.

☞ Just received, from Cincinnati, one hundred copies, Sacred Melodeon.

Report of the Book Committee.—The annual Report of the Book Committee, to the Maryland Conference, is published in a recent number of the Methodist Protestant. The Report states that "In October, 1847, it became necessary and proper to make certain changes in the Board of Directors, in view of relieving several of the members from personal responsibility." Four of its members, P. S. Chappell, B. K. Richardson, C. W. Ridgley and W. L. Richardson were personally responsible for the remaining $1,500 to make up the $5,047, to be paid to certain scrip holders before the end of the month. To relieve those brethren, and save the Concern from sacrifice at auction, it was determined at a meeting called for the purpose, that the above named persons should retire from the Board, and their liabilities be assumed by Wesley Starr, John Coats and James R. Williams, the two former to be elected directors. This arrangement was carried into effect, and the Board was re-organized by the election of J. R. Williams, President; Wesley Starr, Treasurer; J. J. Murray, Secretary; Dr. F. Waters, and L. R. Reese, members. The new board proceeded forthwith in the business of the Concern. The Report furnishes a list of the assets of the Concern at the time of the re-organization of the Board which placed at a very low and safe valuation amounts to $15,293. Then, its liabilities are set down at $13,835. Balance, in favor of the Concern, $1,458. But should interest be demanded on certain scrip, named in Report, (which probably will not) but a balance of $63,18, would remain in favor of the concern. The Directors say that the true cause of the reduction of assets is found in the depreciation of value in the plates from cost. The Plates of Clarke's Commentary originally cost $10,500, but are now (though nearly new) set down at $4,500. The plates of Mosheim's Church History which cost $1,200, are now placed at $500. The business of the Concern has been prosecuted with rigor, and encouraging prospect of success, since the re-organization of the Board. On the 1st of March, after deducting disbursements from receipts, the Treasurer had in hand $574,04. A new edition of the Hymn Book, of 5000 copies has been issued. The Committee have also in course of publication, 500 copies of Clarke's Commentary entire, to be delivered to subscribers in monthly numbers of about 200 pages each at 50 cents per number. These publications will of course involve a considerable outlay, but it is hoped that the sale of the works will speedily produce means for meeting the expenditures, and leave a surplus, in aid of other important operations. The number of the subscribers to the Methodist Protestant, is stated to be 2,611. The prospects of the paper are represented as quite flattering. The Directors express a hope that before the period of the assembling of next General Conference, the outstanding scrip will be redeemed, and the Concern freed from debt, and placed in a condition to aid the several Annual Conferences in making up their deficiences. But the energetic co-operation of the whole Church to secure these happy results, is said to be indispensible. Our brethren are called upon to aid in the circulation of the Church periodical, and to purchase freely the publications of the Concern. We will try and do our part in Ohio.

Missouri Conference.—We see published in a late number of the Methodist Protestant, what purports to be an abstract of the Minutes of the Third Session of the Missouri Annual Conference, of the Methodist Protestant Church. We were aware that the regular steps had been taken for setting off a new District, in Missouri, a few years ago, and for the organization of a new Conference there. We had diligently sought information of the organization of such conference, for the purpose of publishing it with our general statistics, but without success. At the General Conference of 1846, we expected that if a Missouri Conference was in existence, it would be reported to that body, by representative, or at least by communication. But no such report came, consequently no such Conference was recognized by the General Conference. Missouri is legally embraced in the Illinois District. It is strange that this new Conference neglected to comply with the rule of Discipline, to report "in writing, to the Gen. Conference."

By the Minutes, lately published in the Methodist Protestant, we see that the Missouri Conference embraces sixteen ministers. Amongst these, we find the name of Josiah Hopkins, an estimable brother who received ordination at the first session of the Indiana Conference, and immediately after, set out for the far west. His old friends will be gratified to learn that he is engaged in the service as an itinerant minister, and has charge of what is called White River Circuit. B. T. Nowland is President. The Missouri Conference recognizes five Circuits and two Missions. Further statistics are not given. The next session of the Conference is to be held at Pilot Grove, Cooper County, Mo., first Monday in October, 1847.

Columbian Magazine.—The May number is before us, embellished with three elegant steel engravings, and a piece of original music. The contents of the Columbian, are entirely original, consisting of prose and poetry, furnished by contributors of popular talents. Ormsby and Hackett Publishers, 116, Fulton street, N. York. Terms, $3 per annum.

More Rejoicing—More Mischief.—At a recent celebration of Taylor's victory at Chicago, Ill., R. S. Wilson Esq. editor of the Chicago Journal, came near losing his life by the discharge of a cannon which he was assisting to load. Mr. Wilson having hold of the ramrod, was violently thrown several feet, and taken up for dead. He recovered however, but in a seriously mangled condition. He has lost all his fingers from his left hand, and the thumb of the right hand. His left arm, and also his face were badly bruised. The sufferer is son of Judge Wilson of Steubenville, and brother of Rev. J. E. Wilson, formerly of the Methodist Protestant Church. We regret this and other similar disasters, and wish that others would take warning to refrain from such unnecessary, and uncalled for exposures of their lives and limbs.

Sunday School Books.—By politeness of F. W. Porter, Esq. Cor. Secretary of the American S. S. Union, Philadelphia, we acknowledge the receipt of quite a budget, embracing goodly specimens of the publications of that highly useful Association. The semi annual Catalogue, is a pamphlet of 48 pages, which duly indicates that a very extensive variety of books is embraced. Several which we have examined are highly instructive and entertaining, as well as useful, and are worthy the attention not of children alone, but of adults. The western Christian public, should warmly sympathise in the labors of the American S. S. U., as one of its declared leading objects, is to "supply destitute Sunday Schools with Library Books, and especially Sunday Schools in the West." Donations are therefore solicited, to aid the Union in furtherance of objects so desirable. Let them be poured forth as into the treasury of the Lord. The "Union" is strictly a Union of the benevolent of various denominations, for the glory of God, and the salvation of the rising generation. May Heaven still smile upon its labors, and give them more enlarged success.

The American S. S. U. publishes several interesting and cheap periodicals. 'The Sunday School Journal' semi monthly, for Teachers. 'The Youth's Penny Gazette,' semi monthly, for Youth. The 'Child's Companion,' Monthly.

Mr. John Metcalf, of this place, keeps on hand a general assortment of the Books of the Union.

Canal Lands.—The Editor of the Ohio State Journal, in his last paper has published the law establishing the price of the Canal lands in this state, and directed attention to the inducements offered to actual settlers. These lands were appropriated by the General Government to aid the state in the completion of the Miami, Wabash and Erie, and Ohio Canals. They lie in western and north western counties, we believe chiefly in the vallies of the Maumee and Au Glaize rivers. The law provides that no one individual shall be permitted to purchase more than one hundred & sixty acres of land. Also that actual settlers, or those who will subscribe an affidavit, that it is their bona fide intention, to enter upon and improve said lands within twelve months, and to reside permanently thereon, shall have their land at thirty three per cent less than the appraised value. Those however who do not design settling, may purchase any amount of land, not exceeding a quarter section, at the appraised value. It is stated that in the Lima land district alone are upwards of 200,000 acres of these lands remaining unsold. A man who lately went out from one of the older counties expecting to pay $100 for 80 acres, for a home, found to his joyful surprise that he could obtain it for $65. This information is of interest and importance to many with limited means, who wish to purchase a tract of land for a permanent home.

Pencilings.—A highly respected, and ever welcome correspondent, having sent us an article for this week's paper, written with lead pencil, and then requested us to be very accurate in publishing it, the compositor wished to know whether it would not be admissible to send him through the mail, a lot of pens for his convenience. His pen-manship is so neat, it is a pleasure to have such copy come into the office, seeing we have to spend so much precious time in translating quail tracks, sent us by some of our writers. And unfortunate for us, we occasionally find that we are not learned enough in hieroglyphics to make out a correct rendering. Now, must'nt say, That applies to me,

Rev. Jonathan Flood.—Disaster.—This aged minister, now being in Randolph Co., Ia., but near the Ohio State line experienced a severe loss recently, as we learn by letter from Rev. C. Sumption, dated, Deerfield, Ia., April, 14, 1847. He says:

"I have something to state which will pain you and many others. Old Bro. Flood was at my house on Monday last, returning from our second Quarterly meeting, and same day, went on home, a distance of 8 miles, this morning I received information that the night he got home, his dwelling was entirely consumed by fire, with all its content,—the family narrowly escaping with their lives.—Poor and weakly as I am I have a little to spare for the good old Brother. Wonder if some of his old friends who are able, especially those who have in time past been favored with his labors, will not send him some aid in this time of calamity and distress,"

We trust that the above appeal in behalf of an aged veteran and pioneer of the Methodist Protestant Church will be heeded. Where are those who have had the faithful labors of Bro. F. in other years in the Ohio District, and did not their duty towards his support. If they would now pay what is his just due it would aid him in time of need. But we expect it not of such. Such as have already known the blessedness of giving, will likely remember Br. Flood. His post office address is Fairview, Randolph, Ia. If any see proper to remit to us for him, we will faithfully transmit it to him. And meanwhile, we trust we shall be furnished with further particulars of the disaster.

The first.—We are gratified to see that Post masters whose salary is less than $200 per annum begin to learn that they have the franking privilege restored to them. Mr. G. M. Johnson P. M. at Swan, Hocking O., has our thanks, as the first deputy Post Master who has remitted to us, under his frank, the pay for a subscriber, thus saving us the postage. We trust that many other post masters, of the 500 post offices to which we send our paper, will do us similar acts of kindness. And we will feel equally obliged to subscribers having funds to send us, who will procure such an arrangement with their Post Masters.

Rev. Clinthus Gregory, an itinerant minister of the Michigan Conference, and Superintendant of Barry Circuit, died on the 9th instant, of inflammation on the Lungs. Brother G. was a zealous and successful laborer, and was instrumental in the conversion of scores of souls in Michigan. We had the pleasure of forming an acquaintance with him before he regularly entered the ministry. Further particulars are not furnished.

Rev. Geo. Clancy.—We are gratified to learn by private letter from this brother, of the improvement of his health, after a prolonged series of afflictions. We trust that he will now be enabled, for the remainder of the year, to pursue the duties of the District, and enjoy the pleasure of visiting the brethren in the various charges, and refreshing them with his presence, and his ministrations. By the by, we will not refrain from expressing our gratitude, that our brother in his travels, manifests an interest in behalf of our paper, by collecting and remitting considerably of its dues.

The Pledge.—Brother Hoagland gives in another column the names of those who signed the Anti-tobacco pledge, after the lecture of Brother Springer, at the last Muskingum Conference. We trust they will all remain firm. We have the pleasure of stating that we had previously obtained the signatures of fifty of our ministers and preachers, to the same pledge, chiefly in the Ohio District. We are glad that our brother is pursuing this good and needful reformatory work, in the interval of Conference. "Wherefore, laying aside all filthiness."

Godey's Lady's Book.—We have in hand the May number, quite illuminated with original engravings. Besides three steel plates, and a piece of Music, there are two designs of Model Cottages, and numerous illustrations of Ladies' Work, Head Dresses, Artificial Flowers, &c., just fixed up to please the ladies.

Then we are furnished also by the same publisher with the April number of each of his Reprints,—The London World of Fashion, and Blackwood's Ladies' Magazine. These neat and interesting works, are offered at a very low rate. Subscribers to the Ladies' Book, paying $3, receive that work, and a copy of either of the Reprints.

Mr. Godey announces also his intention to publish a "Lady's Dollar Newspaper." Address, Lewis A. Godey, Philadelphia.

General Assembly.—We learn by the "Cumberland Presbyterian," that the General Assembly of the denomination bearing that name, is to convene at Lebanon, Warren county, Ohio, on the third Tuesday (18th,) of May next.

Annual Conferences.—Bishop Hanby, of the church of the United brethren, announces in the Religious Telescope, the following appointments for the meeting of Western Conferences of that denomination:

Iowa Annual Conference,		August 26.
Illinois	" "	Sept. 9.
Wabash	" "	" 23.
St. Joseph's	"	Oct. 7.
Scioto	" "	" 28.

Accident at Columbus.—The Ohio State Journal states that during a false alarm of fire on the 19th instant, a lad named James W. Baker, in attempting to take hold of the rope attached to a Hose Carriage, was run over by the wheels of the carriage, and was supposed to be fatally injured.

Kidnapping.—We learn by the Pittsburgh Gazette, that quite an excitement occurred in that city on the 16th instant, occasioned by an attempt on the part of some persons from Winchester Va., to carry off a fugitive slave. These were, the master, Joseph Logan, and two officers, James Johnson, and Geo. Kramer. They had put up at the Monongahela House. The slave was decoyed to the third story of the Hotel, and there confronted by his master. When seized, his loud cries for relief were heard all over the immense establishment. Much alarm and excitement resulted. The colored population of the city becoming apprised of what was going on, a large body of them gathered around, to rescue the slave from the grasp of his "catchers." As these were making their egress, with their victim, at a private door of the Hotel, intending to convey him on board a steamer, about leaving the wharf, a rush was made, for the purpose of liberating the slave. He made his escape, and has not since been seen. It is said that his friends have sent him far beyond the reach of master or overseer. Afterwards, the master and his associates were arrested, under the recent kidnapping laws of the State, and the case was brought before the District Court, upon a writ of Habeas Corpus. Judge Lowrie, who presided, acquitted the defendants, on the ground "that there had been no unreasonable or riotous seizure, but that the disturbance had originated with the slave."

A Zanesville Conference.—Rev S. R. Brockunier proposes in the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, that a Zanesville Conference, (M. E. Church) be created out of parts of the Ohio and Pittsburgh Conferences, viz. Marietta, Zanesville, Steubenville, Barnesville and Cambridge Districts, and part of Mt. Union District.

Something New.—Great mortality has taken place among horses on the American Bottom west of Missouri, caused by a gnat or fly that stings them to death in a few hours. Men crossing the Bottom in teams, lose their horses before they complete the trip.

Cumberland Presb. Church.—We take the following passage from an editorial article in a late number of the 'Cumberland Presbyterian,' Uniontown, Pa., in explanation of the origin and peculiarities of that denomination.

She is a child of Providence, born in America, in the great valley of the West, and is the daughter of a most glorious and powerful revival of religion —at the opening of the present century. Opposition to the revival, also to the doctrine that there are no eternal reprobates, that Christ died not for a PART ONLY, but for ALL mankind,—that all DYING INFANTS are saved through Christ, and the sanctification of the Holy Spirit,—and that all men are left INEXCUSABLE by the influence of the Spirit, gave rise to the train of circumstances which resulted in the existence of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, separate from the general Presbyterian body. She was one of the first light-bearers that shone over the Southern and Western States and Territories. She gave vent to the river of Salvation which gladdens the hearts of thousand in the Mississippi Valley. She embraces in her doctrine and government the great and glorious principles of that system of sound doctrine taught in the Word of God. In theology she occupies the true conservative ground, to which there is an evident tendency, both among Calvinists and Arminians. Is not the doctrinal basis of the World's Convention an indication of this? not to refer to others, manifest in the tone of religious journals, and publications devoted to theological science. She has resisted ecclesiastical tyranny and broke down bigotry and formalism."

Planting of Methodism in Boston.—Letter from Rev. Joseph Snelling.—In a late number of the Boston Olive Branch, is found a letter from Rev. Joseph Snelling, which we copy below, giving account of the origin of the Methodist Church in Boston. Mr. S. is a member of the Boston Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, and one of the most aged Methodist Ministers living.

From the Olive Branch.

Dear Brother: You requested me to give you an account of the members belonging to the Methodist society in Boston when I joined, which was in 1793. The male members, I think, were Samuel Burrell, E. Lewis, D. Lewis, A. Ingersoll, Uriah Tufts and Jacob Hawkigns. The female members were, Mrs. Burrell, Mrs. Lewis, Mrs. Ingersoll, Mrs. Tufts, Mrs. Waylan, Mrs. Dickey, Mrs. White, Mrs. Woodward, Miss Burrell, and Miss White. These are all that I can remember. We held our meetings for public worship over two years in a chamber before we had a meetinghouse. Our preachers were Bishop Asbury, Jesse Lee, Ezekiel Cooper, Amos G. Thompson, J. Hill, Evan Rogers, David P. Kendal, Christopher Spry, G. Cannon, G. Pickering, J. Harper and John Veneman. Notwithstanding our number in society was very small, we paid the rent of the chamber, the expenses of the lights, the preacher's board, his quarterage, &c.

The first band meeting that was held in Boston, Jacob Hawkings and myself established. The first tickets given out for love feast, Jacob Hawkings and myself had printed at our own expense. About that time we had considerable persecution. Sometimes stones would be thrown into the windows and come very near the preacher's head, and sometimes we were disturbed with their disagreeable noise, &c. But these things did not discourage us. The members of our little society were truly united in love; we were like one family united by the strongest ties. The church and congregation were daily increasing, and we found it necessary to devise means to build a meeting-house. Brother Lee collected money for us in Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York. A piece of land was immediately purchased at the north part of the town, and on the 28th of August, 1795, the corner stone was laid by the Rev. Jesse Lee. I was appointed one of the trustees to the house. After giving what I was able to give, Elijah Lewis and myself went round the town and collected in one day nearly a hundred dollars. Rev. John Harper from Ireland was at this time our stationed preacher. While he was in Boston he became acquainted with the Rev. Mr. Murray, the Universalist minister. As they both came from the same country, they were much attached to each other; Mr. Murray kindly offered his meeting-house for Mr. Harper to preach a charity sermon in to assist us. I understood when Mr. Murray appointed the meeting he said to his congregation, "My Father's children are coming here this evening; I wish you all to attend, and be sure that your pockets are not empty." Mr. Harper preached there that evening, and Mr Murray took a part in the exercises with him. We had a crowded house and a liberal contribution. Thus the Lord prospered us, and in a short time our house was finished. The Rev. George Pickering preached the dedication sermon, from Haggai ii. 19th, "From this day will I bless you." Our church and congregation continued to increase so that our meeting-house was generally well filled with attentive hearers.

Your brother in the Gospel,
JOSEPH SNELLING.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Staunton, Ohio, March 26, 1847.

Br. Bassett: There have been delightful meetings here since the commencement of this Conference year, and our last quarterly meeting at the Grove was truly refreshing. It progressed some four or five days. Several joined, who will doubtless prove faithful to the church, and to their God. I think I never shall forget our love-feast on Monday. We had an assortment, perhaps as many as four denominations. But many of us, with the poet could exclaim,

> The more comes in with a free good will,
> Makes the banquet sweeter still.

In the commencement of love-feast, one rose and told the people of his prospects beyond earth, and seemed to carry their minds away to a distant hill, where lay a babe of his affections, whilst he contemplated ere long a joyful meeting, far beyond the grave, with it and others already gone, and closed with a Savior's love, shed in his heart abroad. A sister, of the old church, whose heart was touched already with the sacred flame, next arose. She told us she would shout where she pleased, for where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. And indeed the saints, when they feel the spirit of their station, love each other so fervently, that it takes a great deal of rule to keep them apart. Four children, said she, are gone. Their bodies sleep in the cold earth. And whilst she felt for them a mother's love, and a mother's sorrow, joys that earth never gave, filled her breast, whilst she dwelt upon the glorious prospect of meeting them in that blessed clime of unfading spring, where pleasures never die. Those were sweet moments. It did seem that the church militant and the church triumphant were almost meeting in the Grove, and that departed saints, and angels did mix the throng though unperceived.

Since that time, a babe of three months old, has been snatched by death from me, and the companion of my youth. O, cruel death—three other babes, one by one, have been thus torn from us. But a glorious resurrection lies before. May we but faithful prove, and meet those kindred spirits that we love.

Conference Proceedings.

From the Methodist Protestant.

Philadelphia Conference.

Extracts from the Minutes of the first annual session of the Philadelphia Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, opened in the First M. P. Chapel, Philadelphia, on the seventeenth day of March, A. D. 1847.

Bro. John G. Wilson opened the Conference with religious services. (He was subsequently elected President for the ensuing year.) Bro. Edward W. David was elected Secretary.

Division of the District.—The committee appointed to prepare an expression of the sense of this Conference, on the subject indicated, submitted the following Report.

Whereas, the General Conference, held in Cincinnati, in May 1846, acting on the Bible principle of accommodation, in all things innocent and useful to the wants and wishes of the ministers and members of the churches in relation to, and for the furtherance of the work of our holy religion, changed the law of our confederacy in regard to Home Missions, set off the Philadelphia District, and authorised the organization of this Annual Conference; and whereas, it is deemed expedient by this body, because of the peculiarity of its origin and position, to make a distinct declaration of the course which it decides to pursue under the new law: Therefore,

Be it Resolved, 1. That the principle of accommodation stated in the preamble, as derived from the Bible, and acknowledged by the action of the General Conference, is in the judgement of this Annual Conference, one of the essential and distinctive principles of the government of the Methodist Protestant Church.

2. That when any thing is found to exist in the forms of this government inconsistent with this principle, it ought to be abolished, as alike unwise and unchristian.

3. That this principle is hereby avowed as the vital law of this Annual Conference—the design of organizing which requires that it be faithfully maintained and perpetuated.

4. That in the application of this principle to the division of the District into Circuits, Stations and Missions, the whole territory be regarded as hitherto "unoccupied;" and that the churches now represented in the Conference be registered and supplied in accordance with their present selection of position.

5. That such churches as may unite with the Conference hereafter, shall have the same privilege of selecting their position either as Circuits, Stations or Missions.

6. That the same regulations which govern Circuits and Stations, except the restrictive rule, be adopted for the "temporary government" of the Missions—the only difference between the two classes of appointments, consisting in this exception.

All of which is respectfully submitted, March 19, 1847. T. H. STOCKTON, Ch. of Com.

The above Report was accepted and adopted. Bro. John R. Nichols dissenting from the fourth resolution.

As the Committee of the Conference, the President, Bro. John G. Wilson, submitted the following plan of Appointments:

From the Methodist Protestant.

Iowa Conference.

Iowa City, March 1st. 1847.

By virtue of the action of the General conference of the M. P. Church held in Cincinnati in May, 1846, the following brethren, ministers and lay delegates in the Methodist Protestant Church in the territory of Iowa, met at the State House in Iowa City on the 13th day of October, 1846, for the purpose of organizing as an Annual Conference in the Methodist Protestant Church, viz:—Wm. Patterson, Geo. S. Pierson, Robert Miller, O. W. Kellogg and Alex. Colwell, ministers;—Preston J. Friend, Henry Nesmith and Enos Metcalf, delegates. Conference was organized by calling Bro. Wm. Patterson to the Chair, and P. J. Friend, Secretary, pro tem.

The Conference was then opened by reading a portion of Scripture and an address to the throne of Grace, by Rev. Wm. H. Collins, of the Illinois District. The Conference then proceeded to business—and on motion, a committee of two was appointed to examine vouchers in order to ascertain who were entitled to membership in this Conference; when it was ascertained by said committee that the following brethren were entitled to seats as members of the Iowa Annual Conference, viz: Wm. Patterson, Robt. Miller, Geo. S. Pierson, Wm. K. Talbot and Wm. K. Barnes as Elders; and Oliver W. Kellog and Alex. Colwell, Deacons; and Preston J. Friend, Dr. Enos Metcalf, Henry Nesmith and George Davison, Lay Delegates.

The following brethren were elected and ordained to Orders, viz: Bro. O. W. Kellogg and Alex. Colwell, as Elders; and Bro. Levi Free Deacon. The Conference progressed to its close in the spirit of harmony and brotherly love; and I humbly trust, that notwithstanding the smallness beginning, ere long we shall present a reble appearance both in respect to numbers dent; but above all, that as a Conference, we ossess a large share of vital piety.

e following is a list of appointments:

Ireland.

The contributions from America, we are reed to learn, have saved many of our suffering ow creatures in Ireland from death. These ntributions formed a prominent topic of news-per comment, as evidences of the benevolence America. During three days the Central Ref Committee of the Society of Friends in Dub-, received £9.000 (nearly $45,000) from herica, in cash, with accounts of large donations provisions on the way.
Ireland is literally inundated with breadstaffs
m America, and "the stars and stripes" flying the breeze in every port, excite general admi-
ion. Prices of food have been steadily falling weeks. Typhus fever is spreading through e country to an alarming extent. Many thou-nds of poor men, discharged from the public rks in the south, have laid down to die; in igo, the cruel lapdlords, instead of relieving em and giving them work on the land, are disssing them for rent. In other parts, however, le landlords are bestiring themselves—supplying ed, getting in the crops and giving promise of ficient preparations for abundant crops. The eather has been delightful. Mr. O'Connell has

The government journal (des Debats) recently larmed Parisian society by predictions of fam-rief panic on the Bourse, and prices of food have nce fallen. The bill granting four steamers to company to establish a line between Havre and New York, has passed the Chamber of Deputies nd is now before the Peers. General Dronot, one of Napoleon's favorites, died recently at the Russia & Poland.

Russia is reinforcing her troops in Poland.
She has near the frontiers of Galicia a movable orps of 12,000 men. The Emperor proposes a grand review of forces in Poland ere long.

Germany.

The Austrian government has sent letters to its minister at Washington, instructing him to aid Ex-President Tysoffski to get a living. The whole town of Egelsbach, in Hesse Damstadt, a population of fourteen hundred persons, requested permission to be allowed to emigrate to the United States.—Emigrants for America are pouring into Breme in thousands. Throughout all Germany preparations are making for emigrants to the States—indeed, some districts are threatened with complete depopulation.

The Zollverein, it is said, is about renewing negotiations for a treaty with the United States.
Prussia recommends to the Grand Diet a law granting more freedom to the press, and Bavaria and Wurtemberg concur. M. Tysoffski, late President of Cracow, left the country for the United States, that being the only condition on which his life was spared.

BE SOCIAL.—How different would be the aspect of human society, if all persons would throw aside some of the reserve they have, and be more open, frank and sociable than thay are now. In most instances now, when strangers meet there is a coldness and reserve that dampens the flow of good feeling and freezes up the affections of the heart. How we have been pained to see individuals thrown into each other's presence when the fountains of the heart were locked up, and no disposition manifested to let them loose by social conversation. A single word well timed and fitly spoken under such circumstances, would do more, to relieve individuals of their embarrassment than any thing else. But why should not every body so far forget conventional forms as to be sociable to strangers, when thrown into their presence? Americans are wanting in this respect.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION, directly connected with American interest in the Oregon Territory, is now being discussed in the Colonial Department of the British Government. By the Oregon Treaty, as our readers are aware, the United S. ceded to the Hudson Bay Company, and also to British subjects trading with them, the joint navigation of the Columbia river. This privilege, it is understood, cannot be enjoyed after the expiration of the existing charter of that company. It is now claimed that the charter has been annulled by a late and not generally known act of Parliament; and this claim is being urged with great force upon the British Government, by delegates in London representing the inhabitants of the British North American possessions. The delegates also charged the Hudson Bay Company with promoting vice and demoralization among the inhabitants. By encouraging the destruction of game and neglecting to foster agriculture, the Company threaten the extinction of the whole population; by importing ardent spirits, in violation of their charter, they foster all the evils of intemperance; and by demanding exorbitant prices for supplies, they have brought famine in many districts and promoted violence and crime. Granting that the charter does exist, the aborigines contend that, as independent tribes in alliance with Her Majesty, it cannot bind them, and they therefore demand, as a right the power of trading with whom they please, in defiance of the monopoly claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company. At last advises the Company had not replied to the manifesto of the delegation.—N. Y. Sun.

AEROLITES.—The Dubuque (Iowa) Republican speaks of the fall of aerolites in that neighborhood. In one instance; large stone, some six feet in diameter, resembling a mass of sulphur, in its descent went through a large tree, crushing it to atoms, and entered the earth to the depth of about twelve feet, traces of several smaller bodies of the same nature have been discovered in that vicinity and are creating alarm.

An attempt was made on Sunday night week to assassinate Alfred Soward, Esq., of Dover, Ky. While he was sitting in his bed reading, about 11 o'clock, some villain fired a gun loaded with four balls through his window. Three of the balls took effect and but little hopes were entertained of Mr. S's recovery.

The President and Directors of the Cleveland, Columbus and Cincinnati Rail Road Company, have given notice, that for the want of a sufficient amount of available means to construct enough of the Road to make it profitable, they have suspended all operations on the line, further than to preserve the organization of the Company and control of the charter.—Urbana Gazette.

Large sales of public lands are to be held in Iowa; at Dubuque, on the 12th of July, at Iowa city on the 19th July, and at Fairfield on the 29th July. Those who wish to go back in improvement a half century, may find a good opportunity to do so, by becoming purchasers at these sales.—Republic.

From the Ohio State Journal.

Slavery in Kentuky.

The good people of Kentucky are beginning to discuss the subject of slavery in a sensible way. A writer in the Frankfort Commonwealth, of the 13th inst., presents some interesting statistics, derived from the Reports of the Second Auditor, from the years 1841 to 1846, inclusive. From this showing it appears that the whole number of slaves in that State, were—

In 1846,	185,582
In 1841,	168,853
Increase in five years,	16,729

The value of these slaves, as derived from the same sources, was as follows:

In 1841,	$62,309,602
In 1846,	55,003,861
Decrease in valuation, In 5 years,	$7,305,741

Here is disclosed the important fact, that with an increase of near seventeen thousand slaves, there is at the same time a diminution in their aggregate valuation of more than seven millions and a quarter of dollars! After presenting the foregoing, and a variety of other kindred facts, the writer proceeds:

"It is plain from the above facts, that emigration from the counties that are esteemed the best for land, is very great; or that the domestic slave trade is very extensively carried on; or that Kentucky is not as healthy for negroes as it formerly was. One of these three things must be true. If it be owing to emigration from counties having the rich land, then slave labor is not profitable in those counties. If it be owing to the domestic slave trade, then slaves are decreasing in value in the State; for if there were a demand for them at home, they would not be taken out of the State. If it be owing to the unhealthiness of climate for them, what is the cause of it? Let not the fact be overlooked, that with an increase of 16,729 slaves, the total valuation of slaves in 1846, was $7,305.741 less than the valuation of the slaves in 1841 was. * * * * *

"But what do the Auditor's Reports state as to the valuation of the land? In 1846 it was valued at $116,785,553. In 1841, it was valued at $124,830,653, making the land worth in 1841, $8,045,110 more than it was in 1846. But it is not to be overlooked, that since 1841, there has been brought into valuation an addition of 1,199,399 acres of land to what was valued in 1841. The land averaged in 1841, at $7 21 per acre. In 1846 it was averaged at $6 31, less by 90 cents than in 1841. And what was the whole valuation of property, real and personal, in 1841, by the commissioners' books? It was $263,845 749. And what waa it in 1846? I was $242,772,250. Making a difference in favor of 1841, of $21,073,499. The foregoing is presented for reflection."

We are glad to see our brethren of Kentucky reasoning among themselves on this subject. The more they reason, the more fully will they become satisfied that "slave labor is not profitable."

THE MASSACRE OF CHRISTIANS, by that monster Bederkhan Bey, has been renewed with horible ferocity. A letter from Mosul, dated March 15th, 1847, says he had just beheaded a bishop and priest, and put several other christians to the most atrocious tortures. The Chaldeans were in hourly apprehensions of a massacre. Nothing has yet been done by the general government to suppress these apalling scenes. The Porte has flattered Bederkhan with presents, endeavoring thus to ensnare him; but the barbarous monster is too cunning, and now the Sultan promises to send 40,000 men to rescue those poor Christians who are yet alive.

COMMERCE IN MEXICO.—Every commercial port of any note in Mexico is now in the hands of the Americans, and with a reduced tariff, and by throwing open the ports to the world without serious restrictions, immense business must be done.

A Discovery.

About two miles from this village, on land known as the "Kerr tract," there is an ancient Mound, circular at the base—about 39 in diameter, rising ovally to a point, which is surmounted by an oaken stump probably originally 2 feet in diameter, which is almost totally decayed from age. A few days since, some boys dug into the mound, and nearly under the stump, at the depth of three feet, a skeleton was found, much decayed, but portions of it in a fair degree of preservation. Near the head were found 2 stone hatchets, an arrow head, a stone pipe, and far more singular—a lot of plates, apparently isinglass, which are covered with lines and hieroglyphics of different and beautiful colors. The colors and workmanship betoken a more advanced and entirely different state of the arts than has been heretofore discovered in the remains of Indian tribes. Some of the plates were destroyed, but there are fifteen preserved. They are circular oval in shape, and about 7 inches by 10 in size. A pipe bowl beautifully finished from stone. was also found. The bowl which is nearly round, rises from a base, on the bottom of which are the figures "1461." Measures are being taken, under the supervision of some of our most intelligent citizens, farther to explore this singular Mound. There is little doubt but that these plates contain the history of some former race that has inhabited this country, and we shall wait further discoveries with great curiosity.—Lower Sandusky Democrat.

IMPORTANT DECISION.—In the case of Pierpont, author, vs. Fowle, publisher, Judge Woodbury, at Boston, has decided that the sale of the copyright only extended its right to the copyright then existing. The publisher who at the end of the 14 years went on selling, is to be considered the mere agent of the author, and must account to him for all such sales.

A large fire in Petersham, Mass., last Thursday, as we learn from the Barre Gazette, all the buildings on the west side of the common—the button factory of Mr. Foster, cottage of Mr. Barr, store of Sibley & Co., Twitchell's tavern, Mr. Shumway's shop and another, dwelling and barns of Silas Foster, and most of the goods, stock and furniture in all the buildings.

Rev. D. D. Lore has been appointed by the Methodist Church a missionary to South America, to be located at Montevideo, in the place of the Rev. Mr. Norris, who is about to return home.

Mr. Alexander Rodgers, a daguerreotypist, fell dead in the street of New York on Monday. It is supposed that his death was superinduced by inhalation from the mercury bath which he is compelled to use in the practice of his art.—Balt. American.

Gen. TAYLOR's coat, vest and shirt, were cut away by a cannon ball, without giving him the slightest wound. He remarked, "Pretty close shooting, that," and the next moment, intent upon the battle, had evidently forgotten the almost miraculous escape.—Phil. North American.

SENTENCED.—John Doughty has been tried for killing a Choctaw Indian named Billy, and sentenced to be hung the 28th of this month. So the Indians are now getting justice.

MELANCHOLY.—The captain of the schr. Pilgrim arrived at Georgetown, D. C., states that on Friday night a ship bound to Baltimore, ran into & sunk a schooner of eleven persons on board, five of whom were ladies, including the captain's wife and all were lost but the captain. The ship kept on its course.

PLANK ROADS.—Two additional roads of Plank are constructing near Montreal; one three miles in length the other eleven, built at a cost of about $4000 a mile. Red pine rails are used. There are some plank roads in Canada which have been fifteen years in use and are in good order now.—They are great improvements in travelling. The Chambly plank road company have declared a dividend of $6,000 profit for the last year. The road cost $16000, and is ten miles long. The capital has been more than realized.

ACCIDENT.—John McGee, working in the quarries near the Suspension Bridge, Philadelphia, when charging a blast drill on Friday, too suddenly drew out the needle; the friction igniting, produced a discharge which took him up, tore off one leg, and sadly mutilated him. He suffered amputation, but he is hardly expected to survive.

BENEFIT OF SCIENCE.—On Thursday, Aug. G. Vail was arrested in Albany for some offence committed in Rochester. The telegraph notified his arrest; when Rochester replied "hold on to him." A few hours, the line again replied—"Let him go; we've examined witnesses—he's innocent." He took up his knapsack, bound for New York and the wars. But for the Telegraph, he must have been a prisoner several days.—N. Y. Sun.

The month of May with its Anniversaries will soon be upon us. The following is the order: Sunday evening, 9th May, the New York Bible Society. Mon. evening—Am. Seaman's Friend Society. Tuesday—A. M., American Anti-Slavery Society.—P. M., Am., and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society.—Evening, Colonization Society. Wednesday—A. M., American Tract Society.—P. M., Exhibition of the blind.—Evening American Home Missionary Society. Thurday—A. M., American Bible Society.—P. M., Exhibition of the Deaf and Dumb.—Evening, American Temperance Union. Friday—A. M., A. B. C. Foreign Missions.

POST OFFICE.—John M. Shinoly Esqr. has been appointed Postmaster at Astoria—not Astoria in Queen's County, but in Oregon. His commission will reach him in four or five months.—N. Y. Sun.

THE WOUNDED.—Gen. Taylor, in consideration of the gallantry exhibited by the first and 2nd Illinois regiments, has assigned to the wounded the largest and most spacious house in Saltillo with every necessary attendance. There is a large garden and promenade attached to it, and a fountain of pure water in front. It was confidently believed that no one would die, as the attendance and comforts they were receiving were equal to those of our best hospitals.

WISCONSIN.—After a great struggle in relation to the new constitution of Wisconsin, it appears to have been rejected by the people. One half the state has given a majority of 4,440 against it. The provisions against issuing paper money and several other stringent rules on banking and credit system generally made it unpopular. It also exempted a limited homestead from seizure and protected the property of married women. A new convention will now be called, but the delay may prevent that state being represented in the next Congress.

Socrates' golden rule for gaining a reputation.—The shortest, and safest, and best way is to try to be good in that thing in which you wish to appear good."

GREAT WESTERN RAIL ROAD, CANADA.—The work on the Road which was commenced, and suspended in consequence of the agitation of the Oregon question, is now resumed, and it is believed by persons familiar with the subject, that the amount subscribed, $6,000,000, and partly paid in, will far exceed the amount required to finish the work. The Niagara Bridge, the commencement of which has been prolonged for the want of the Queen's ratification of the charter on the Canada side, has been commenced, and the stock to the amount of $600,000 has been taken, which is supposed to be sufficient to complete the work. The next enterprise which is identified with the two former, is the completion of the Lockport and N. Falls Road to Rochester, the whole distance from Rochester to the Falls is 81 miles according to the surveys, 26 miles of which Road is built and in operation, and only a link of 55 miles remains unfinished, and about one half the stock for that portion of the Road has already been taken, say $400,000. When the western list is filled, it will be taken east where the balance will be filled up. When the Road is finished it will complete a chain of rail road from Boston to a point in Canada, opposite Detroit, Michigan, and when the Hudson or Harlem road is finished to Albany, it will make a line from N. Y. city to the same point via. Niagara Falls and through Upper Canada.—N. Y. Sun.

FIRING CANNON.—We scarcely open a paper without reading some accident to life and limb from firing cannon in honor of our victories. No person who has not had experience as an artillerist should ever attempt to load and fire off cannon. —N. Y. Sun.

LOVE AND LABOR.—Bishop Hall says Love and action do necessarily evince each other. True love cannot lurk unexpressed; it will be looking out at the eyes, creeping out at the mouth, breaking out at the finger's ends in some actions of dearness. Oh, Lord! in vain shall we profess to love thee, if we do nothing for thee!

PLACE AND PREPARATION.—If men were as anxious to be prepared to occupy high places as to get into them, how much better it would be for them, and for the world too!"

WAR NEWS.—The N. O. Picayune Extra, of the 14th inst., has Vera Cruz advices to the 16th inst. Alvarado was taken by the Navy without a fight, on the 4th. On the 5th, Col. Harney in command of the 2d dragoons, and a detatchment of Gen. Twigg's division, took possession of Antigua, fourteen miles from Vera Cruz, capturing one officer and eight Mexican lancers. The army move on the 17th in divisions for Jalapa, Gen. Twiggs leading the advance followed by Gen. Patterson with volunteers, and Gen. Worth in the rear with regulars. The army was in good health. Two ports, Tlacotalpan and Cosamoloapan, near Alvarado, on the inland waters, are said to have been captured. Com. Perry intends with his vessels to capture every town on the Gulf coast of Mexico. There are 100 American prisoners at the capitol, and about 20 deserters, the latter in most wretched plight.

A SAMPLE RUMSELLER.—A Clergyman of this village related the following anecdote last Sabbath, which several of his hearers afterwards fully confirmed. A lady, the wife of a poor inebriate, the mother of several half starved children, went to a grocery to sell some rags, that she might obtain the means of giving her children something to eat. The grocer weighed them out, and found they came to one shilling; then turning to his slate, and finding a charge of ninepence for three glasses of rum, against the husband, deducted it and paid her the remainder, three cents. She besought him to think of her half starved children, but she plead in vain. Talk about moral suasion with such men! They would take the coins from the eyes of a corpse, if there were three of them, to pay for the last glass which sent the victim to his early grave. —Stillwater Gazette.

Rules for the Ladies.

1. Marry not a profane man, because the depravity of his heart will corrupt your children and embitter your existence.

2. Marry not a gambler, a tipler, nor a haunter of taverns; because he that has no regard for himself will never have any regard for his wife.

3. Marry not a man who makes promises which he never performs; because you never can trust him.

4. Marry not a man whose actions do not correspond with his sentiments, because the passions have dethroned reason, and he is prepared to commit every crime to which an evil nature, unrestrained, can instigate him. The state of that man who regards not his own ideas of right and wrong, is deplorable, and the less you have to do with him the better.

5. Marry not a man who is in the habit of running after all the girls in the country; because the affections are continually wavering, and therefore can never be permanent.

6. Marry not a man who neglects his business; if he does so when he is single, he will do worse when he is married.—Bostonian.

New Subs. this week, 9. Dis. 3.

Br. A. L. Collings, at your request, we state that you are indebted for one volume, and eight numbers over, also that the pay would suit us better now than next fall, and that as the year is thus for overrun, we think you will not object to our sending on to the amount of half a volume more.

Br. P. Smith, we never discontinued your paper, but have to this day sent regularly to Wabash, Ia. Strange that neither you nor your P. M. ever informed us of your removal to Ky. Your present letter was our first information. The P. M. must have forwarded the numbers to you. We sympathise in your afflictions—and will with pleasure send now to Havilandsville, till further orders.

METHODIST PROTESTANT.—Send to Rev. J. B. Peat, Richwood, Union Co. Ohio, and credit him for one years' subscription.

Br. J. Ady, your letter is satisfactory. The paper is still sent, not doubting that you will remember us when convenient.

Br. J. B. Peat, will you please inform us in your next, whether post offices have recently been established at Essex, and Middletown, and by what names. Until then we take the liberty of sending the papers to Richwood for your new subscribers, trusting that you will see that they receive them.

A COUNTERFEIT.—Please send us no note of $2, Indiana S. Bank, unless it is known to be good. There is a base counterfeit in circulation, many specimens of which have been sent us, which we have in each case promptly returned to the sender.

Labor.

"Labor, labor!" sounds the anvil,
"Labor, labor, until death!"
And the fire, with voice discordant,
"Labor, endless labor!" saith,
While the bellows to the embers,
Speaks of labor in each breath.

"Labor, labor!" in the harvest,
Saith the whetting of the scythe,
And the mill-wheel tells of labor
Under waters falling blithe;
"Labor, labor!" groan the mill-stones,
To the hands that whirl and writhe!

And the woodman tells of labor,
In the echo-waking blows;
In the forest, in the cabin,
'Tis the dearest word he knows!
"Labor, labor!" saith the spirit,
And with labor comes repose.

"Labor!" saith the loaded wagon,
Moving towards the distant mart,
"Labor!" groans the heavy steamer,
As she cleaves the waves apart;
Beating like that iron engine,
"Labor, labor!" cries the heart!

Yes, the heart of man cries "labor!"
While it labors in the breast.
Hear the Ancient and Eternal,
In the Word which he hath blest,
Saying, "Six days thou shalt labor,
On the Seventh thou shalt rest!"

Then how beautiful at evening,
When the toilsome week is done,
To behold the blacksmith's embers
Fade together with the sun;
And to think the doors of labor
Are all closing up like one!

The Heart.

Oh! could we read the human heart,
Its strange mysterious depths explore,
What tongue could tell or pen impart
The riches of its hidden lore?

Safe from the world's distrustful eye,
What deep and burning feelings play,
Which e'en stern reason's power defy,
And wear the sands of life away!

Think not beneath a smiling brow,
To always find a joyful heart;
For wit's bright glow, and reason's flow,
Too often hide a cankering dart.

The bird with bruised and broken wing,
Oft tries to mount the air again,
Among its mates to gaily sing
Its last melodious dying strain.

The fire that lights a flashing eye,
May by a burning heart be fed,
Which in its anguish yearns to die,
While yet it seems to pleasure wed.

Oh! do not rashly judge the heart,
Though cold and vain it seems to be,
Nor rudely seek the veil to part,
That hides its deep, deep mystery.

NUMBER II.

Objections to close Communion.

MR. EDITOR, SIR: This is said to be an age of christian liberality, in which the different sects are endeavoring to draw the cords of christian fellowship more closely, and by various means, remove out of the way the obstructions which in the days of other years, have kept professing christians asunder. The many moral engines that are now in operation throughout the length & breadth of the civilized world, have had, and are still having, a tremendous influence in bringing about so desirable a state of things, spoken of by the prophet "when the watchman shall see eye to eye, and speak the same things." Among those great moral levers may be ranked the BIBLE SOCIETY, TRACT SOCIETY, the COLPORTEUR SYSTEM, SABBATH SCHOOL INSTITUTIONS, the EVANGELICAL UNION, with others of a less important character, Temperance Societies, Benevolent Societies bearing different appellations, all, and each of which are calculated to ameliorate human wretchedness, stir up the finer feelings of our nature, and cause mankind generally to view each other as one great brotherhood.

Liberality and Reform in the present day, is the great watchword, from Dan to Beersheba, and indeed so much is its influence felt, that even the Pope of Rome himself, in the midst of papal prejudice papal darkness and papal tyranny, is pursuing a course of reform and liberality, compared with the course pursued by his predecessors. When Rome has awoke up to the importance of reform, ought not every christian denomination in the world to enquire, what may be done by them, to bring about an Union of the great christian family, and ought not every thing Sectarian, to be expunged from creeds and disciplines? ought not the rules and formulas of every sect, to be carefully examined and re-examined? and where errors are found, the ecclesiastical courts by the power vested in them, should remove every thing offensive, and suffer no rules or regulations to remain but those that accord with God's word, and if the liberality of the age be in accordance with the genius of our holy religion, then all rules and by-laws should be framed agreeably to the extended views of christian brotherhood, which in this 19th century is pervading the bosoms of nearly all the sects of christendom. In looking over the divisions and sub-divisions that have rent the christian church asunder, I have discovered sir, a disposition on the part of secessions, or new organizations, to adopt in some good degree, in their church regulations a spirit of christian liberality. I do not mean this to apply to all the secessionists, or new organizations, but simply to give it a general application, with some few exceptions. There is no regulation in the various branches of the church with which I am better pleased, than that noble and liberal spirit which gives to all christians a hearty, free, and full invitation to the table of our common Lord, on the principles taught by a venerable apostle "let a man examine himself and so let him eat," and were I at this time seeking a home among the churches of our land, I should never think of giving my name and influence to any denomination, that even squinted towards a close communion, as do the different sects of Anabaptists, as does the METHODIST E. CHURCH, and as does her youngest daughter the Wesleyan church of these United States. The anabaptists make immersion the terms—the Wesleyans make ablution the terms, and the Methodist Episcopal Church has decreed, "that no person not a member of our church, shall be admitted to the communion without examination and some token given by an elder or deacon." And again, "no person shall be admitted to the Lord's supper among us, who is guilty of any practice for which we would exclude a member of our church" page 75 last edition M. E. book of discipline. Now sir, I maintain this is as much a close communion church, as either of the above named denominations. For whilst the one holds up dipping to be the sine qua non—the other abolitionism, the latter as absolutely declares that the being guilty of any practice, for which a member of the church may be excluded, shall be sufficient to prevent any person from access to the communion in that body. Now sir, the grand enquiry, is, what will exclude a member from the M. E. Church, in reply, I aver, it is not necessary, he, or she, be a swearer, a liar, a Sabbath breaker, a drunkard, or unchaste, or an unclean person, a gambler, or an outbreaking sinner of any kind, but it simply requires, a wilful neglect of attending a prudential means of grace, viz. class meeting, page 85. "LET THE PREACHER SHEW that they are excluded for a breach of our rules and not for immoral conduct," hence sir any person in or out of the church wilfully neglecting class meeting, cannot according to discipline be a communicant. Class meeting attendance then is the term of communion, it is no use to try to shift out of it, what is written is written. Oh, the itinerant system of operation as praticed by the Methodist Episcopal Church. I cannot see the propriety of the inquisitorial court of examination spoken off in the discipline, unless it be to enquire if applicants to the communion table attend class meeting, the people and preachers generally being strangers to each other, little opportunity can be afforded to become acquainted with the moral character of those who may happen to ask for a token, and if the applicants intend to practice deception, no enquiry can remedy the case, and how dreadful would be the result, if in exercising a discretionary power, in distributing what the book calls tokens, we should refuse to admit to the table of the Lord one of the lambs of the Saviour, then indeed will Christ say "I was an hungred and ye fed me not" "and inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of these little ones ye did it not unto me. A course of examination, and refusal, may offend one of these little ones, the Saviour says "it were better that a mill stone were hung about your neck, and you cast into the depth of the sea, than that you offend one of these little ones." I rejoice however, how much so ever inconsistency there may be in the Methodist Episcopal Church, between law, and practice, that in the present day this anti-scriptural rule is in the general, obsolete. But why let it stand on the statute book? why not enact that it is hereby repealed? why place the ministers of the church in such an awkwaard predicament, as to make their practice violate their law? How can an honest minister of Christ, first, vow to maintain the disciple, an then with that book in hand, at the table of the Lord, violate one of its standing statutes; by extending to christians of all denominations, and invitation to the communion, without examination, or token, and without perhaps ever having attended a class meeting. In order to keep pace with the philanthropy of the age, this church North and South, should meet in General Conference, and blot out the second and third items in section 23, page 75, and let nothing be found but item first which gives the privilege to communicants to receive the Lord's supper either sitting, standing, or kneeling, and then the invitation given in the sacramental service, (in the opinion of your correspondent,) would be all sufficient, page 96. Ye that do truly and earnestly repent of your sins, and are in love and charity with your neighbors, and intend to lead a new life, following the commandments of God, and walking from henceforth in his holy ways, draw near with faith, and take this holy sacrament to your comfort, and make your humble confession to Almighty God, (then the discipline says,) meekly kneeling on your knees. This is a contradiction to the first item, which gives the privilege of posture and instead of reading meekly kneeling on your knees (to make it consistent it should read,) meekly standing, sitting, or kneeling on your knees. Again sir, I am opposed to that priestly domination that seems to manifest itself in calling upon all the ministers present to first communicate, and then the laity, no such distinctions are found in the scriptures; it smells of popery, and tastes of priestcraft, and is intended to keep up a kind of lordly distinction, between ministers, and members, forgetting that "we are all brethren one of another," and "the servant is not greater than his master," and he the Saviour of the world hath said, "it is enough that the servant be as his Lord." The Saviour and his disciples eat at the same stable, partook of the passover together, and eat the Lord's supper together, for in the taking the wine the Saviour says, I will henceforth drink it no more, till I drink it new in my Father's Kingdom. And this con-substantiation, that I find in the prayer of consecration, must be attended to in my next, but you will perceive my sheet is full.

Mr. Editor, I detest this narrow minded, petty, pitiful spirit, that either in theory or practice cries out, "the temple of Lord are we" to the exclusion of all others. I hope ever to be found among the number of those who plead for equal and Mutual Rights in church and in State, I hope ever to improve, by improvements, and I hope ever to be able and willing to say (non essentials aside) "if thy heart be right with my heart, as my heart is right with thy heart, come up into the chariot" and I hope ever to subscribe myself,

Yours affectionately, PAUL PRY.

Resolution of the Quar. Conference of Miami Circuit.

Resolved, That all white members of the Meth. Protestant Church, ought to have equal rights and privileges.

2. That as the ratio of representation to the General Conference is made up of white and colored, and these, in the South, mostly slaves, who have no voice in the matter, therefore, we feel that we have not equal rights with our white brethren of the South.

3. That the Ohio Annual Conference ought to instruct its Delegates to the next Gen. Con. to have mutual rights extended to their brethren of the North.

4. That the Ohio Annual Conference be requested to correspond with the conferences in the free states, that they may send a united petition to the General Conference for redress, and also to determine what ought to be done in case that body grants us none.

5. We declare to all men that we love the general principles and Discipline of the Methodist Protestant Church, but that we neither can nor will agree to be less than our white brethren of the South. God has stamped the image of men upon us and we will maintain it.

6. That our Delegate be requested to present these resolutions to the next Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, and enforce the subject with his vote and influence.

7. That these resolutions be signed by the Chairman and secretary, and a copy be sent to the Editor of the Western Recorder for publication.

"The Great Iron Wheel."

We invite every man who loves religious and civil liberty, to examine the Great Iron Wheel.

In the 18 No. of the Methodist Episcopalian, there is an article on "the declension of religion" in some of the circuits, in which the writer says:

"One of our ministers, [now no more,] whose bright genius had happily demonstrated the applicability of our system to the objects of good intended by it, has told us, in his illustration, 'that the entire movement depends upon keeping the great iron wheel of itinerancy constantly and rapidly rolling round,' and in making the application of the figure to American Methodism, he says: 'Let us carefully note the admirable and astounding movements of this wonderful machine.—You will perceive there are 'wheels within wheels.'

1st. There is a great outer wheel of episcopacy, which accomplishes its entire revolution once in four years. To this are attached twenty-eight smaller wheels, styled annual conferences, moving round once a year; to those are attached 100 wheels, designated presiding elders, moving twelve hundred other wheels, termed quarterly conferences, every three months—to these are attached four thousand wheels, styled travelling preachers moving round once a month, and communicating motion to thirty thousand wheels, called class-leaders, moving round once a week, and who, in turn, being attached to between seven and eight hundred thousand wheels, called members, give a sufficient impulse to whril them around every day. What a machine is this?"

Truly, "what a machine is this!" We say to every one, "Let us carefully note the admirable and astounding movements of this wonderful machine!" How potent for its good—if controlled by angels! How omnipotent for evil—if turned by men!—Why, in essential character, it is the very system of the Jesuits of Rome! It is, in principle a crushing military despotism. It is astounding! It is astounding, that any set of men, after the American revolution, should have dared to fabricate, and set in motion, this great Iron Wheel of the Itinerancy! Just look at it, and you see it is a perfect system of passive obedience and non-resistance. Every smaller wheel being "atached" to the wheel next in power above it, and the whole moving in absolute control of the Great Outer of Episcopacy. The reflecting man must see, at a glance, that all real liberty of thought and action is destroyed, as truly by this system, as by the ecclesiastical system of Rome—as by the drill of an army, as by any despotism upon the face of the earth.

But, it may be said, we must not press too far a mere "illustration"—for, that the figure of the Great Iron Wheel properly explained, will not look so bad. Well. Let us see.

In may, 1844, the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, met in the City of New York, Bishop Andrew was suspended from the exercise of his functions, by the Conference. On the resolution of suspension, Mr. Hamline of Ohio, made a speech which had, perhaps, much weight in deciding the mind of the Conference, as to its authority in the case, Mr. Hamline was made a Bishop, in part, probably, for this speech. It certainly deserved the mitre, as our readers will acknowledge.

Mr. Hamline argued, that the General Conference had the power to suspend the Bishop, in a summary manner, without trial—because, according to the genius of Methodist system, every officer, under the Bishop, could be thus suspended, or removed from office. He affirmed; that the Class Leader could be removed by the Itinerant Pastor—the Itinerant Pastor by the Presiding Elder or Bishop, the Presiding Elder by the Bishop, at any time during the interval of Conference. Mr. Hmline summed up his evidence by saying, that the Methodsst system of removal or suspension was "peculiar."

First. That suspension, removal, or deposition from office, in the Methodist Episcopal Church is "summary." Without accusation, trial or formal sentence"—"Ministerial, not judicial."

Secondly. "It is for no crime, generally for no misdemeanor, but for being unacceptable."

Thirdly. That "most of the removals are by a sole agent, namely, by a Bishop, a Preacher whose will is omnipitent in the premises."

Fourthly. That 'the removing officer is not legally obliged to assign any cause for deposition. If he do so, it is through courtesy, and not of right.'

Fifth. That "the deposed officer has no appeal"—that "if indiscreetly or unnecessarily removed, he must submit; for there is no tribunal authority to cure the error, or rectify the wrong."

This system, Mr. Hamline acknowledges, is one of surpassing energy, and centralizing of power—and he pronounces it "worthy of all eulogy!"

There is the system—from the lips of a Methodist preacher—now a Methodist Bishop! Look at it, ye sober and reflecting lovers of religious liberty, and civil too. Look at it, ye members of the Methodist Church. Look at it. What! A system "worthy of all eulogy!" What say you, Genius of America? She answers, "The Methodist system is death to all the institutions for which Washington fought and freedom died!" What says the Gospel? The Gospel tells us, "The Metho. system is Anti-Christ. For it is the very identical priestly power which has crushed and trodden under foot the liberty wherewith Christ doth make free, in every age of the world!"—Worthy of all eulogy! Look at it—eight hundred thousand members, attached to thirty thousand class-leaders, and every one of these thirty thousand class-leaders holding his office at the mere discretion of some one of four thousand travelling Pastors, and every one of four thousand itinerant Pastors, moving in his circuit, at the omnipotent will of some one of a hundred Presiding Elders,—and every one of these hundred Presiding Elders holding his station at the mere pleasure of some one of a half dozen Bishops;—and when summarily removed from his office, none may ask the reason why, nor the despot the reason give! And this is the system, lauded by those who wield it, as "worthy of all eulogy!" This is said in the United States—and American freemen—not foreign Roman Catholics, tolerate, aye, submit to the usurpation.

Will it be said, in reply to these remarks, that the General Conference was divided on the resolution advocated by Mr. Hamline! And that the Methodist Episcopal Church South, do not sanction the views of Mr. Hamline? But we will not have dust cast in our eyes. Those who now constitute the Methodist Church South, denied the applicability of Mr. Hamline's summary process to the Bishops, on the part of the General Conference, but admitted, [so far as we understand,] the correctness of Mr. Hamline's interpretation of their Discipline, as to all the officers below the Bishops. But let us press this point a little farther, we will ask some questions.

1. Mr. Hamline and the General Conference say, that removal from office in the Methodist Church is "peculiar." Will the Editor of the Methodist Episcopalian deny it?

2. Mr. Hamline and the General Conference say, it is "summary"—"without accusation, trial, or sentence—ministerial, not judicial." Will the Episcopalian deny it?

3. Mr. Hamline and the General Conference say, "removals are for no crime, generally for no misdemeanor, but for being unacceptable."—Will the Episcopalian deny it?

4. Mr. Hamline and the General Conference say, that "most removals are by a sole agent, namely, a Bishop or Preacher, whose will is omnipotent in the premises." Will the Episcopalian deny it?

5. Mr. Hamline and the General Conference say, that "the removing officer is not legally obliged to assign any cause for deposing. If he do so, it is through courtesy, and not of right." Will the Episcopalian deny it?

6. Mr. Hamline and the General Conference say, that "the deposed officer has no appeal"—that if indiscreetly or unnecessarily removed, he must submit; for there is no tribunal authorized to cure the error, or rectify the wrong." Will the Episcopalian deny it?

Now we do not care how the Editor of the Episcopalian decides. If he denies the construction put upon the Methodist Discipline, by Mr. Hamline and the General Conference, we may still be allowed to believe, that Mr. Hamline and the Conference understood the Methodist Discipline better than Rev. S. Patton. But if the Episcopalian admits the Discipline of the Methodist Church to be just what Mr. Hamline and the Conference say it is, then will Mr. Patton tell the people of East Tennessee whether he holds that that system of despotism is 'worthy of all eulogy?' And, will he then favor us with a definition and illustration of Russian, Turkish and Chinese despotism, or will he tell us where in any army on earth, there is any thing akin to this irresponsible power weilded in the Methodist Episcopal Church? Lastly. Will Mr. Patton tell us if the people of the Methodist Church, according to the system, [we thank God the system does not work perfectly, because it is in free America,]—will he tell us if the people, as recognized by the system—the people—the members, whirled by the Great Iron Wheel, are not the merest puppets—moving round "every day" under the whirl of the class-leaders—who are whirled around by the travelling Preachers—who are whirled around by the Presiding Elders—who are whirled around by the Bishops—who are whirled around by the General Conference? Will Mr. P. tell us, if the wheel turned at proper speed, and all the parts were working right, whether these eight hundred thousand members might not be made to whirl around exactly alike—even dressed to order in stiff collars on one side, and dove colored bonnets without ribbons on the other—doing identically the same thing, and at the same time, in every place where the wheel moved, from the St. Johns to the Rio Grande.

FRED. A. ROSS.

Danger of Premature Burials.

In New Ipswich, N. H., a girl about eleven years of age, named Clarissa Fox, who had been for a time in declining health, suddenly became worse, and died, to all appearance. The day following, at about the same hour in which her decease took place, a faint color was seen to tinge her cheek. This led to efforts to procure a reanimation.—Day after day passed. Every means was used that could be devised for the purpose—cold baths, warm friction, blood-letting, blistering, &c. Food was administered in enemas, as were also medicines calculated to act powerfully upon the system, but not the least apparent effect was produced. No manifestation of life appeared, except in the daily return of that faint tinge of color upon the cheek; and this regularly appeared at a certain period in every day. My father visited the child on the twenty-ninth day after she went into this state. Her appearance was in every respect that of a corpse. Of course, there was no decomposition, but there was every other demonstration of death. Several days later—my mother thinks four or five, which would extend the time to the thirty-third or thirty-fourth day—at the usual period of the return of slight color to her cheek, the girl revived, and was restored to consciousness and speech. The chain in which she had been so long bound was broken. But there was not sufficient vigor remaining in the system, for permanent recovery. Nature was exhausted. She did not appear to have been conscious of the lapse of time, or of her late condition, but said she was very sick and should die—that she was willing to die, and then expired.

I have given names and sources of information in the above narration, because of the seeming incredibility of the story demands it. I suppose the event occurred in 1801 or 1802, as my father, I have been told, removed from the town in 1803. Much earlier than that, my sister would not have been old enough to recollect the circumstance.

The fact of the great length during which this girl lay apparently dead, should be a warning never to yield up a subject for burial, so long as the least indication of life remains, and will stimulate friends to the persevering use of means while such indications exist, however faint. The restoration of Rev. William Tennant to life and health, after he had been apparently dead three or four days, and his friends had been more than once convened for his funeral, is a well known fact. Even his own brother was so convinced that he was dead, that he became impatient at what he thought the folly of the physician in his pertinacious attempts to restore animation.

The following account of a practice which to some extent obtains in Germany, may furnish useful hints in this country.

"In order to guard against premature interments, there is attached to most of the cemeteries in Germany, a hall, where the dead remain some time before being committed to the ground. In this hall, the body, neatly attired, is laid upon a couch—before the lips is placed a mirror, which the slightest breath would cloud, and between the fingers a string, which on the slightest movement causes a bell in the department of the keeper to ring. This hall is visited night and day, hourly, by vigilant inspectors, and it is stated that not a year passes that the bell is not rung by one of the supposed corpses. Similar precautions should be adopted in every burial place in America. Indisputable facts conclusively indicate their necessity.

J. B. GOUGH.—TOUCHING INCIDENT.—A friend recently sent me a scrap containing a little incident connected with his early history as related by himself, which interested me exceedingly, showing, as I think it does, that the power he possesses over the human mind may be attributed in a great measure to the early cultivation of some of the best sympathies of our nature.

"During my father's absence in the wars, my mother's circumstances were very straightened, although in addition to school-keeping, she worked industriously at making a kind of lace then very fashionable, and in the manufacture of which article she greatly excelled. On one occasion, when our necessities absolutely required extra exertion, she took her basket of work and travelled eight and a half weary miles to the town of Dover. Arrived there foot-sore and heart-weary, she threaded the streets and lanes with her lace, seeking for customers, but not one did she find; and after reluctantly abandoning the pursuit, she once more turned her face towards her home—a home desolate indeed. Painful, bitterly painful were my mothers reflections as she drew near her door, and when she rested her dreadfully tired frame, she had nothing in the house with which to recruit her strength. During her absence a gentleman had sent for me to the library and was so pleased with my reading that he made me a present of five shillings; and Mr. Purday in addition gave me sixpence. O! how rich I was. Never had I possessed so vast an amount of money before, and all imaginable modes of spending it flited before my fancy. I went to play with some other boys until my mother's return from Dover; and soon afterwards on entering our house I found her sitting in her chair bathed in tears. I asked her what was the matter, when she drew me close to her and looking in my face with a mournful expression which I never shall forget, informed me that all her weary journey had been fruitless—she had sold nothing. O! with what joy I drew the crown-piece and the sixpence from my pocket and placed them in her hand; and with what delightful feelings we knelt down, whilst she poured out her heart in thankfulness to God for the relief so seasonably provided. My mother gave me a half penny for myself, and I felt far happier then than I did when I received the shining silver crown-piece; it was all my own to do as I liked with—to keep or spend. What an inestimable privilege! I can in all sincerity say, that never have I received money since then, which has afforded me such solid satisfaction; and some of my most pleasant reminiscences are circumstances connected with that boyish incident.

MARRYING IN NEW YORK.—The New York Tribune thinks probably there is no place on this continent where persons wish to get married, may be done for with greater expedition, or at a cheaper rate, than in that city. A Baptist clergyman, a few days since, had a call for his professional assistance in that line. The juvenile aspirants were soon made one flesh by the declaration of the parson, according to the Scripture, when the groom, with a satisfied air, told his reverence he would call in a day or two and settle. Now our minister was not one of the green ones, and having been gammoned in this way before, he determined not to let off the happy pair so easy; so he told his swain he would have his certificate ready when he called. Hereupon the newly married, putting his hand into his breeches pocket, exclaimed, 'I guess I may as well pay now.' So the certificate was speedily filled and handed over, and the clergyman received in exchange a small parcel wrapped carefully in a piece of paper which on examination after they had retired, was found to contain the immense sum of four cents!

DROPSY IN THE CHEST.—The Flushing Journal says that a lady in that town cured herself of a dropsy in the chest by using the root of the garden parsley. A few cleaned roots were boiled in a quart of water, until it was diminished to a pint. Repeatedly during the day a small quantity was taken, mixed with a portion of gin, and every symptom disappeared. After a few doses the gin was omitted and the decoction only used. The Journal vouches for the truth of this case.

Those who are most experienced in the cultivation of the sun-flower are sanguine that with a proper soil and proper cultivation, it is more profitable than wheat or corn. The seeds are more oleaginous than those of the flax plant, and combine the qualities for table use of the best olive oil; for burning of the best sperm, without its smoke; and for painting, it is said by painters who have used it, to be superior to linseed, as it is more rapid in drying, equally easy in spreading, and without forming a much denser coat.

The man who intends to regulate his life by set rules, will find before he has traveled far along its path that there are but few rules, which are not changed by circumstances or persons. We like to see a man, not hedged in by rules, but striving as he goes along, to give all his neighbors their share of the pathway. There is room enough for all, and the true way to go easy, is to remember the "Golden Rule," the only rule which will not admit of an exception.

NIAGARA SUSPENSION BRIDGE—A gentleman just from the Falls states that the work is going rapidly on, and says that the early completion of the Great Western Railroad, and the extension of the Lockport road to Rochester, will speedily follow. The bridge will connect the two Roads and will form one of the most important Railroad communications in this country.—N. Y. Sun.

EXCELLENT.—An eastern paper, in an article on the subjet of perseverance and industry, says:

A few years ago, Luther Severance, Horace Greely and James Harper, were bringing water by the pail full to wash type in a printing office; they were knocked about by the older boys. But they did not sit down and weep, and declare they would run away from their employers. No—they stuck to the trade year after year, till they became of age. Where are they now?—Severance is in Congress, Greely is editor of the New York Tribune, one of the leading political papers of the day, and Harper is at the head of the largest publishing establishment in America, and was elected Mayor of the city of New York one year ago by an overwhelming majority.—So much for energy and industry.

Every page of t work gives evidence of a desire to present the laws of sociation distinctly & clearly, so as to enable the learner establish such relations between things, events, &c., will aid the memory. We commend the book to teache and all interested in this important subject.'—N. Teachers' Advocate.

'The art of improving the memory is surely a very i portant one, and whoever contributes any thing to furth this end, certainly renders an important service to the su lic. Mr Johnson, we believe, has succeeded in bringi his system of mnemonics into such a practicable form, will render it an essential aid to all who do not natural have a great power of memory.'—Ch. Witness

'This is a treatise on artificial memory prepared for t use of schools. The subject is a curious one, and wort of attention.'—Boston Recorder.

'This system of mnemonics, being the first work of t kind ever prepared for the use of schools, and being arranged and simplified that any one of ordinary capac ties may easily acquire a knowledge of its principles, certainly worthy of examination and study. It is m emphatically an aid to the memory, and as such, is w adapted to common school instruction. We heart commend it to public notice, while we hope that M Johnson will receive the reward due to his industry a perseverance by seeing this work extensively introduc into our schools, public and private.'—Tem. Standard.

'The author promises to endow his pupils with an i finite faculty of memory. If he can do it without t much trouble on the part of the recipients, he will do good thing, and as far as we can judge, he seems likely t accomplish it. While his system is much more simp than any we have before examined, it contains a gre deal more. Moreover, it makes the thing a matter practical education, within the reach of all.'—Chronotype

'There are minds of a certain class that are wont to interested in mnemonics, and we doubt not that such m find valuable assistance in a work of this kind.—N. E. P ritan.

'The book, although designed and adapted to the use schools, is nevertheless worthy the attention of all perso who wish to assist or strengthen memory.'—N. E. Was ingtonian.

'A very ingenious and useful book, designed to shorte the labor of those studies which require the exercise of th memory, by a system of memorizing.'—Reading Gazett Pa.

We feel no hesitation in recommending this work to th deliberate attention of teachers, and the guardians o youth. We learn that it is received into several of th schools in Boston, and used as an auxiliary help to th studies now pursued by the pupils.'—Boston Courier.

'We noticed the first edition of this book a short tim since, and in addition to what we then said, will only sa now, that it is prepared by one who has paid great atten tion to the subject, and who has been employed to teach his system by some of our most experienced teacher and wisest men.'—Ch. Register.

'We have given the work a partial examination, suffi cient to become convinced that the subject is one of impor tance.'—Ch. Watchman.

The Memoria Technica is now studied in some of ou best schools; and the system taught in it appears to b much approved by those who have made trial of it.'— Evening Traveller.

The work contains a vast amount of important fact and useful information; which, aside from its value as system of instruction, render it, as has been justly said b many who have examined it, well worth the price of th work as a mere book of reference. Published by

Rev. Ezekiel Cooper.

Mr. Editor: For several weeks past, I have casionally seen in the public papers, secular and clesiastical, an account of the death of the Rev. kiel Cooper, late a minister of the Methodist iscopal Church. In announcing the death of s gentleman, the papers have not failed to present, a very prominent manner, two particulars in his e, namely, the length of time he had been in e ministry, and the great amount of wealth he d accumulated in that time. And now, in addion to these two very remarkable and incontroertible facts, you have copied into your paper of 1st instant, from the Delaware Republican, Memoir of Rev. Ezekiel Cooper, by Rev. Dr. J. nnady, in which Mr. Cooper is set forth as one the most remarkable men of the age. Hear at Dr. Kennady says: "Mr. Cooper was a man superior attainments, having been always a dilent student, and possessing a mind of unusual gor in its grasp, and great aptitude in its appreension. His ministrations placed him, during the g day of his more active labors, among the ghtest lights of the American pulpit; and that, , when such men as Doctors Dwight, Mason, ilson, Staughton, Milledollar, Bedelles, and oths, were moulding the taste for pulpit oratory, on principles truly chaste and strong. Amid h lights Cooper stood admitted by public avow- to be "not a whit behind the chiefest." Again says:—"He was a perfect Encyclopedia, and uld deservedly rank with those most remarka- men of our country, Ex-President Adams and v. Dr. Nott."

In presenting this communication to the public e, it is not my purpose to detract aught from e fame of Mr. Cooper as a plain and useful minr in his day, though I have never heard of any traordinary revivals under his ministrations;— to give a check to the disgusting practice of logising ministers, whether living or dead, which vails to a great extent, at the present time, with considerate writers. Now the first question ich presents itself to my mind in reading this Memoir," is this:—Who is this Rev. Dr. J. Kenly, and is he a competent person to pronounce ch an eulogium? Has he been acquainted with se Rev. gentlemen with whom he compares r. Cooper? If he has not been acquainted with the parties, or heard them preach, he has writ- rashly in making the comparison. If he has, writer of this article differs widely in opinion m Dr. Kennady: for it so happens, that he has g known Mr. Cooper, and has often heard him ach. He has also known the greater number those with whom he has been compared, and heard them preach; and in "pulpit oratory," thinks Mr. Cooper was far behind them all.— w could it be otherwise? Mr. Cooper was a in—a very plain—English scholar. His schooly days were before, or in, the time of the revoonary war, when it was exceedingly difficult btain any thing beyond the rudiments of an glish education: and at the age of twenty-one entered into the itinerant connexion, in which, g rides and frequent labors precluded study and use of books. That he had a strong mind, re is no doubt; but there have been hundreds ong the travelling preachers of the Methodist iscopal Church who possessed as "vigorous" a nd as he did, who have passed to their graves hout any posthumous fulsome record to emblaheir names. But as I have ventured to differ m Dr. Kennady as it regards the literary attainnts of Mr. Cooper, it is proper that I should mit something to justify my opinion; and as Mr. oper never left any work or works behind him, t I have heard of, except his sermon on the th of Mr. Asbury, I shall be obliged to give an ract from that work, that thereby the reader y perceive how great were his powers of "pulratory." The text was, "Thou hast fully own my doctrine, manner of life, purpose, faith, g-suffering, charity, & my patience. Patience, hat grace or principle, whereby the people of d, endure or sustain trials, temptations, injuries, secutions, privations, and afflictions; and, that h submission to the will of God, in meekness, signation, tranquility of mind, and sweet compoe, and quietude of spirit; enabling them, with ntentment, and fortitude, steadily to persevere, ntinue, and hold out in well-doing; and with erfulness to pursue their calling, their labor and ir duties; and, enduring their fatigues & hardps, without murmuring, complaining, fretting, fainting in their minds, and by which, they mbly and calmly wait, in earnest expectation d confidence, for the salvation of God and eterlife. (p 176) Now, reader, you have a fair speen of Mr. Cooper's 'oratory,' which has caushim to be ranked "among the brightest lights of American pulpit." It was well remarked by Johnson, "some men's greatness is of a nega character, they are great because those about em are little."

It is not however to prove that Mr. Cooper has been overrated by Dr. Kennady that I have taken up my pen to trouble you; but to solicit information from the Doctor, or some of Mr. Cooper's friends upon a matter, that has staggered my credulity, as much, if not more than any thing has done in fifty years. And as the Doctor seems to have been well acquainted with Mr. Cooper, and conversant with his life, his labors, and his habits, it will be doing the reputation of the deceased nothing more than justice, to throw some light on the manner by which he acquired his great wealth. There are two reasons for this: First, The public mind has, for half a century and upwards, been impressed with the opinion, that a Methodist Preacher could not make, or save money, by preaching. This declaration has been reiterated, by the itinerants and others, thousands of times; and now, that the contrary has been published through the length and breadth of the land, the declaration of Methodist preachers is liable to be questioned, and their motives for travelling impugned on account of Mr. Cooper's enormous wealth. The account of his wealth I found taken from the Philadelphia Ledger, in the following words:—"The Rev. Ezekiel Cooper's Will. This will was proved before the Register on Friday. It is dated January 19th, 1847. It is entirely in the handwriting of the decedent, is closely written, and covers nine pages of large medium paper." And after enumerating several bequests, the account closes thus: "It is supposed that the value of the estate is from $150,000 to $200,000."

A second reason is found in the peculiarities of his case. 1. Mr. Cooper, it is presumed, was poor, or at least, was not rich, when he entered into the itinerant connexion: for I believe it may be safely affirmed, that there is no instance of a young man, the son of wealthy parents, entering into the ranks of travelling preachers in those early days of Methodism. 2. If he was poor, he did not inherit a vast estate upon the death of his parents: nor have I ever heard that any wealth was bequeathed to him by rich relatives. He commenced travelling when he was about 21 years of age; of course up to that time he had no opportunity of making money for himself. 4. After he became an itinerant, the nature of his calling prevented him from devoting any portion of his time to secular pursuits: for he was incessantly employed as a travelling preacher up to 1813, when he located. 5. When he commenced travelling, the allowance for an unmarried travelling preacher was only sixty-four dollars per annum. He could not receive in quarterage, presents, marriage fees, or in any way, more than that paltry sum, and this was Mr. Cooper's annual allowance from 1784 to the year 1800, when the salary of a single travelling preacher was raised to eighty dollars per annum. 6. In 1800 I became acquainted with Mr. Cooper, when he attended the General Conference. At this General Conference he was appointed Editor and General Book Steward, with a salary of (I think) $600 a year; out of which he was to pay his own board, and the hire of a boy to run of errands. 7. At the General Conference of 1804 the book business was transferred to New York, and Mr. Cooper was continued Editor and Book Agent, with Rev. John Wilson, assistant. In this appointment Mr. Cooper continued for 4 years; having charge of the society in Brooklyn, during 1805 and 1806. Now what the General Conference allowed him for these last 4 years, I have no distinct recollection. But I believe he drew a salary from the society in Brooklyn at the time he was Editor and Book Agent, and drawing a salary from the Book Room as Editor in New York. 8. At the close of his term of service as Editor, &c., the General Conference of 1808 made him a present, as I was informed, of $1000 for his faithful services while he presided over the Book concern. 9. From 1808, when the allowance of a single preacher was raised to $100, till he located in 1813, Mr. Cooper was entitled to receive that sum, in common with the rest of the single preachers, and no more. 10. From 1813 to 1820 he was located, and of course was entitled to receive nothing. 11. From 1820 until his death, if he was ranked in the travelling connexion as an active or "supernumerary" preacher, he was entitled to receive $100 per annum, if he saw fit to claim it. 12. Mr. Cooper never married; consequently he got no fortune by a wife. He engaged in no secular business that I ever heard of, either mercantile, agricultural, mechanical or professional. From these sources of wealth, he derived none. How then came he to be possessed of an estate worth "One Hundred and Fifty Thousand, or Two Hundred Thousand Dollars," is more than I can tell; and this is the point, Mr. Editor, upon which I think some of his friends ought to throw some light. It is useless to say, as some have said in my hearing, he put his money out to to interest, for all the money he ever received as a travelling preacher, would not, at compound interest, amount to half the sum which is stated to be possessed by him at his decease.

Let us now bring the amount of all the money to which he was entitled, as a travelling preacher, into one view.

From 1784 to 1800 inclusive, a period of 17 years, at sixty-four dollars per annum,	$1088,00
From 1800 to 1804, when he was Book Agent in Philadelphia, four years at $600 per annum,	2400,00
From 1804 to 1808, when in New York, at say, $600 per annum,	2400,00
Two years of this period, in charge of the society in Brooklyn, at $80 per annum,	160,00
From 1808 to 1813, 5 years at $100 per annum,	500,00
From 1820 to 1846, say 26 years as an active or "supernumerary" preacher, at 100 dollars per annum	2600,00
Total E. E.,	$9148,00

Now in this calculation I have proceeded as if Mr. Cooper had every year received the full amount of salary to which, by the Discipline, he was entitled; and in all that time had never expended any thing for clothes, books, necessaries of life, nor gave a dollar away for any charitable purpose. Will the Arithmetician tell me then, at what rate of interest per cent. the various sums enumerated, would amount to the enormous aggregate of "Two Hundred Thousand Dollars?"

REMINISCENCES

OF THE FIRST SETTLEMENT OF OHIO.

NO. IX.

Friend Bassett: I suppose enough has already been said of the loss of life by the Indian war, to illustrate the difficulties the few inhabitants of Washington county had to encounter. The expedition of General Wayne against the Indians, like all the previous ones, organized at Cincinnati, and was conducted with great caution & fortitude. The army established forts as they advanced into the Indian country; and the transportation for a large portion of which was done on pack-horses, and had to be protected by escorts of troops, in order to secure it against the vigilance of the Indians. Wayne could not bring them to any general engagement, until he arrived in the vicinity of their towns on the Maumee, a few miles above Perrysburgh, on the west side of the river, where he brought them to a general engagement in 1794, and totally defeated them; but several engagements with escorts, took place previous; and his operations served to occupy so much of the attention of the hostile tribes, that it relieved our settlements, in a great measure from the danger of a combined attack. Only small parties scouted through the settlements, and picked up here and there a prisoner, or killed a single individual, drove off the cattle, or otherwise damaged their property. A mail had been established by the river Ohio, carried in light boats, built like whale boats, or canoes, usually worked by two men, each boat running from one station to another, and back; and these packet boats occasionally took one or two passengers. A large portion of the emigrants were attracted to the vicinity of Cincinnati, in consequence of the Army operations being conducted from that place. Quite a number of our citizens joined the army in the capacity of Sutlers, Clerks, wagon or pack-horse masters, &c. From one who was engaged in a very serious and disastrous affair with the enemy at Fort Recovery, I had this account.—He was a pack-horse master. The train was large, and under the escort of quite a large number of Horse and Foot. They had stopped at Fort Recovery, to rest, and bait the horses, which had been turned into a prairie near the fort. Most of the escort were in or near the fort, when the Indians attacked the party in charge of the horses; the escort ran to their rescue, but in a few minutes the whole, pack-horses, men and soldiers, ran for the fort, all in confusion, intermixed with the Indians, who were killing as fast as they could, the rear ones. This man's horse came with the crowd, and he caught him and succeeded in getting into the fort; but while he was securing the horse, it was killed. He told me that after the gates were shut, the Indians continued the attack on the fort, which was not completed, and one block-house, not chinked, or filled in between the logs; that the Indians killed several men through the openings of these logs, and through the openings between the pickets; that there were a large number of pack-horse men who had no arms,—that these employed themselves during the firing, in setting up half-barrels of flour inside of the block-house, to secure them against the balls of the enemy,—that after they had done this, they proposed to the officer in command, to let them open the gate and get in a field-piece, standing just outside of the gate, which had been recently recovered from where the Indians had hid it, on the defeat of St. Clair, which had taken place near that place. The officer gave his consent, and they succeeded in getting the cannon without losing any man; and having got it into the new block-house, they loaded it and directed it so as to hit a log, behind which an Indian had secreted himself, so near as to hit a man almost every shot. They fired it; and when the Indians found they had got this field-piece in operation, they retreated. They found the Indian dead behind the log. A large number of men were killed in this attack, and many horses lost. The commanding officer of the escort was killed.

In the spring of 1795, Wayne's treaty was made with the Indians. There are amongst those people different grades in authority, as amongst us. There was a young Indian chief, named Lewis, a leader in action, but not a chief in council. He was notorious for his enmity to, and activity against the whites. Wayne desired his presence at the council, and the old Chief, called the Crane, was sent to bring him in. With much persuasion he came to the treaty, and after much effort on the part of the Indians, he signed the instrument. After he had put his mark to it, he turned to his seniors, and said, "you have brought me here contrary to my wish, to treat with this people. I have consented to bury the hatchet. I will never take it up again. I make no child's bargain." I became acquainted with this man in 1812, while in the army. He was a noble specimen of Indian character. He had kept his promise, literally. I was at his town, and ate in his house; he could not then speak English, and had in his house a white woman, who had been taken prisoner in Kentucky, and had married and raised a family of white children amongst them. She interpreted. He always remained faithful to the American interest. He piloted Hull through the wilderness; went with his warriors to the relief of Fort Wayne in 1812, when besieged by hostile Indians; came several times to our camp to offer his services to us; and when in the spring of 1813, I left our camp, he was there as a scout for General Harrison's army, with some of his warriors. He nor none of his people would drink whiskey; and they cultivated their ground like white men. At this time he and Logan were the principal chiefs of the Shawnee nation,—his wife the head of the Mingo tribe.

There is living in this county, a woman, who was a prisoner during the war, but she had been purchased, and resided in the family of a white trader, with the Indians, on the Maumee. Many years since. I enquired of her, if she knew an Indian called Captain Lewis? She told me she knew him well; and that he had a high reputation for courage, and activity in the war, but had no voice in council; and was then about nineteen or twenty years of age; and related several anecdotes, illustrating his character. On one occasion he was asked by an Englishman, "whether he was fond of war." He straitened himself up with an appearance of great firmness, and replied, "I never go to war; I defend myself." Such was his view of the nature of the contest in which they were engaged.

After the peace, the settlements were pushed out in different directions. Wolf creek was again occupied. Rainbow, Cots creek, Leading creek, mouth of Big Hockhocking, Letart Falls, and indeed most of river bottoms on the Muskingum, up to Meigs creek; and many on the Ohio soon were occupied by active laborers, striving to increase their means of subsistence, and comfort. Still, most of the passing and repassing was by water, in canoes, and the want of mills was severely felt. The mills at Wolf creek were again in operation, but they were far removed from the settlements on the Ohio. Captain Jonathan Devol put in operation a floating mill, about four miles from Marietta, on the Muskingum, which long continued to do a large portion of the coarse grinding; and after some time he put up a bolt, to be turned by hand, by those who wanted the flour; but most of that article was brought from the Monongahela River. A little later, a Mr. White put up a mill on Duck creek, about three miles from Marietta, with a bolt and screen, which we considered a great advance in improvement; especially those boys of us, who before had to turn the bolt at Captain Devol's, out of sight of our comrades at play. In a few years a few keel boats of from five to eight tons, began to navigate the rivers; but most of the larger transportation was done in Perogues, dug out of a large tree, some of them carrying four tons. In time, Orleans boats, sixty feet long and twelve feet wide, were seen floating past our villages, from the head-waters of the Ohio; loaded with flour. This was a long stride toward commercial importance. General Rufus Putnam erected a mill on Rainbow Creek, about two miles from the river. Improvements began gradually to be made, but gave but slight promise of the vast strides, which have built up so many States in this Valley of the West. Immediately after the peace, the prisoners were brought in to the persons appointed by Government, and restored to their friends. One Joseph Kelly, taken at Bellville, was restored to his mother, then in our stockade. One taken at Big-Bottom, Patton, also returned to our community. Also a Mr. Evans; the place where he was taken I do not know. A party also went from Waterford to where Chandlersville now is, and took their sugar kettles with them, and commenced to make salt, from the salt spring there, amongst whom was Colonel Daniel Converse; but as they had to boil 700 or 800 gallons of water to get a bushel of salt, the price was but little lower than formerly. Another salt-works was established on the Scioto. But salt never fell below three dollars, for fifty pounds, here, until 1808, when I brought a load to this place from works near Gallipolis, which was sold at $2,50 for fifty pounds. This was years after Zanesville had been laid out and become quite a village.

A Simple Fact.

Seven years ago, while engaged one Sunday afternoon in circulating the temperance pledge among our colored friends at Pittsburgh, I received some sad tales of sorrow from their lips. Among those who signed the pledge, I recollect one who was a married women, aged thirty-four years, apparently a person of veracity. Her tale was in substance the following:—

"When I was nine years old, I was sold and taken away from my father and mother, and have never seen them since. They were both Christians. It almost killed my father when he saw me about to be separated from him. I recollect, as the horse stood by the door, and I was put on his back, being too young to walk, my father came up to the horse, and took hold of my little feet; and then he prayed to God to take care of me, and while he was praying for me he felt so bad to have me go away that he fainted and fell down on the ground alongside of the horse.

"My mother was a Christian too, and when she bid me farewell, she said, 'Sarah, when you hear I am dead, don't cry for me, I shall be in heaven. Be a good girl and prepare to meet me there!' Since that morning, which is now twenty years, I have never seen my dear father and mother; and I never expect to see them in this word. I have eight brothers and sister scattered through the different slave States, and have not seen one of them these seventeen years."—Sab. Recorder.

TEMPERANCE.

From the Boston Olive Branch.

A new Book of Chronicles.

CHAPTER XII.

1. But the Rumocrats were angry when they heard the rejoicings of the people for the words of the judges, and of the rulers, that no man should put the bottle to his neighbor's mouth, to make him drunk withal any more.

2. (For those that loved strong drink and they that sold it, were called Rumocrats, whether they belonged to the tribe of Aristocrats, or to any other of the tribes of America.)

3. Now some of the women loved strong drink, and became drunk therewith; and some of them were cast into prison for their wickedness.

4. Moreover they gave strong drink to little children, which knew not their right hand from their left.

5. And before these days, if any were married, or buried, or built a house, or gathered a field of corn, or made a feast, or if the weather were hot, or if it were cold, or if they labored, or were idle, they had strong drink.

6. And the priests, and physicians, and the philosophers, and wise men, and valiant men, and almost every man, drank wine & strong drink.

7. But when they saw that many were made drunkards, and thirty thousand men and women year by year died drunkards; and all sorts of men, both rich and poor, wise and ignorant, they were afraid, and many said, We are for Total Abstinence.

8. But the Rumocrats laughed them to scorn, & said, Shall we not eat & drink as we will? Are we not freemen?

9. And the drunkards sold all that they had, to buy strong drink; their houses, their lands, and their sheep, and oxen, and horses: their clothes & their victuals; whatsoever thing they possessed,—if they had nothing, they would labor, or beg, or steal, for strong drink.

10. And when they were drunk, they committed all manner of sin against God and against men.—They loved not their wives and children, nor honored their fathers and mothers, as the Lord God commanded.

11. Moreover they kept not the Sabbath day holy, but were drunken on that day; neither went they to the house of God with their households.

12. And they were blasphemers, and whoremongers, and thieves, and liars and murderers; and were in debt, and poverty, and in want of all things.

13. Some died in prison, some were hanged on a tree, and others fell into divers perils, troubles and untimely deaths.

14. And when the men that sold strong drink heard of all these evils which befel the drunkards, whom they had made drunk, they wiped their mouths and said, We have done no evil; it is their own fault if they drink too much; if we do not sell to them, others will.

15. But the curse of the Lord was upon the houses of them that made their neighbors drunk, and many had drunken wives or children, or became drunkards themselves, and poor and miserable.

16. But many said, We will drink a little. Lo! we are not drunkards; and when we will, we shall drink no more. Have we not the power to drink, or not to drink?

17. And they made merry with one another, & with all whom they prevailed upon to join them. They drank a little, and danced, and sung, and said, Who are so happy as we?

18. But there was death in the cup; and the appetite grew and prevailed, by little and little, till they had no power over themselves: but followed in the drunkard's path, to the drunkard's grave, and to perdition.

19. Many young men, and fair, and goodly, were thus overcome by strong drink, and as it was in the land of Egypt, when there was not a house in which there was not one dead, so there was not a house in America, in which they mourned not some one smitten by this destroyer.

20. And the Temperance men which opposed the Rumocrats met together in a place called Faneuil Hall, in the city of Boston, to take counsel how they might further check the Rumocrats.

21. And the Rumocrats came also, even as Satan came in the days of Job, when the sons of God came together.

22. And when Moses, the elder, whose surname is Grant, essayed to speak to the people, the Rumocrats growled and raved like wolves, so that Moses could not be heard.

23. Then they called for one Peter, whose surname is Brigham, to rule the meeting, instead of Moses. And the voices of them which were for Peter prevailed.

24. And a certain priest, named Edward, who ministereth to them which go down to the sea in ships, he also essayed to speak, but neither would the Rumocrats hear him.

25. Neither would they hear one McClure, who would have spoken to the people.

26. And when Moses saw that he could prevail nothing, but that rather a tumult was made, he sent the people away, every man to his own house.

27. For the words of the judges, which they spake in the city of Washinton, made the Rumocrats rave as a bear robbed of her whelps.

28. And the Rumocrats said to the rulers of the city of Boston, give us license, that we may sell strong drink.

29. They said also to the great and General Court, which made laws for the people of Massachusetts, Make no more laws against us.

30. So they waxed wroth against all, both small and great, who would not suffer them to sell strong drink.

31. And the Rumocrats came together in a place called Greenfield, for to choose county commissioners, to license those who sell strong drink.

32. And in divers other places came they together, because their craft was in danger, whereby they had their wealth.

33. Now the Rumocrats were men of Belial, and feared not God, nor regarded man. They that loved strong drink loved nothing else; and they that sold it, loved money more than all things.

34. So the land was filled with violence and wickedness by the Rumocrats.

35. Moreover some that made laws for the nation, in the great city of Washington, were drunkards, and none made them ashamed.

36. Howbeit not all loved wine and strong drink; for God raised up certain among them who were for Total Abstinence, of the wise men, and the great men not a few.

37. Among whom was George, the Governor of Massachusetts, and Justin, whose surname was Edwards, and Lyman, whose surname was Beecher, and Edward, his son.

37. These, and many others, formed the Cold Water army, which contended against the Rumocrats, to put an end to the wickedness and great distress caused by them among the people.

Thrilling Incident.

At a temperance meeting in Philadephia some years ago, a learned clergyman spoke in favor of wine as a drink; demonstrating it, quite to his own satisfaction, to be scriptural, gentlemanly, and healthful. When the clergyman sat down, a plain, elderly man rose, and asked the liberty of saying a few words. "A young friend of mine," said he, "who had long been intemperate, was at length prevailed on, to the great joy of his friends, to take the pledge of entire abstinence from all that could intoxicate. He kept the pledge faithfully for some time, though the struggle with his habit was fearful; till one evening, in a social party, glasses of wine were handed round. They came to a clergyman present, who took a glass, saying a few words in vindication of the practice. 'Well,' thought the young man, 'if a clergyman can take wine, and justify it so well, why not I?' So he also took a glass. It instantly rekindled his fiery and slumbering appetite; and after a rapid downward course, he died of delirium tremens —a raving madman."

The old man paused for utterance; and was just able to add—"That young man was my only son; and the clergyman was the Reverend Doctor who has just addressed the assembly."

I once saw a preacher trying to teach the children that the soul would live after they were all dead. They listened, but evidently did not understand it. He was too abstract. Snatching his watch from his pocket, he said,

'James, what is this I hold in my hand?'

'A watch.'

'A little, clock,' says another.

'Do you all see it?'

'Yes, sir.'

'How do you know it is a watch?'

'It ticks, sir.'

'Very well, can any of you hear it tick?' All listen now.' After a pause—

'Yes, sir, we hear it.'

He then took off the case, and held the case in one hand, and the watch in the other.

'Now children, which is the watch?' You see there are two which look like watches.'

'The little one in your right hand.'

'Very well again. Now I will lay the case aside—put it away down there in my hat. Now let us see if you can hear the watch ticking?'

'Yes, sir, we hear it' exclaimed several voices.

"Well, the watch can tick, and go, and keep time, you see, when the case is taken off and put in my hat. The watch goes just as well. So it is with you, children. Your body is nothing but the case, the soul is inside. The case—the body—may be taken off and buried up in the ground, and the soul will live and think, just as well as this watch will go, as you see, when the case is off.

Rules of Faith and Practice,

Not found in the Bible, but some think can be proved by the Bible; which I doubt.

BY ELDER N. SUMMERBELL

Never manifest any peculiar interest in religion, except in times of revival, and then, not until there gets to be quite a good deal of excitement; lest the meetings should be uninteresting.

Never talk about the state of religion in your own heart, but if you talk of religion at all—especially before worldly persons—let it be in the way of finding fault with your minister. This will make you appear as though you knew what kind of a man a minister should be.

Strive to believe all the evil reports about your brethren, especially should there be one about the minister; this will prove that you have charity. For charity believeth all things.

Be sure to lay up treasures for your own family; yea, if it be possible, to supply them down to the thousandth generation—and be careful to let all your charity begin at home—for he that provideth not for his own house, hath denied the faith, and is worse than and infidel.

If there are any members more active and liberal than you, strive, as opportunity offers—with great care, lest you should be esteemed a fault-finder—to make it appear that they are forward and officious; and pretend that you, yourself, would do more were they not so forward.

If the prayer meeting is two or three miles off, and you never attend, say that it is "too far," but be sure and attend every irreligious gathering at the same place, night or day; thus you will convince men, that let others do as they will, as for you, you are determined to know something more than Jesus Christ and him crucified. Also attend a party now and then, to make up for lost prayer metings.

Do not take a religious paper; it is as much as you can afford to pay for two political ones.

If anything is said about supporting the gospel, tell them plainly who are able, and that you are poor. What if you are worth a few thousands!

And when you are taken ill, and death approaches, you may do as such persons have done before you. But lest you should want an example, you may take one from a young lady who took up her residence among her fashionable friends in the city, to whose ways she strove to be conformed. When on her death bed, they inquired of her whether she desired a minister to be sent for to pray with her, to which she replied—"if it is fashonable." [Ch. Pallad.

Thoughts on a Passage of Scripture.—For, for this cause was the Gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit. 1 Pet. iv. 6.

Question. Do we understand by this passage, that the Gospel was ever preached to the dead?

Answer. No. But we are taught by it, that the Gospel had been preached by the Spirit, or otherwise, to all generations which had preceded the days of Peter, and for the reason here assigned, —that they might be judged, &c. All these generations, however, were no longer living, but were dead when Peter wrote this epistle. But at the time when the Gospel was preached unto them, they were living upon the earth, in like manner as the present generation is. Any writer, who may arise after the present generation is dead, may use the same language with regard to it, which Peter used in reference to all generations which preceded him, and say, 'The Gospel was preached to them that are dead.'—Christian Patriot.

Religious Intelligence.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Fayette Spring Circuit, April 29th, 1847.

Br Bassett: Permit me through your excellent paper to communicate to our worthy President, Br. Brown, and the readers of the Western Recorder, some intelligence in relation to the prosperity of this circuit. Since my last report I have held three protracted meetings, and two Quarterly Meetings. The first protracted effort was near Oliphant's Iron Works in the Cumberland P. Church.

This appointment was formerly an appointment of the Connelsville circuit, but the preachers of that circuit having as many appointments as they could supply dropt this appointment. The society here being disorganized, many of the members were lifeless in the cause of Christ. We made an effort to reorganize and succeeded in forming a society of seven members. The Great Head of the Church was with us at this meeting; and many souls were happy in consequence thereof.

Our meeting lasted near one week, and when we closed we had a society of 22 members; unto God be all the praise.

The second effort, was our 2d Qr. meeting, which was held at Mt. Washington Church, commencing on the 10th of Jan., and closed on the following Sabbath evening. This was a good meeting. One joined the church. Br. Isherwood did the preaching at this meeting. May the Lord abundantly bless him. The third protracted effort was our Presidential meeting held in C. P. Church, near Oliphant's Iron Works. Br. Brown and Br. Palmer were here at the commencement of the meeting; Br. Palmer preached on Saturday night, and then Brother Brown, with great acceptability, preached till Monday, and left us, for home. This meeting lasted two weeks and during this time the God of Israel was with us; bless his holy name for what he has done for us. Sinners trembled, mourned, and wept over their sins, while others rejoiced, having found redemption in the blood of Christ, even the forgiveness of their sins. I do not know how many found peace by faith in the merits of the Lamb at this meeting. But many, I believe were blest. The members of P. M. Church and others were revived. Twenty five joined the church at this meeting, and they are doing well. May the Lord bless and save them at last among his Jewels. Brother Lanham and Brother Clawson did us good service at the close of this meeting. Since that we have had a glorious revival at Wharton Furnace; here God displayed his power in the awakening and conversion of souls; 10 or 12 obtained religion and 16 joined the church. O that they may never forsake the fold of Christ. We have just closed our third quarterly meeting which resulted gloriously. Br. Simonton came to our assistance and preached with his usual zeal and acceptability. And about the close of the meeting Br. Palmer came and preached twice for us. Here eleven joined the M. P. Church. The cause of Christ is on the advance on this circuit, and we are praying that we may have a revival at all of the appointments of this circuit. Brethren pray for us that we may be more abundantly blest as a circuit. Now unto the Eternal, Invisible and only Wise God, be glory and honor forever and ever. Amen.

V. LUCAS, Supt.

ILLINOIS DISTICT.

From the Protestant Monitor.

Dear Brethren:—I have just returned from the western tour on the Illinois District. We held our Quarterly Meeting in Rushville, on the fifth Sabbath in Jan. At this place nothing very special occurred as to a revival influence. It is true, we had on the Sabbath, and on the Sabbath night, vastly crowded congregations, and a very good state of feeling; and had the weather proved favorable so that the meeting could have been continued, I think from appearances, we should have had a good time in the end. From thence I went to Camden Ct. Here we had a gracious time indeed. The saints rejoiced, penitents truly mourned and cried for salvation, and the whole community seemed much interested. May the Lord bless and sustain those good brethren, who were left last year without ministerial aid. From thence I went to the Mississippi Ct. We held our meeton Rock Creek. Here we had quite a revival flame. Brethren and sisters of different denominations united with us, and were all made happy together. A great amount of conviction was manifested in the congregations that crowded to hear the Word of Life proclaimed.

A number joined church and I hope and believe, that our meeting will tell well on the future destiny of our society, in that region of our work. Here we had several of our unstationed brethren to our aid occasionally; but my good friend and old veteran in the good cause of salvation, Bro. Hugh Doyle, stood by me, and remained with us the whole of the time, day and night, wet and cold, and labored with his usual zeal and effect. O that we had more such holy, zealous, and perservering men in the Ministry; may Heaven's best blessings rest on his efforts to do good. Bro. J. P. J. was with us one day and night—preached twice. The membership of this Circuit are promptly maintaining and sustaining their Itinerants, and I look for a general revival amongst them this year. Revivals always follow moral honesty; and leanness, dishonesty; and to withhold a compensation and the means of support from those who we employ to labor amongst us, and for us, is both irreligious and impolitic. O that our membership would wake up to see, and attend to this matter.

From Rock Creek I went to the city of Quincy on my way to Lagrange Mission, but found the ice in the river in a condition unsafe to cross. I then turned my course for Lima, in Adams county Ill., here I united with Brother Doyle and others in a protracted Meeting, here we had quite an interesting time. I left on Tuesday; the Meeting still in progress; you will doubtless hear from it by some other pens.

From thence I returned homeward, and just arrived in time to attend the Illinois Ct. Qr. Meeting at which we had a good time; from this Meeting you will doubtless hear from Br. Z. Z. Zimmerman.

On this route I met with some very encouraging circumstances, and on the whole the Church is vastly rising in its spiritual condition, of this however, you will be the better able to judge from specific communications made by the Brethren from each Circuit. I have attended Meeting on the District every week since Conference; I have never stopped for cold or wet. Your fellow laborer in the Gospel of Christ.

Sudden Death.—Elijah Fitch, of Hopkinton Mass., fell dead upon the railroad track, at the Brighton station, on Tuesday morning. He was 70 years of age.

Fatal.—Edward Croghan of Lowell, was run over by the Concord train of cars on Saturday & instantly killed. He was walking on the track, and hearing round saw the train, but was apparently too much frightened to get off the rail.—N. Y. Sun.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO.

THURSDAY, MAY 6. 1847.

The Theatre.—Dr. Snodgrass, the Baltimore correspondent of the National Era, mentions the arrival in that city of the Viennoise Dancers. They are forty-eight children under the direction of Madam Weiss, and were exhibited at the Holliday street theatre. The Dr. remarks that the use to which those little ones are being put, is two unnatural to be commendable. Their performances are but divertisements, or interludes, to other performances in the regular theatrical line. He says:

If these children are only to be seen under such circumstances as these, there will be many who will never behold them at all. I throw out this hint in time, confessing that I am not altogether unselfish in its utterance. I am one of those who would always rather forego such a treat as here proffered, than encourage, in any way, one of those slaughter-houses of morals—the theatre! Such will be the feeling of thousands, until the theatre is built, like the hall of science, with but one floor, and without any such hiding-places for vice as the "gallery."

Great waste of Powder and Shot.—The city of Pittsburgh was saluted by the roar of cannon for several days last week, discharged at the U. S. Garrison on the Alleghany river, two miles above the city. The Pittsburgh Gazette states that this was occasioned by testing 136 pieces of cannon, recently manufactured for the government. About 1,300 pounds of shot, and 3,300 lbs. of powder were wasted upon the occasion. The editor of the Gazette hopes there may never be occasion for using those noisy instruments for any worse purpose.

☞ The Ohio Sun, (Batavia,) of Friday last, announces the death of Mr. Geo. Medary, brother of Col. S. Medary, on Sunday previous, at his residence near Batavia, aged 40 years.

☞ The Cincinnati Commercial states that the widow of Gen. Pike, died lately at her residence in Boone county Ky, aged 64 years.

Another call.—It appears that a requisition has been issued for another regiment of troops from the state of Ohio, about one thousand men.

Fire in Dayton.—We learn that a large fire occurred in Dayton on Thursday last, 29th ult. Seven stores, one pork house, and a number of dwellings were consumed. So says the Transcript.

Emigrants. Right sort.—The Olive Branch says that emigrants from Wales have sent an Agent into Western Virginia, to purchase 1000 farms, of 150 acres each.

Father Matthew, has announced his intention to visit the States during the ensuing summer.

More of Rum's Doings.—A correspondent of the Religious Telescope, in the last number of that paper, states that he was lately called to witness a most horrid scene in Clinton County Ohio. Passing along the way, his attention was arrested by a collection of persons at a cabin. On entering, saw the mangled corpse of a lady of about 25 years of age who had just been murdered by her drunken husband. On the previous night he returned home intoxicated, and literally beat his wife to death with a club. The next morning at 10 o'clock, a neighbor made the awful discovery, finding with the body of the mother, a child of five years, the only one to tell the sad tale. The murderer had decamped. His name is Alexander Stewart. It is said that he was subsequently arrested and secured, having travelled eastward, some 70 miles. Alas, that such scenes have become so common, as to arrest attention but for a moment. When a few more hundreds and thousands of victims to rum shall have fallen, we wonder if drunkenness and drunkard making will not be accounted crimes.

Since the above was in type, we learn that Stewart laid violent hands on himself, and after lingering two days, died of his self-inflicted wounds.

War News.

The New York Sun has dates from Vera Cruz to the 14th ult. News had reached the camp, by express from Gen. Twiggs, that Santa Anna was before him with fifteen thousand men. Lieut. Col. J. E. Johnson, had been severely wounded, whilst examining Santa Anna's works. It was said that some fifty Americans had been killed by Mexicans on the road within a few days. On receipt of the above information, both Gen. Scott and Gen. Worth were soon off to aid Gen. Twiggs. It was apprehended that there would be a terrible battle faught at Cerro Gordo, unless, as an intelligent Mexican thought, there would be no fight at all, but a peace negociated. Reports have been published of the prevalence of yellow fever at Vera Cruz. This is now contradicted.

Presentment.—We learn by the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, that the Christian Advocate and Journal, has been "presented" and condemned by the Grand Jury of Accomac County, Va. as an incendiary paper. Our Pittsburgh friend thinks that this will give Dr. Bond an opportunity of adding several hundred new subscribers to his list, "whilst the indignation of freemen every where, will rest upon the heads of the petty tyrants of Accomac."

Pittsburgh Conference, M. E. Church.—The ensuing session is to be held at Wellsburgh, Virginia.

Thomas Wilson.—The Protestant Monitor announces the death of Thomas Wilson of Clark County Illinois, a member of the Methodist Protestant Church. He was a native of Ireland, but for many years a resident of this country. He is said to have been a man of 'singular piety,' and as he left no heirs, he willed his entire estate to the M. P. Church, in the State of Illinois, with the exception of 40 acres of land to Rev. Hugh Doyle and wife.

How to make Land.—Our readers will recollect that a few weeks ago, we requested our friend of the Boston Olive Branch, to enlighten us Western folks in reference to the Yankee process of making land, he having stated that more than half the present premises of Boston were 'made land.' In a clever response, the Assistant Editor, Brother Lovell, explains very satisfactorily the modus operandi. Our Western readers, we know, will be interested to get an understanding of this "Yankee trick"—so we copy below, the article entire. We are much obliged to our friend for his invitation for us to visit Boston, and see for ourself.—When a few more links of railway are completed, we shall certainly try and do so. But we have become so thoroughly Westernised, we do not feel prepared as yet, to order the house lot or farm as per proposal of our brother.

From the Boston Olive Branch.

Making Land.

The Western people think the Yankees can accomplish almost anything. But it puzzles them a little to determine how we can make land. In a late article of ours, we mentioned the fact, that when the Bostonians wanted land for building lots, they could easily make more. This appears to be viewed as rather a stumper, by Brother Bassett, of the Western Recorder, Ohio. So he holds forth in the following strain:

'Progress of Boston.—The Olive Branch informs us that notwithstanding the great improvements which have been effected of late years, still the city of Boston is not near finished, and he has 'given up all hope of living to see it completed.' He says they are still going on, building eight or ten hundred beautiful houses and stores every year. And when they have not land enough, they find it quite easy to make more! We reckon it must take Yankees to do that. And if we did not claim to be of that nation, we would ask for information in reference to the process of making land, for our cotemporary tells us that Boston is already more than half made land! Now in the West, we have land a plenty, and folks here, instead of attempting to make more land, direct their attention to making money. But this Western country is filling up so rapidly, we think that in places, it improves as fast as Boston, and we may, by and by, know the want of land. So we would like to know how you Bostonians find it so easy to make land. Since we left the country of the Pilgrim Fathers, thirty odd years ago, them Yankees are up to more tricks than they used to be. Now we are suspicious that notwithstanding their professed opposition to the acquiring new territory by force of arms, they are infringing upon the rightful dominions of old Neptune. We trust they will not take a notion to carry that venerable Bunker Hill into the midst of the sea to make land. Will the Olive Branch, or our New England correspondent, if he please, enlighten us Western folks somewhat upon this subject?'

Now it is all useless for a Western man who has not visited the land 'of the Pilgrim Fathers for thirty odd years,' to form any just idea of what 'tricks' the Yankees have cut up within that time. If he ever saw 'the city of Notions,' and can retain any recollections of how it looked, he doubtless carries in his eye 'Holbrook's old oyster boat,' at the foot of old Faneuil Hall, 'Welch's Chocolate Mills,' operating by tide water, at the end of Union street, where Blackstone street now meets it, and the 'Old Glass House,' at Wheeler's Point. But these places, though they were thirty years ago at the water's edge, on three sides of the town of Boston, are now quite in the heart of the city, and were our friend Bassett to be set down at either of these points, he would find it difficult to know which way to go, to find the tide water which once flowed at his feet. In fact there would not be but two or three points in the city that he could at all recognise.

There need be no fears about Bunker Hill; that stands as proudly as ever, with its towering pile of granite, parting the very clouds. But some other hills have settled away under the hand of improvement, and much of their contents have very much aided in spreading the area of the city.—This, however, is not the only material with which we make our land. Much of the material is brought from the Quincy and Braintree granite quarries; immense quantities are dug from the extended flats over which the tide flows at high water, in the Southern Bay and in Charles River. A fleet of scows, amply manned by gentlemen right from the Emerald Isle, is constantly employed in the transportation of the very thing; and many thousands of loads of coal ashes are carried from the dwellings of the citizens, upon the marshes between Boston & Roxbury, thereby making streets and building lots. And in addition to all this, we have eight or ten railroads leading into the city, all of which with their immense trains of ditt cars, bring us the means of 'making land.' Why, dear friend Bassett, we can make you a house lot or even a farm almost any day. Only send us on the dimensions, and we will turn it out to your liking.

The surrounding towns are rapidly advancing to meet us. In fact Roxbury, Cambridge and Charlestown have already become incorporated cities, and water and distance between us are almost annihilated. Some dozen bridges now connect Boston with the main land, besides numerous steam ferry boats, and the old Roxbury neck, formerly the only carriage passage to this wonderful place.

After all, it may be difficult to explain our Yankee process of making land. If friend Bassett will just step on this way, we will take pleasure in showing him the whole modus operandi, from the raw material to the finished work. *

Foreign News.—The Steamship Sarah Sands reached New York April 29th, after a rough voyage. The N. Y. Sun says that she had but three days of fair wind, and steamed all the way. The news is but two days later than by the Boston Steamer. Dr. Murphy, the Roman Catholic bishop of Cork, died on the 1st ult. He owned a library of 200,000 volumes. The disputes between Turkey and Greece have been satisfactorily settled. Great and increasing emigration from Europe to America, are in prospect. It is stated that an entire village in the Electorate of Cassell, is offered for sale, as all the inhabitants, 600, are about to leave for the United States. It is supposed that 40,000 persons will pass through Amsterdam this year, for this country.

Court House Burned.—We see by the Toledo Blade, that the Court House of Henry County, Ohio, at Napoleon, was destroyed by fire on the 19th ult. with all the Records in the Recorders office, and all the Court Records. Too late now, to recommend an iron safe.

Heavy pork—once more.—Rev. C. Sumption of Dearfield, Ia. requests us to state that during the last winter, he sold to E. Edgar, one hog that weighed five hundred and five pounds neat. But he had not a lot of them.

Protestant Monitor.—We have received but four numbers of this paper in three months past. The last two numbers that came, were dated, February 12, and April 14. We suppose this is not intentional, or we would discontinue our exchange. How is it Br. Lathrop?

The Illustrated Sun.—The May number of this fine affair has reached us. It contains more than 30 engravings. Amongst these are Battle scenes in Mexico, Bull fights in Spain, Food riots in Ireland &c. This is quite a showy work, and is cheap at $1 per year, and only newspaper postage. Address, M. Y. Beach and Sons, New York.

Rev. E. Cooper.—The article on our first page, headed with the name of this venerable minister, recently deceased, will be found to present an interesting topic of enquiry. It is written, by one who was in years past, one of the compeers of Mr. Cooper, and understands well the matters of which he treats. Nothing is indicated to the reproach of Mr. C's memory, and we think that his friends or biographers should give attention to the enquiry.

To Farmers.—Read the article in our Agricultural Department, by Dr. Smith. It is a curious paper, and contains very confident predictions. But the distinguished reputation of the writer forbids that we should set it down as all humbug.

Frederic Reidel.—This person, convicted of murder in the first degree, upon the person of his own wife, was condemned to be executed at Pittsburgh, on the 30th ult. The Pittsburgh Commercial Journal states that the prisoner committed suicide in his cell, on the night of the 29th.

Rev. J. N. Maffit.—The newspapers generally have announced the recent marriage of this celebrated preacher, to a young lady of 18, at Brooklyn, N. Y. Mr. M. had obtained a divorce from his former wife. Had he delayed his second marriage a few short weeks, he would have received intelligence of her death. The newspapers out west announce the death of the former Mrs. Maffit on the 1st of April, at Galveston Texas, where she had located herself with her children. This must have been within a few days of the time of Mr. M's. marriage. He is holding forth, at Allegheny City.

To Correspondents.—Journal by M'Guire next week. We say to our friend at Homer, that we think the publication of his article would do harm and not good, and that there is "a more excellent way."—The friend who writes to us from Adams' Mills, O., is informed that it is impracticable for us to attempt the publication of his work, as per his proposition. Br. T. Foster is informed that we should have written to him but for the want of time. Have not seen C. S.

N. Selby.—This famous minister, has lately withdrawn from the Wesleyan Methodist Connection. This is just what we could have predicted months ago. It used to be his pleasure to berate the M. E. and M. P. Churches, and now we presume the W. M. C. will receive the like treatment at his hand. Such violent men, do not soon find their center of gravity. Mr. S. has become so holy in his own estimation, that no church is fit to have him, and no human government fit to rule over him. We do not know what plan Mr. S. will pursue to regenerate our wicked world, but we presume he will pour water on the hands of W. L. Garrison. The True Wesleyan manifests great liberality in publishing in a late number, his valedictory with the severities it contains, though professing all gentleness and goodness.

Sons & Daughters of Temperance.—A copy has been sent us of the "Constitution and By-Laws of the Jacksontown Temperance Circle of the Sons and Daughters of Temperance." So then, the Girls and Boys at Jacksontown, are not reconciled to remain in separate Divisions. They have formed a Circle, to which females are admitted at fourteen, and males at sixteen. They are united under the usual Temperance Pledge. The Ladies and Gentlemen of the Circle, we are told, have very interesting times, and co-operate in great harmony. We apprehend that Rum will stand a poor chance now in Jacksontown.

Cold.—We have had frosts on three successive mornings of this week, but do not know whether it has been destructive upon fruit or not.

OBITUARY.

DIED, in Putnam on the 23d ult. Mrs. Jerusha M. wife of E. P. Sturges Esq. of Mansfield, aged 49 years.

The deceased came to this place on a visit in May last, being at the time in ill health. Very soon her disease excited the alarm of her friends and as the result proves not without cause.

For many long months she suffered the pain, and suspense peculiar to that dreadful malady consumption. Sensible of her condition she conversed frequently, and composedly of her departure, gave directions in regard to her temporal affairs, and her children, and in the fullest sense "set her house in order."

With a patience and resignation known only to christians, she waited her appointed time, and died with a full assurance of a glorious resurrection, adding another to the long list of witnesses who in life and in death, have borne unequivocal testimony to the value of that Gospel which the world so lightly esteems.

Let Scepticism cherish its doubts, let Infidelity cavil and Atheism sneer and scoff if they must but O, give me that faith which buoys up the sinking spirit in the dark hour of distress, which robs death of its sting and the grave of its terrors and opens up to the spirit, a world of joy and bliss beyond the dark valley through which we are all to pass. Singular deaths.—Mr. Benson Hale, landlord of the Pennsylvania Hotel, in Harrisburgh, while sitting with some friends in good health, was suddenly seized while laughing, with apoplexy, and died without uttering a word. In the same day and place Mr. Jeremiah Shoop died from the same cause.

An Affecting Incident, at the Md. Conf.

Many of the preachers were sadly deficient. They had labored faithfully, with but trifling pecuniary recompense. It was touching to the spectators to witness the liberality extended by the brethren in the ministry, who though they themselves had scarcely received a maintainance, were yet ready to share with those who had fared worse. A few hours before the final adjournment, a scene was presented which moved us almost to tears.

A brother well advanced in life, arose, not to reflect upon the appointing power, but to express a desire to be left without an appointment. His name had been announced for a certain field of labor. He was desirous to devote himself to the ministry. He had been among the first to suffer for reform; he was willing still to suffer.—But the prospect before him was dark—very dark. He had been compelled to expend one hundred dollars on his former field of labor above what he had received; was in debt to that amount; there was no prospect of support in the appointment assigned him; and in justice to himself and those to whom he was indebted he would be compelled to seek other means and use his hands to obtain a subsistence.

"I will be one of twenty to give five dollars to Bro. H——, if he will continue to travel," said a brother preacher.

"And I," responded another.

"And I," said a third.

"Put me down fifteen dollars," said a Lay brother.

A lady in the congregation slipped into our hand a five dollar bill, which was accordingly reported; and in less than fifteen minutes the heart of the poor preacher was made glad with the presentation of the amount, and his valuable services secured yet another year to the church! This is but a single case. There were several incidents of somewhat similar character. Truly it is more blessed to give than to receive. In this world of self-interest, how refreshing are these responses to the appeals of suffering worth.—Methodist Protestant.

Singular Fatality.—M. C. Gage of Royalton, Vermont, states that some years ago Mathias Rust of Tunbridge, while carrying wood into his house, fell and expired instantly; a few years after, the wife of Calvin Rust (son of Mathias.) dropped to the floor while about her ordinary duties, and died instantly, and the second wife of Calvin Rust died after a sickness of only forty-eight hours; on the 5th ult. Calvin Rust went to see the operation of raising stone from a quarry in East Bethel, and was instantly killed by the falling of part of the machinery; and on the 12th ult. Mrs. Ainsworth (sister of Calvin Rust) was riding in a sleigh down a hill, with an ox-sled loaded in front and another in the rear; the oxen in the rear were unable to hold back the load, and ran upon the sleigh and forward team, by which concussion Mrs. Ainsworth was killed.

Savage Murder.—Dr. J. W. Wilson, of Russellville, Kentucky, was murdered while sleeping in his office, on the 4th ult.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Six Men Drowned.—Capt. Coan, of fishing schr. Brinda, Provincetown, Mass., left that port on the 26th ult., for North Truro, in a sail boat.—The sea broke into the boat on the outer bar, and the anchor taking to the bottom held her from driving ashore. The men remained on the boat until six were washed off and drowned, namely, Capt. Coan, aged 55, Daniel Pendergrast, 16, Nathaniel Paine, 15, John Ridley, 13, Andrew Cassidy, 17, and Wm. Ortra, 15, all of North Truro except Ortra who was formerly of Charlestown. The bodies were recovered, except Ortra.

Mr. Bancroft.—Mr. Bancroft, our Minister at St. James, is making a short tour of the continent. Mr. Brodhead, Secretary of Legation, officiates in his absence.

A Strange piece of Despotism.—As far as France and Belgium are concerned, we need be under no apprehensions as to the further arrival here of immigrants in a state of destitution. We see by the Franco American that now, the French government requires all foreigners who pass through France to embark to Havre; 1st to have a passport signed by a French Ambassador; 2d to pay the price of their passage and the amount necessary for their provisions into the hands of the captain of a vessel; 3d to exhibit to the commissionary of Police the sum of 360 francs for each adult and 430 francs for each child under 18. The Belgium government only requires evidence of the possession of 200 francs for each adult, and 160 for each child.—Scott's Weekly.

Accident in Birmingham.—During the illumination last night, a young man in the employment of Henry Metz, had his hand torn to pieces by the explosion of a pistol, which he was in the act of firing.—Pitts Com. Journal.

Henry Dilliver, an old man of 70, who was among the American prisoners at Dartmoor prison in England, during the last war, died at the residence of his son in Somerset Co. N. J. on the 17th ult.

Fire and Loss of Life.—The house of S. Danner, Chambersburgh, Indiana, was consumed on the 16th ult. and three small children perished in the flames. The mother, attempting to rescue them, was also dangerously burned.—N. Y. Sun.

Dreadful Affair.—On Friday night week eleven persons found an untimely grave through sheer heartlessness on the part of the officers and crew of a full rigged ship from Bath, bound to Baltimore. It appears that the brig Rosanna, J. F. B. Brown, captain, of Baltimore, was on her way from Norfolk to Baltimore, loaded with pig iron. When between Rappahannock and Wolf Trap, he was run into by the ship spoken of. Capt. B. says he hailed the ship, but no notice was taken of him, immediately after the brig was struck. He then hailed for assistance, as his vessel was sinking, and was answered he must save himself. His vessel then went down; he saving himself by clinging to a skiff, from which he was saved by a vessel bound to Alexandria. There were twelve persons on board, of which only himself was saved. He gives the names of the crew; John H. Willis, Henry Wright, and Isaiah Johnson, all of Baltimore. The other eight were passengers, one of whom was a child he remembers the names of two of them—Misses Isabella and Jane Jones; both of Baltimore.

Accident.—A man, called by the boatmen "Virginia Dick," was drowned below McKeesport, yesterday morning. He fell off the boat, and all efforts to rescue him proved unavailing, until life was extinct. His real name was not known, nor did the little bundle which he left, contain any thing to clear up the matter. A small pocket testament was in his bundle, but it contained no name.—Pitts. Com. Journal.

Ohio State Finances.—It is gratifying to learn that the state of our Finances are in a more prosperous condition now, then they have been at any time since 1835. The Fund Commissioners already have money in New York, in readiness to pay the interest on our stock as it falls due, upwards of $300,000. This has been placed there out of the regular income of the State. No loans have been made to pay interest—no stock sold at a ruinous discount; or other property seized to satisfy public creditors.—Urbana Citizen.

Death on a Bottle.—Many remember a remarkably powerful man, who performed great feats of address and strength at the circus, named Ellsler. He was killed at the Theatre Porto Cabello. It appears that he was going through with his celebrated feat of standing on his head upon a pyramid of bottles, when one suddenly broke and he fell, killing himself instantly by the fall.

Back Broken.—A man had his back broke last week on the Little Miami Rail-road, at Todd's Fork, Ohio, while stooping to couple two cars of a freight train. Though still living, no hope of his recovery are entertained; how careful every one should be about rail-ways.

Two Men Drowned.—Mr. Belden, a ferryman in Hatfield, Conn., and one of two Germans who were crossing the Connecticut river with him on Wednesday last, were drowned by the boat's capsizing in a squall of wind. Their bodies had not been found on Thursday.—N. Y. Sun. 29 ult.

Starvation.—A careful estimate makes the number of deaths from starvation in Ireland, on the 25th of February, upwards of 36,000. Famine is a gaunt and terrible fiend.

Fatal marine disaster.—The boat of the fishing schooner James Henry of Scituate, Captain Howland, was found capsized off Brewster, Mass., on the 27th inst, and the bodies of five men on the beach. Names of the lost, Capt Elisha Howland, and his son, Charles Howland, Alfred Kelly, mate, and Moses Rogers, of Brewster, and Josiah Chase of Harwich.

A tale of Horror.

Two Thousand Human Beings Slaughtered.

Saunders' News letter of Dublin has the following:

"Ascension," 1st Jan., 1847

"We have just received news of a most horrible message on the coast of Africa. A slave depot, called Gallineos, known to have 2000 slaves ready for shipping, was so strictly blockaded by our cruisers that the slave owners, finding it impossible to embark the slaves, and not wish to the expense of feeding them, actually, in cold blood, beheaded the whole number, placing their heads on poles struck in the beach, saying, 'if you will not allow us to make profit of prisoners we take in war, we will kill all.'"

Two Stage Passengers Killed.—The Montreal stage sleigh, in passing through Royalton, Vermont, on Monday, 22d ult, was slewed from the road into White River, and Capt Leary, on his way from England to take charge of the steamship at Montreal, and a lady of Middlebury were killed. Five others seriously injured.

ACCIDENT & DEATH ON THE PORTAGE RAIL ROAD.

Correspondence of the Pennsylvanian.

HOLLIDAYSBURGH, April 23, 1847.

The "Long Level," between Planes No. 1 and of the Portage Road, was yesterday the scene another accident. The locomotive Bush hill irst her boiler, killing instantly the engineer.
r. Patterson, and scalding the firemen so severe-that his life is despaired of. There is said to ave been a sufficiency of water in the boiler—if t, the boiler was probably defective. The en-ine being an old one, one of the many that have een transplanted from the Columbia Road to his, under the impression, I suppose, that any ing will do for the mountains. The whole end the boiler was blown out—part of which struck
Mr. Patterson, crushing in his skull. Mr. P., it s said, was on his way to his brother-in-law's fu-eral, and intended leaving the engine at the lane for that purpose. The rule forbidding per-ons to ride on the locomotive has been rigidly nforced this season, which has, in all probability, revented others from being involved in this ter-ble calamity.

The Fire Last Night.

Our whole population was thrown into a buz of xcitement last night, by the occurrence of two arge fires—one succeeding the other—in buildgs, used for similar purposes, one in Pittsburgh, nd the other in Allegheny City.

The first was in Alleghany, shortly after dark.
t broke out in Green's Planing Machine Mill, sit-ate on the bank of the canal, immediately above Cedar street, which leads from the Hand street ridge up to the commons. The Mill, a pretty arge frame building, was totally destroyed; as were hree or four small frame houses, occupied as wellings.

This fire was scarcely well out before another was discovered in the Cabinet shop of Messrs Roberts & Kane, on Front st., between West and hort sts., in this city. It may have originated in shop adjoining. At all events it was soon en-eloped in flames, which the wind speedily comunicated to several other buildings, viz:—Jones nd Birkamer's Block shop, Hon. Charles Shaler's welling, James Ellion's Blacksmith shop, and he Paint Shop of Wm. Lees—all of which were otally destroyed. Messrs. R. & K. and Mr. Lees were burned out not long ago. Judge Shaler's fur-nitur e was grea ly dama ed. The fir was so quick his lady and family barely escaped without injury.
We understand there was no insurance on the property lost by this fire—thedamage is several housand dollars.—Pitts. Gaz. May, 1.

ASYLUM FOR COLORED ORPHANS.—A brief no-ice of this noble and flourishing Society will not e uninteresting to our readers. A few years ince, a philanthropic young lady of the Society of Friends, feeling solicious for the welfare of the destitute colored orphan children, projected a plan to rescue them from their helpless and depraved condition. Aided by the contributions of some benevolent citizens, who were inspired by her devotedness and energy, she established a temporary asylum for their reception, and afterwards applied to the corporation and obtained a lot of ground near the first reservoir, in 43d st., and has succeeded in erecting a large and beautiful edifice, with every facility and convenience for the benefit of its inmates. Thus far it has been supported by private liberality, and thousands of poor children have been taken from the filth of gutters, garrets and cellars; washed, clothed and cared for,
and the result has been to reclaim a class of unfortunates who otherwise might have grown up a scourge and curse to our city. There are at present in the Institution 150 children, from 6 months to 14 years old enjoying every comfort of life, every advantage of sound, practical education, and moral training, without sectarianism,—and it cannot fail of making any one who may visit it, clean and beautiful as it is conducted,—and see what the energy of one woman, calling the philanthropy of others into action can do, more hopeful of the regeneration of the age.—N. Y. Sun.

REGRETTED.—Mrs. Walworth, wife of Chancellor Walworth, died at the family residence, Saratoga Springs, on Saturday. She was a most estimable woman.

ENTERPRISING.—Millbury, a little town in Massachusetts, manufactured last year to the amount of $1,000,000. It has 6 cotton mills, 4 woolen mills, 2 paper mills, 3 machine shops for making cotton and other machinery; 2 iron foundries, 1 sash and blind factory, 1 scythe establishment, 1 factory for making bevels, hoes, trowels, hay cutters, &c.; 1 for making railroad cars, 1 for black lead, 1 for tanning leather, beside many small shops. A branch railroad connects it with Boston and Worcester. On Monday last, John Alger, of Douglass, Mass., was drowned in the canal at Millbury.

EXPLOSION.—A locomotive exploded on the Portage Rail Boad, near Holidaysburgh, Pa. on Friday last, killing the Engineer, and scalding the Fireman so badly that his life is despaired of.
—N. Y. Sun.

FOUND DEAD.—Robert Lyon, of Mercer county, Ohio, was found dead in his chamber at the Broadway House, Cincinnati, last week. He was an old man, and probably struck by apoplexy.

ACCIDENT TO THE LAKE ERIE.—During the high wind yesterday morning, the chimnies of the Lake Erie were blown off, and the Captain of a Canal Boat, which she was towing up, was badly injured by one of the chimneys falling on him.

P. S. We have, since writing the above, learned that the person injured is Capt. Brown, of the Canal Boat General Scott. His ribs are broken, and he is otherwise painfully wounded.—*Pitts. Com.
Journal.*

RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—The Philadelphia train on Sunday evening near Elizabethtown, run over a wagon crossing the track. One man was caught by the cow-catcher and not hurt, the other had both legs cut off and cannot live. At all crossings they should use the steam whistle freely.

SCOTCH RELIEF.—While the friends of down trodden and suffering Ireland are raising their thousands to check the famine, those of Scotland are not idle. The Caledonia Relief fund in Cincinnati, for March and April, announce receipts of $5,544,38, and the Committee appointed for its investment, have purchased 1200 bbls. kiln dried corn meal, to go via New Orleans, to Glasgow, to be distributed from thence among the suffering Highlanders. The Scottish relief fund is also accumulating in Philadelphia.

DIED on Saturday Evening at Boston, the Hon.
Martin Brimner, suddenly.

A GOOD OBJECT.—A lot of ground has been purchased in Philadelphia, on which to erect an institution to be called the Robert Raike's Union School. Its object is the same as that of the Ragged Schools, in London. The building will accommodate a thousand children, gathered from the most destitute. God speed the cause.

FRESHETS.—Considerable damage is being done by freshets on the Merrimack and other Eastern rivers.

NEW AND VALUABLE INVENTION.—We have been shown a newly invented mail bag manufactured out of India-rubber, which, from its many excellent qualities, will probably supersede those now in use. The bag is so arranged that when closed it is perfectly air tight, and of course, water-proof.
When filled with letters or any mailing matter, sufficient air introduces itself to render the whole extremely buoyant: and thus in case of accident, such as the sinking of a vessel, the mail bags would always rise to the surface of the water and their contents be kept perfectly dry. Indeed they would also serve as valuable life preservers, for each bag will sustain from two to six persons, according to its size, beside its contents. They are manufactured by Messrs. Rider and Brother, at Harlem, and can be afforded at about the same cost as the leather ones. We hope the Post Master General will lose no time in having them generally introduced, for we feel confident that many of the losses and inconveniences so frequently occurring through damage to the mails by rain and loss of vessels, can thus be easily avoided.—New York Sun.

SHOCKING.—On Friday night week, a full rigged ship ran into the brig Roxana, bound from Bath to Baltimore. The Captain called to the ship for help, but was told to save himself. His vessel went down, and of the twelve on board, he was the only one saved.—New York Sun.

LET OFF CHEAP.—A store-keeper in Camden,
South Carolina, who sold so much liquor to a negro as to kill him, was compelled by law, to pay the full amount of his value.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—A freight and passenger train over the Hudson and Berkshire Railroad fell through a bridge, on Monday last, at East Chatham.
The engine and three freight cars went down and were all smashed to pieces. The passenger cars escaped the calamity. Only one person, a fireman, was injured, and he slightly.

A POWDER MILL, at Hobbs' Powder Works,
Barre, Massachusetts, exploded on Thursday last,
burning 1200 lbs of powder, and killing one man,
George W. Nurse, a native of Clarendon, Vermont, twenty-six years of age. The loss of mill and machinery, about seven hundred dollars.

FRIGHTFUL.—As the Sunday train of the Petersburg railroad was crossing a bridge near Weldon, N. C., the props gave way; and the mail and passenger cars were torn from their wheels and precipitated into the river. No passengers were seriously injured, as the locomotive had crossed the bridge, and held the whole train of wheels suspended.

FRESHET.—The Connecticut river at Windsor, was swollen on Thursday and Friday last to an almost unprecedented height. The water was never higher, according to the 'oldest inhabitant,' save once in 1823.

Three thousand volunteers have already been killed or died in Mexico. In the late war with England only 1334 were killed, and 1673 wounded.

DISTILLERY BURNED.—A distillery at New Richmond, Ohio, after burning, no one knows how many men, was burnt on the 5th ult. The fire communicated to eight dwelling houses, and destroyed them.

There are seventy thousand kernels of corn in a bushel.

Dimensions of the Principal European Churches.

The Roman Advertiser, of December 26th, in an article compiled to show the impossibility of St.
Peter's at Rome, being ever crowded, gives some curious statistics as to the comparative capacity of the most celebrated churches in Europe. We add a column, exhibiting the number of square yards: "Those who attend at St. Peter's during the august ceremonies of Christmas day, might, perhaps, have imagined that temple, in all parts opened to the public during the function, as much crowded as possible. To show the impossibility of St. Peter's being ever crowded, we annex the following statistics of its capabilities, as compared with other great churches, allowing four persons to every quadrate meter [square yard:]

	Persons,	Sq. yd.
St. Peter's,	54,000	13,500
Milan Cathedral,	37,000	9,250
St. Paul's, Rome,	32,000	8,000
St. Paul's London,	24,600	9,400
St. Petronio, Bologna,	24,400	6,100
Florence Cathedral,	24,300	6,075
Antwerp Cathedral,	24,000	5,000
St. Sophia's Constantinople,	23,000	5,750
St. John's Lateran,	22,900	5,725
Notre Dame, Paris,	21,000	5,250
Pisa Cathedral,	13,000	3,250
St. Stephen's Vienna,	12,400	3,100
St. Dominic's, Bologna,	12,000	3,000
St. Peter's, Bologna,	11,400	2,850
Cathedral of Sienna,	11,000	2,750
St. Mark's Venice,	7,000	1,750

The Piazza of Peter's, in its widest limits, allowing twelve [persons] is the quadrat meter [square yard.] holds 624,000; allowing four to the same drawn up in military array, 208,000.
In its narrow limits, not comprising the portico or the Piazza Rusticucci, 474,000 crowded, and 133,000 in military array, to the quadrate meter.

GENERAL DROMGOOLE—One of the Congressmen lately elected in Virginia, has since died after a very short illness. This will leave a vacancy to be filled by a new election.

JOSEPH OLDS—Of Circleville, died on the 27th ultimo, aged 52 years. He had long been a prominent and highly respected citizen of the State of Ohio, and had taken an active part in her public affairs.—Zanesville Gazette.

COLUMBUS POSTMASTER.—We see it stated that SAMUEL MEDARY has been appointed postmaster at Columbus, in the place of JACOB MEDARY, deceased.—Zanesville Gazette.

THE NUMBER OF SLAVEHOLDERS.—In Kentucky where the number of small slave-holders is greater in proportion than in the Southern States, there are, according to the auditor's books, but 31,000 slave-holders, in a population of 275,000 whites, over twenty-one years of age.

The Lutheran Church has one thousand congregations in the United States. One hundred thousand people belong to this denomination.

DENMARK.—The King of Denmark has determined to grant a constitution to his subjects.

MISSIONARIES FOR CHINA.—The Boston Transcript says that Rev. Messrs. E. Doty and J. O.
N. Talmadge sailed from Boston on the 15th inst.,
for China, under the direction of the American Board of Missions, and Rev. Messrs. Judson, D.
Collins, and M. C. White, under the direction of the Methodist Episcopal Board. Previous to sailing, appropriate religious services were held on board the ship Heber, conducted by Bishop Janes and rendered the more interesting by the union of different Christian denominations.—Sabbath Recorder.

JOHN RANDOLPH.—A few years before the death of Mr. Randolph, he was one morning, during the session of Congress, walking from his lodgings in Washington to the Capitol, in order to take his seat in the House. It so happened, that as he passed along the Pennsylvania avenue, he fell into company with Edward Stabler, an eminent minister in the Society of Friends, with whom he was acquainted. As they were passing along the street, they met a wagon in which were crowded a number of colored women and children, followed by twenty or thirty men hand-cuffed and chained together, and guarded by two armed white men on horseback. This spectacle, coming as it did, suddenly before them, produced a strong sensation in them both, and they involuntary stopped until the whole had passed, without a word being spoken by either of them. After a short pause, Edward Stabler remarked:—"This is indeed a shocking spectacle—to be exhibited here,—almost under the shadow of the Capitol of the United States!
We profess to be the advocates of equal rights, and claim to be the first people in the world, and yet we here see before us a number of our fellow-men, without having commited any breach of the laws,
or being charged with any offence whatever, chained like condemned criminals, and driven under the very eyes of the national legislature now in session, like beasts to market!—The nations of Europe have their several ministers and representatives here, who will witness this scene, and who, probably, will make it known to their respective governments. What must people of other nations think of us, when they will learn that in the face of all our boasting professions about liberty, we permit the most odious tyranny and cruel oppression to be openly practised upon millions of our people with impunity?" Randolph remained silent for a minute, and then said, with emphasis:—"Sir,
I do not care what Europe, or what the people of any other country may think or say of us—this is of no consequence, and I wholly disregard it."
He then in a subdued tone, and with much earnestness, added, "But when I reflect upon what God Almighty may think of us, I confess to you that I tremble for my country!"—Baltimore Visiter.

DREADFUL SHIPWRECK.—An emigrant Hamburg ship, while on her passage to Canada, was lost in the Gulf Stream, and dreadful to relate, 160 emigrants of the crew perished. She was called the Stephonie, Capt. Berger, and left Hamburg in October. The master and four of the crew are reported to have been picked up in an open boat by a schooner from New Orleans.—N. Y. Sun.

A fleeting Story.

The following story we heard a short time since from a young female in humane life—an emigrant from Ireland. During the recital, the expression of her fine intellectual face, her fast flowing tears, attested a truth we all admit—that warm hearts and gentle sympathies may exist where the refinements of polished life are wanting. The narrative is in our hands—it has lost, along with the strong accents of her country,
the touching simplicity of her original narration.

"The steerage of our ship was crowded with passengers of all ages, and before we had been long at sea a malignant disease broke out among the children on board. One after another sickened and died, and each was in its turn wrapped in its narrow shroud and committed to the deep, with no requiem but the bursting sigh of a fond mother, and no obsequies but the tears of fathers and brothers and pitying spectators. As they sullenly plunged into the sea, and the blue waves closed over them, I clasped my own babe more strongly to my bosom, and prayed that Heaven might spare my only child. But this was not to be. It sickened, and day by day I saw that its life was ebbing, and the work of death begun. On Friday night it died and to avoid the necessity of seeing what was once so beautiful, and still so dear, given to gorge the monsters of the deep, I concealed its death from all around me. To lull suspicion, I gave evasive answers to those who inquired after it, and folded it in my arms, and sang to it, as if my babe was only sleeping, for an hour when the cold long sleep of death was on it. A weary day and night had passed away, and the Sabbath came. Like others, I wore my neatest dress, and put on a smiling face—but no! it was a heavy task, for I felt that my heart was breaking. On Monday the death of my child could no longer be concealed, but from regard to my feelings the Captain had it enclosed in a rude coffin, and promised to keep it two days for burial, if in that time we should make land. The coffin was placed in the boat which floated at the ship's stern, and through the long hours of night I watched it—a dark speck on the waves, which might shut it from my sight forever. It was then I thought of my dear cottage home, and my native land, and the kind friends I had left behind me, and longed to mingle my tears with theirs.
By night I watched the coffin of my babe, and by day looked for the land—raising my heart in prayer to Him who holds the winds in his hand, that they might waft us swiftly onward. On the third morning, just as the sun had risen, the fog lifted and showed us the green shores of New Brunswick. The ship was laid to, and then the captain with a few men, left, taking the coffin with them. I was not permitted to go, but from deck of the vessel I could see as they dug the grave thick shades of the forest trees, on the edge of a sweet glade, which slooped down the water—and in my heart I blessed them, and prayed that God would reward their kindness to the living and the dead. When they returned on board, the Captain came to me and said: 'My good woman, the place where your son is buried is Greenville, on the coast of Brunswick. I will write it on a piece of paper, that you may know where his remains lie.' I thanked him for his care, but told him the record was already written on my heart, and would remain there till my blest boy and I should meet in a brighter and happier world."

STRIKING HISTORICAL EVENT.—The destruction of the French armament under the Duke D'Anville, in the year 1746, should be remembered with gratitude and admiration by every inhabi-ant of America. This fleet, consisting of forty ships of war destined for the destruction of New England. It sailed from Chebucto, in Nova Scotia, for this purpose. In the meantime, the pious people, apprised of their danger, had appointed a season of fasting and prayer to be observed in all their churches. While Mr. Prince was officiating in Old South Church, Boston, on this fast-day, and praying most fervently that the dreaded calamity might be averted, a sudden gust of wind arose, (the day had till then been perfectly clear and calm,) so violent as to cause a loud chattering of the windows. The reverend pastor paused in his prayer; and looking round upon the congregation with a countenance of hope, he again commenced, and with great devotional ardor, supplicated the Almighty to cause that wind to frustrate the object of their enemies. A tempest ensued, in which the greater part of the French fleet was wrecked. The Duke D'Anville, the principal general, and second in command, both committed suicide. Many died with disease, and thousands were consigned to a watery grave.—
The small number who remained alive returned to France without health and without spirits; and the enterprise was abandoned, and never again resumed.

With reference to this and other similar instances, the late President Dwight remarks, in a discourse on answers to prayer: "I am bound as an inhabitant of New England, to declare, that, were there no other instances to be found in any other country, the blessings communicated to this, would furnish ample satisfaction concerning this subject to every sober, much more to every pious man.—Dr. Wisner.

A SINGULAR LIFE PRESERVER.—The following singular circumstances we copy from "Scott's Recollections of a Naval life." A marine, who had just joined the ship, and who was unacquainted with the excellent qualities of the dog, endeavored while bathing to entice him from his station into the water. The noble animal paid no attention to his invitation. One of the crew told the marine that if he swam out of the sail, and would call out as if in distress, and suit the action to the word, Mr. Boatswain would certainly obey his summons. The marine took the hint, got out of the sail, and began to enact the part of a drowning man to perfection. The dog instantly sprung into the water, with his ears erect, his eyes flashing fire from intense anxiety, away he swam for the soldier, who, on the approach of his canine friend, began to have some misgiving as to the wisdom of his proceedings. He now become alarmed lest the dog should seize, which manœuvre Boatswain appear resolved to execute. His fears increased with the dog's endeavors to affect his purpose; and finally he roared out most lustily for help from his shipmates. The louder the poor fellow sung out, the more determined was the sagacious brute to seize him, and he very soon accomplished his purpose, grasping him firmly by the hair, at the back of the neck, and twisting his face towards the heavens, brought him along side amidst the convulsive roars of laughter of the whole of the ship's company and the piteous cries of the jolly marine. Boatswain would not resign his hold till the frightented man was assisted up the side; the bite of a rope being then placed over board for his conductor, he placed his fore legs in it up to his shoulders, and holding himself stiffly out, was hauled up, and calmly resumed his watch as if nothing had happened.

A PLEASANT (?) BED-FELLOW.—I was awakened last night by a violent storm of thunder and lightning, and wind and rain. Hard dreaming as I was, I had sense enough to feel something moving in the bed, and by the light from a flash of lightning, to my unspeakable horror, I saw crawling over the matrass, a cobra de capello, (the most venomous of serpents.) He reared his head when he came to my body, and slowly crawled on to my leg; and, as there was nothing over me but a thin cotton sheet, I could distinctly feel the cold, clammy body of the venemous reptile through the sheet.

The heat of my body seemed agreeable to the monster, as he coiled himself up there. I lay dead still. I knew my life depended on my remaining motionless; for, had I moved a leg or arm he would instantly have bitten me, after which I could not have lived many minutes. A cold sweat ran in a stream down my back; I was in an agony of terror. Home and friends, and all that was dear to me, rushed to the memory; my whole life passed in review before me. I saw no way of escape, and I considered my doom sealed; every flash of lightning showed me my bed-fellow in all his loathsomeness. Well, there the reptile lay, but how long no one knows; to me the time appeared interminable. When I had lain in one position about three hours, my legs became sore and stiff, from having been so long motionless; and at this time I gave an involuntary shudder, which attracted the notice of the reptile. He raised his head about a foot high, thrust out his forked tongue, and looked around him, as if for some living object to prey upon. I now thought it was all over with me. I prayed mentally (for I dare not move my lips for fear of attracting notice) for the forgiveness of my sins, when, Heaven be praised, the reptile unfolded his coils, and crawled slowly away from off my limbs, on to the bed, down by the bed-post to the floor, and then left me. It has been said poverty makes a man acquainted with strange bed-fellows; it might be added, so does wandering in a foreign clime.—A Journal of a Wanderer.

NOTICES.

Driftwood Mission, Indiana, April 19, 1847.

BROTHER BASSETT: We are placed in rather an awkward position, on this little Mission, in consequence of being left without any pastoral care. The Superintendent, Brother Sevier, left for home, about the first of January, with appointments out, and we have not heard of him since.— Whether he has been called home to his reward, where the weary are at rest, or prevented by sickness of himself or family, we do not know, nor can we hear. If this should meet his eye, or that of any other person that can give information, they will please let us know by letter or otherwise.

We are in a cold state on this Mission, at this time. Religion appears to be almost extinct with many that, not long since, were warm professors. J. M. BYARLAY.

TANNER'S CREEK CIRCUIT, IA. CON.—The third quar.
meeting is to embrace the 5th Saturday and Sunday of May next. Ministerial aid is most ardently solicited.
Mt. Pleasant, Meeting House is the place.

W. W. PAUL.

Martinsburgh Mission, Muskingum District.—Our third
Quarterly Meeting is appointed on the 8th and 9th of May.
It will be at the Old Acre Church, three miles South of Martinsburg; to which I would invite, of the unemployed
Brethren, the Honored Joseph Thrap, and Joel, his Son:
The Venerable C. Springer, the Rev. P. Inskeep, and A.
Channell. And to the engaged workmen of Israel, let me say, not wishing to hinder you who are or should be at your fields, already white or ripe for harvest, if you can come, Brethren, come and help. Men of Israel, help.

Yours, &c., J. K. DUFFY.

Woodsfield Circuit, Muskingum Conference.—Brother
Clancy is requested to attend our third Quarterly Meeting, three miles South of Woodsfield, to be held in Jackson School House, the last Sabbath in May. Call with Isaac
Pearce. We are getting along in harmony and peace.

H. T. LAWSON.

Zanesville Circuit.—Our third Quarterly Meeting will be held at Claylick, commencing, May 22d. Brother Kinney is invited; Brother Munhall is engaged, and Brothers Bassett, Nicols, and Remsburg, have been invited, but have not definitely responded. C. S. CALLIHAN.

ANNUAL SERMON.—The Annual Sermon in behalf of the American Sunday-school Union, will be preached on Sunday Evening, May 16th, at the Church on Washington Square, by Rev. GEORGE W. BETHUNE, D. D. Service to commence at ¼ before 8 o'clock.

ANNUAL MEETING.—The services commemorative of the TWENTY-THIRD anniversary of the American Sunday-school
Union, will be attended at the MUSICAL FUND HALL, Locust Street, between Eighth and Ninth Streets, Philadelphia, on Monday Evening, May 17th.

☞ To avoid confusion and disappointment, tickets will be issued, as in former years, and may be obtained at any time after May 10th, at the Society's buildings, No. 146 Chestnut street, or of any of the Officers or Managers of the Institution.

NEWARK CIRCUIT.—Our third Quarterly Meeting will be held at Elizabethtown, (Perryton,) Licking county, commencing, May 28th. Brothers Case and Bassett are invited; and Brothers Ragan, Marshall, and J. Thrap, are engaged to be in attendance. W. MAYNARD.

PENNVILLE CIRCUIT. Musk. Con.—Our third quarterly meeting will be held at Mt. Pisgah, commencing, May 20th. The brethren at this place have a meeting house well nigh finished, and intend to have it completed for this meeting, at which the dedication will take place. Br. W.
Hatfield is expected to attend according to promise. And we invite any other brethren, either travelling or local, who can make it convenient to attend and help us. And we solicit the prayers of all whether present or absent.

C. J. SEARS.

Bucyrus Circuit, Musk. Conference.—Our next Quarterly Meeting will be held at Everhart's School House, commencing, May 29th. To this meeting we respectfully invite Brs. G. R. Bowman, J. Jack, I. Thrap, G. M. Scott, and J. Sow-der. Please remember, I am alone, and need help.
Come, by all means.

A. S. ROBINSON

Delaware Circuit, Muskingum Conference.—
Our third Quarterly Meeting will be held in the neighborhood of Br. Langwell's, three miles south of Eden, commencing the last Saturday in May, (29th.) To this meeting we invite T. Potter, S. Catlin, S. Lancaster, A. K. Earl, A. S.
Robinson. We have no ordained Elder on this Circuit, and have sustained some disadvantage on account of it. I give notice at this early period, that the brethren may have time to arrange their business and attend. Don't fail to come.

Brother D. R. Helmick, we thank you for the correction in the case of J. O. H. In our 5th number, he is credited, per Brother Springer, for Volume 7. Therefore our claim is only for one-fourth of Volume 8. We are always glad to make any correction, as we wish all things right.

Brother T. Shipp, the payment sent by Brother H. C. was just the amount of our claim. However, we will be pleased to send him the paper 3 months at your suggestion.

Brother J. S. Hudson, what is the address of your friend
Wm. Wilson? The package is not yet sent him.

Brothers C. J. Sears and O. V. Warren will look for their lot of books at N. Springer's or at the Collector's Office.

Brother W. Remsburg, your lot of books is in waiting, at O. White's.

POETRY.

Written for the Western Recorder.

The Orphan.

Once I had a cheerful home,
Friends beloved and parents dear;
Now an orphan all alone,
'Reft of all I cherished here.

Sheltered by a sylvan wood,
Where the tuneful birds would sing,
There our lowly cottage stood,
And with joy the walls would ring.

Winding slow before our door,
Flowed a little babbling stream;
Oft I cull'd the lovely flower,
Blooming on its margin green.

Ran I o'er the verdant hill—
Step as light as mountain air—
Blithely as the laughing rill,
Free from life's corroding care.

Meek my Mother—like the dove—
Pure as a bright summer day,
Or the stars that shine above,
Singing on their azure way.

Kindly would she cheer the poor,
Wipe away the orphan's tear,
When they sought her friendly door,
Sighed around their parent's bier.

Death, alas! soon laid his hand,
On her kind and gentle brow;
Passed she to the spirit land,
Left am I an orphan now.

'Neath the drooping willow's shade,
Where her cherished ones did sleep,
Was her lowly pillow made,—
There no head reclines to weep.

Desolation reigns supreme—
Silent is the cottage hall;
In the garden, on the green,
Now the stranger's footsteps fall.

In the solitude of night,
Weep I oft beside her tomb;
By the moon's pale silver light,
Shining through the solemn gloom.

Sighing now for her that's gone,
Weeping o'er her memory,
Gloomy in the world, alone,
None have I to comfort me.

In a world of selfishness,
Who will hear the orphan's sigh?
Who will soothe his deep distress,
Wipe the tear drop from his eye.

Floating on life's turbid river,
Will a star of friendship's beam,
Shine upon my pathway ever,
As I sail adown the stream?

Yet with joy my heart shall wake,
Though deep sorrows fill my cup:
Man the orphan may forsake,
But the Lord will take him up.

Spring.

Now 'tis Spring, yes, 'tis Spring,
Hark to the pretty birds, how they sing,
They make the woods and forest ring
With their tuneful lay.
See the red-bird and the thrush,
How they hop from bush to bush,
While dame Nature seems to push
All things up so gay.

Watch that tiny flowret rise,
To hail the warbler as it flies
And soars and mounts up to the skies,
To sing its Maker's praise.
All nature seems so bright and gay,
Since dreary winter's passed away,
The merry lambkins skip and play,
In the warm sun's rays.

See the purling streamlet flow,
Through the orchard and meadow,
See the pebbles down below,
Sparkling on the ground.
Now the flowers shoot up their head,
From out old dreary winter's bed;
Soon their fragrance they will shed,
On all around.

Summer, too, will soon be here,
To fling its garland on the bier
Of stern old winter; and to cheer
Our drooping spirits up.
The life-blood courses through our heart,
And seems to give our pulse a start,
It surely has the healing art
In its bright cup.

Then Autumn, too, with outstretched arms,
Will soon be here with all its charms,
And amply fill store-house and barns,
With all its sweets.
Now its fruits, how bright and mellow,
The green leaves turn red or yellow,
While each good and social fellow,
His neighbor greets. [SOPHIE.

MRS. SUSANNAH ROGERS.

Mr. Editor: For the first time since I commenced my itinerant labors am I called upon to record the ravages of death among the different flocks over which I have from year to year had the oversight. He has entered our fold and taken from our communion, Sister Susannah Rogers, consort of Brother George Rogers. She departed this life on the 13th instant, after an illness of six or eight weeks, in which she made manifest to all with whom she conversed, that the grace of God was sufficient to sustain her, even though passing the vale of death. Sister Rogers was born in this (Crawford) county, January 2, 1825, of respectable parents, belonging to the Friends. She was of course, a member of that Society, and filled her place with dignity till her marriage, when by that act she became disconnected therefrom. After the lapse of one year, it pleased God, through the instrumentality of a protracted meeting held by Brother Case, while travelling this circuit, to translate her and her husband from the power of Satan unto God. Since that time she has lived so as to teach all with whom she was conversant that she was but a pilgrim on earth. She was a meek and lowly christian, an ornament to the class with which she was connected. In her sickness I had the pleasure of being with her, and witnessing her christian fortitude, in suffering the will of her Master. Her language to her husband continually was, 'Weep not for me—all is well.' At one time she called him to her bed, and bade him farewell with as much composure as if she was going on a visit. The morning she departed, when unable to converse, Brother Rogers said to her, 'We will soon be parted.' She answered, 'Yes.' I then said to her, 'Susannah, you will soon be with Jesus.' She uttered, 'Yes,' and tried to continue, but could not be understood. Thus died our beloved sister. She has left a numerous circle of friends to mourn her absence, among which are a beloved companion and two children. But why weep?—their loss is her gain. I would say to Brother Case, that the same heavenly-mindedness which was manifested at her spiritual birth when she embraced Christ, was manifested at her departure.

MRS. MATILDA HARRIS.

Mr. Editor: I again take up my pen to record the ravages of death. He has torn from the embraces of the family and church, Sister Matilda Harris, consort of Cuthbert Harris. She died on the 19th instant, in the triumphs of saving faith. Sister H. was born October 9, 1809, in Bedford co., Pennsylvania, of respectable parents, but not favorable to religion. She therefore had not the advantages of religious training. She was married at the age of 26, and removed to this State and county, in the fall of 1838. Sister H. was the subject of many afflictions, which she bore for years, without an interest in Christ, but in the fall of 1841, or '42, when Br. Burnet travelled this circuit, it pleased the Lord to call her and her husband to turn from sin. They obeyed the voice, and at a protracted meeting held by Brother B., on Broken Sword, at the old school-house, noted as the place of so many conversions, it pleased the Lord in answer to prayer, to adopt them into his family, from which time sister H. lived so as to adorn the doctrine of God her Savior, and to show that she sought a city that hath foundations. In health she was a pattern of piety. The writer frequently visited her when on her death bed, and always found her in a calm and composed state. At one time after prayer, weak as she was, she could be heard for some distance, praising God, and exhorting all in the house. I asked her if her way was clear. She answered, there was not a cloud to darken her sky. She had given up all earthly things, and was very desirous to be absent from the body, and to be present with Christ. The night before her departure, she conversed freely with her husband. She said she was ready, and then broke out in a strain of prayer for her husband and children, that God would keep them, and bring them to her. She then tried to sing, but could not. About 6 o'clock on Monday morning, she requested to have her bed fixed. It was done. When she was laid upon it again, she said, O, good Lord, take me to rest, and in less than five minutes she was gone to her long desired rest.

THE DEVIL.

The subject of the existence of created intelligences called devils, on various occasions, has excited no small amount of controversy. Certain persons seem to be greatly embarrassed about the manner in which the devils came into existence. From their enmity against God and all moral goodness, they are led to the conclusion to which Manes appears to have anciently arriven; that is, that there are two eternal principles in existence, one only good, and the other only evil; not considering that a being, or beings, which were once morally good, may become morally bad, by an abuse of their powers. This has been the case with man himself; he was created with moral purity, and was endowed with all the powers requisite to enable him, voluntarily, to perform the duties obligatory upon him; but he abused his powers—violated the law under which he was placed by his benevolent Creator, and forfeited his claims to the Divine favor, and became morally corrupt. These angels, we have the best reasons to believe, were, by the Lord, created perfectly good and holy. That there can be but One Eternal Being, who is intelligent, it seems to me, the scriptures decide to be true. All things in existence were either created, or they have existed from eternity. Whatever has existed from eternity cannot be dependent for its existence, for it must necessarily exist; and, consequently, would be under no moral obligations, if intelligent, to render an account to any other being for its conduct; unless we suppose a stronger arbitrary power has subjugated it, and thus compelled it to answer for its conduct, which no good being, possessing superior power, would ever attempt. God, our Heavely Father, is not, as the slothful servant accused his Lord of being a hard man, taking up that he laid not down, and gathering where he had not strowed; but He is a just and good Being; hence, he would not call these to account to him in the day of judgment, unless He was the author of their existence, and they had, from him, received all their powers. The scriptures say, For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment. 2. Peter II. 4. And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains, under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day. Jude, 6. It is here definitely shown that these evil spirits are held responsible for their conduct.

To deny that God created the fallen angels, is to deny the authenticity of the scriptures; for these, in numerous places, declare that God created all things, both visible and invisible; and that, All things were made by him. John, 1. 3. These fallen angels are things; hence, they were made by our Creator. A great difficulty with some appears to be, how to account for any criminal actions taking place in the holy abode of the Most High. How, say they, can sin enter heaven? This difficulty may, in a great degree, have its origin in a misconception of heaven, as it respects these spirits; for where God the Lord approbates, and dwells in his rational creatures, there, to them, is heaven. While these angels were obedient to the law of their Creator, wherever they might be, throughout unlimited space, to them was heaven; but, after they had voluntarily transgressed they were in hell, no difference in what portion of God's dominions. There have been various conjectures what particular action these angels performed, when they fell under the just displeasure of the Deity. Some have supposed one thing, and some another; but since God has not deemed it important for us to know, and has not seen proper to reveal it to us, we must content ourselves to remain ignorant of the precise action; still, we may so nearly approach the matter as to say, all the rational creation of God, must, necessarily, be required to exercise voluntarily, all of their powers in his service; and the goodness of God will require that they should have a known law, suitable to their capacity, or moral power. All creatures who have the power, of choice, to do well, must, at the same time, have the power to refuse obedience to the Divine law. These angels then since they are intelligent, must have been under law to God—they had the power, voluntarily, to obey, but in some particular case, or cases, they of choice, refused obedience to the law under which, while holy, they were placed by their father and God; and thus forfeited his favor, and rendered themselves justly worthy of the infliction of the penalty annexed to the law. Thus far may we go, but I believe, no nearer can any man advance towards precisely determining what action they done to cause their fall. I have taken for granted that such creatures as devils exist; though there are some, who step forward, and boldly declare that there are no other devils in existence than the evil propensities, or appetites of which men are possessed. I conclude this ground is assumed, not because it is not plainly revealed in the word of God that there are devils, but because an admission, on their part, of the existence of creatures who are now enduring the displeasure of the Deity, would entirely spoil a favorite system which they have espoused. I suppose there are few possessed of so great an amount of effrontery, as to assert that either good or evil propensities, or appetites, have intelligence, and that they can hold conversation with the Divine Being, or with men and women; as is most clearly shown that these did, from the book of Job, 1. 7–12. and by Gen. III. 1. 5. All propensities, or appetites of which men and women are possessed, have only a relative existence and can only exist in a suitable subject; so that if any man was instantly annihilated, all the propensities, or appetites of which he was possessed, at the same moment would cease to exist. And if any propensity, or appetite of which any person is in the possession, was, by any means, removed from the individual, so that it no longer was in any way, associated with the person, at the precise period in which the appetite &c., was removed, it would most certainly cease to have, a state of being. If this is granted to be in accordance with truth, then most clearly there are creatures called devils, which have an identity when seperated from every other creature in the universe. It will be recollected when the Lord Jesus visited the country of the Gadarenes, a man, who was possessed of many devils, spent his time among the tombs, and no man could bind him. The devils, of which this man was possessed, besought the Saviour not to send them out of the country, but to suffer them to enter into a great herd of swine, which was near the mountains feeding; and the Lord gave them leave to go; and the unclean spirits went out, and entered into the swine. Here, then, are creatures which existed after they had left the man whom they had possessed, and before they reached the swine, for no difference how short the period and space, it must have required time to pass from one to the other and they must have by the space between, been separated from the man and the swine, while passing through it. That they existed after they left the man, and that they entered into the swine is obvious; for swine do not act, when uninfluenced, as these swine acted. These rushed down a steep place into the sea, and were drowned. If one position is true that no propensity, or appetite can exist, only while connected with a suitable subject, and only has—a relative existence, since the devils which were cast out of this man did exist in a seperate state, then, these were not propensities, or appetites, but real beings, called devils, which were cast out of this man who had his dwelling among the tombs. Hence, real creatures, or spirits, exist, which must have fallen from a state of holiness, since it cannot reasonably be supposed, that the Holy Lord God, would create any beings, and impart to them a nature directly opposed to his own.

What number of devils there are, or at what period they fell from their original state of holiness and happiness, we are uninformed; but that they did leave their own habitation is clear. Some have supposed there is but one devil; and then have puzzled themselves to determine how this one devil could pass from point to point so rapidly, as almost incessantly, to harrass the many millions of individuals of men and women in the world. As already said, we possess no definite knowledge of the number of devils; though the Bible represents them to be numerous; still if we suppose an evil spirit to pass with telegraphic speed, and who will say it cannot, then one devil could visit many, in a very short period; then allow the same speed to the legions of which the word of God speaks, and there would be but small difficulty in each visiting a great number of persons, and to attend on them for a considerable length of time. It is, however, of far greater importance to us to be able to decide when, and at what particular weak point these, our enemies assail us; and to be able to resist the devil that he may flee from us, then clearly to comprehend the manner in which he, or they manage to approach us and our fellow men. The grand business of these, our adversaries, is to cause us to rise too high in our own estimation, or so to depress us, as to cause us to cast away our confidence in God. It will be found, though the enemy's assaults are greatly diversified, a great portion of them will concentrate in one or the other of these points. The weak points of individuals, are almost as numerous as they are themselves; yet, whenever the devil assails any one, to entice him to indulge in his besetting sin, his object is, no doubt, to cause him to become discouraged—despair of pardon—cast away all confidence in the Lord Jesus, return again to folly, and conclude he can never hold out to the end of his life, in the service of God. If he cannot thus succeed, then a smooth sea is presented; he persuades the man that he is outstripping his fellow christians,—making most rapid advancements; that he prays most delightfully—preaches to admiration; and it will be but a short time until he will leave all his seniors far in the rear. When he can in this way, raise a man to the pinnacle, how easy to cast him down headlong? J. H.

From the Baltimore Patriot.

The Potato Rot—Scab in Wheat, etc.

Mr. Monroe:—In the Patriot of Saturday I observe a paragraph, copied from the London Economist, relating a remarkable prophecy of the eccentric Cobbet, on the subject of the Potatoe, viz:—

"The Potato will not last more than twenty years, when it will work itself out."

This prophecy is said to have been uttered by this great oracle in 1826, with various other remarks on the potato—"dirty weed," &c. &c. I do not believe that Cobbet ever uttered or entertained such a sentiment. But suppose he did—what of it?

Permit me to give my opinion in relation to the potato rot. It is nothing more than the disease that has always affected the potato in a small way. Every body has had a few rotten potatoes. It was, like all other maladies, affecting a few here and there every year. But in 1812 it became an epidemic, and spread rapidly. As an epidemic it commenced near Utica, in the middle of the State of New York. Its progress was so rapid that in 1843 we had it in Baltimore county, and various other parts of the country. In November, 1743, I examined it and found it to be a fungus, and so stated to the Patriot of the 17th of that month. I then also, to individuals, gave it as my opinion that the disease had become epidemic; that it would spread over the whole world where potatoes were cultivated; that it would last from five to seven years, and then disappear. In 1844 and 1845, the rot had appeared in every portion of the continent, with very small exceptions.—In 1845 and 1846, I urged many persons to provide for this contingency, assuring them that the disease would appear in Ireland in 1845: that in 1846 it would be very destructive to that crop in various parts of Europe; recommending that attention should be paid to providing substitutes, as there would unquestionably be a great demand for human subsistence, from America. I recommended that large quantities of potatoes would be planted in those districts in which the disease first appeared, as in 1846 it would have measurably subsided, to supply the place of the corn and other headstuffs that would necessarily have to be drawn from us to supply the place, in Europe, of the potato. I doubt not fifty gentlemen can tell you that I made these remarks to them.

You see the end of the prophecy—do you not? But the object of this paper is to throw a little oil on the troubled waters. I can hardly take up a paper that has not some doleful predictions of the utter extinction of the potato as human food. This I wish to combat. We have panics enough, in all conscience, without one that involves so great a calamity—so wonderful an abandonment by the God of Nature of the pasture of his flock.

Have we not seen the Hessian fly spread from Long Island, in New York, from the British army, during the Revolution, pervading the whole country, and often sweeping whole fields of wheat? Is not wheat cultivated yet, and increasing in cultivation and production, and yet abundantly supplied, notwithstanding, is it not? A few years ago, the Sycamore Trees, from Maine to Georgia, were all afflicted with the peculiar disease, which most people supposed would exterminate them. That disease, not known to have been caused by an insect, has passed away—and the sycamores are as beautiful as ever.

The Elm Insect, some ten years ago, made its appearance upon those trees in Philadelphia and caused the destruction of those beautiful and venerated old trees, that had sheltered from the ardent rays of the sun and the storm the children of Penn for hundreds of years. But that insect has passed away, and now those who cut them down regret that they had not waited a little longer before putting the axe to them. In our own city, when this insect appeared here, many persons cut down their elm trees—others more patient under a peculiar law or order of Nature, let them stand till they withered in the tempest's blast, applying such preventatives and curatives as the case required, and they are now in possession of their fine elms, as good as ever. These are illustrations of the progress and consequence of the rot in the potato. There is no single instance on record of any vegetable having been extirpated, or "worked itself out." The idea is unphilosophical, unscientific, almost doubting the favor and benevolence of Him who has promised "seed-time and harvest." Instead of the potato, —the "dirty weed"—having been or even becoming a curse to Ireland, it has been one of the greatest blessings that was ever conferred upon that or any other people. Need I say a word in illustration of this?

But next year will be the great year in all Europe, where the potato is cultivated—that year will be the climax, the disease will pervade generally, if not universally. So far as the potato is concerned there will be great scarcity of human food, and America will be drawn upon heavily for supplies of all kinds of breadstuffs. It behooves our farmers to prepare for this state of things, for it will come.

The Wheat Crop must also be looked to. I am not a dealer in wheat, nor interested in it other than as an eater of bread. But the Scab will be found to effect the crop of 1847 to such an extent that a great scarcity of good flour will prevail. The scab is also an epidemic at times.—It will spread over the whole of this country in 1847, '48; will appear in Europe this year and in 1848, & spread over the whole of that continent. It will follow the usual course of all vegetable epidemics, from west to east—that is, it commences in America and will reach the eastern world. Nearly, if not all, animal epidemics commence in the east and progress westwardly, as in the case of the Cholera. When the scab shall have run its course, then the wheat crop will be relieved of its baneful effect—1847 will be the climax in America. In 1848 there will be some of it more or less; in 1849 it will disappear; one year later in all these dates will be the time of its progress in Europe. But let no one despair. The potato and wheat and corn, and all other kinds of human and animal food will be preserved, and continue their abundant supplies of human food. Yours,

GIDEON B. SMITH.

The Crucifixion.

Bound upon the accursed tree,
Faint and bleeding—who is He?
By the eyes so pale and dim,
Streaming blood, and writhing limb,
By the flesh with scourges torn,
By the crown of twisted thorn,
By the side so deeply pierced,
By the hallow, burning thirst,
By the drooping, death-dew'd brow,
Son of Man! 'tis Thou, 'tis Thou!

Bound upon the accursed tree,
Dread and awful—who is He,
By the sun at noon-day pale,
Shivering rocks, and rending veil,
By earth that trembles at his doom,
By yonder saints who burst their tomb,
By Eden promised, ere he died,
To the felon at his side,
Lord! our suppliant knees we bow;
Son of God! 'tis Thou! 'tis Thou!

Bound upon the accursed tree,
Sad and dying—who is He?
By the last and bitter cry,
The ghost given up in agony;
By the lifeless body laid,
In the chambers of the dead;
By the mourners come to weep,
Where the bones of Jesus sleep:
Crucified! we now thee know—
Son of Man! 'tis Thou! 'tis Thou!

Bound upon the accursed tree,
Dread and awful—who is He?
By the prayer for them that slew—
"Lord! they know not what they do!"
By the spoil'd and empty grave,
By the souls he died to save,
By the conquest he hath won,
By the saints before his throne,
By the rainbow round his brow—
Son of God! 'tis Thou! 'tis Thou!

Provinces.—Somebody has said, that "he who observes provinces shall have provinces enough to observe." We have never seen a more striking illustration of the truth of this, than is furnished by the following incident connected with the American Tract Society:—

"A few weeks ago, twenty men presented themselves in the course of a few days, to the American Tract Society as colporteurs. The Society had no funds appropriated to their support, but as they appeared to be good men the committee supposed that a sufficient indication of their duty, and employed them all. Not long afterwards the Society received a letter from a Southern merchant, stating that a friend had given him, whilst at the North, one of the Society's books, which he put in his trunk, thinking little of it until he arrived at a Southern city, when having leasure he read it. The perusal of of the book wrought a great revolution in his opinions and feelings, and he determined to devote a considerable amount of money for the distribution of the books. He did not however learn how his design could be accomplished until a colporteur came across his path, with these books for sale. The merchant stated his desire, and the colporteur explained to him the Society's plan of distributing books by colporteurs. This plan he said was just what he desired, and he had therefore determined to support TWENTY colporteurs, if the Society could find the men.—The Secretary of the society wrote immediately to the merchant, announcing to him the remarkable coincidence between their wants and his liberality. In reply the merchant pledged himself for the support of these twenty men for four years The amount of the pledge is twelve thousand dollars."

Horse Story.

A writer in the Boston Courier tells the following anecdote of a horse. The incident occurred in a town adjoining this city.

A butcher, my neighbor, recently went to a pasture where the family horse was usually turned when idle, to get a calf which he had purchased for slaughter. Finding difficulty in otherwise catching him, he set a large bull-dog upon the calf, which soon brought him to the ground, uttering the most piercing cries. The horse, which till now had seemingly paid no attention, aroused by the cries of distress, no sooner perceived the perilous condition of his helpless companion, than with ears raised, jaws distended, main and tail erect, he hastened to his relief!

The dog still continued his hold, despite the threatening aspect of the horse, when the noble fellow, fastening his teeth upon the dog, with one toss threw him completely over an adjacent fence! Meanwhile the butcher had approached so near as to catch hold of the calf as he was rising, which the horse perceiving he turned upon him with his heels every time still nearer the butcher's head, until he was glad to relinquish his hold. With what a proud and exultant air he pranced around his liberated charge, with head and tail erect, snorting defiance to all oppressors! In fact, before the butcher could secure his subject, he had first to secure this champion in the stable.

MEMORIA TECHNICA:

Or, the Art of Abbreviating those Studies which give the greatest labor to the Memory; including Numbers, Historical Dates, Geography, Astronomy, Gravities, &c.; also Rules for Memorizing Technicalities, Nomenclatures, Proper Names, Prose, Poetry, and Topics in general.—Embracing all the available Rules found in Mnemonics or Mnemotechny of Ancient and Modern Times. To which is added a Perpetual Almanac for Two Thousand Years of Past Time and Time to Come. Adapted to the use of Schools. By LORENZO D. JOHNSON. Second edition, revised and improved.—Boston.

PRICE—50 CENTS.

In presenting to the public the "Memoria Technica," which, in some respects, may be said to contain a new theory of instruction, the publishers beg leave to call the attention of Teachers, School Committees, and others interested in education, the peculiar merits of the work. It has been already introduced into several of our best and most popular schools in Boston and vicinity, and has also received high commendation from many of our most distinguished clergymen and other literary men who have examined it.

Notices of the Press.

'This system of Mnemotechny, differing considerably from the one introduced by Prof. Gouraud, is designed to furnish all the rules for aiding the memory without lessening mental culture, which can be made available during a course of elementary study. The illustrations may be easily comprehended by any person of ordinary mental capacity, and the application of the principle upon which the system is based must necessarily furnish an agreeable and useful exercise to the mind. It is well adapted to common school instruction, and may be made a very profitable study, if rightly pursued. Every page of the work gives evidence of a desire to present the laws of association distinctly & clearly, so as to enable the learner to establish such relations between things, events, &c., as will aid the memory. We commend the book to teachers and all interested in this important subject.'—N. Y. Teachers' Advocate.

'The art of improving the memory is surely a very important one, and whoever contributes any thing to further this end, certainly renders an important service to the public. Mr Johnson, we believe, has succeeded in bringing his system of mnemonics into such a practicable form, as will render it an essential aid to all who do not naturally have a great power of memory.'—Ch. Witness

'This is a treatise on artificial memory prepared for the use of schools. The subject is a curious one, and worthy of attention.'—Boston Recorder.

'This system of mnemonics, being the first work of the kind ever prepared for the use of schools, and being so arranged and simplified that any one of ordinary capacities may easily acquire a knowledge of its principles, is certainly worthy of examination and study. It is most emphatically an aid to the memory, and as such, is well adapted to common school instruction. We heartily commend it to public notice, while we hope that Mr. Johnson will receive the reward due to his industry and perseverance by seeing this work extensively introduced into our schools, public and private.'—Tem. Standard.

'The author promises to endow his pupils with an infinite faculty of memory. If he can do it without too much trouble on the part of the recipients, he will do a good thing, and as far as we can judge, he seems likely to accomplish it. While his system is much more simple than any we have before examined, it contains a great deal more. Moreover, it makes the thing a matter of practical education, within the reach of all.'—Chronotype.

'There are minds of a certain class that, are wont to be interested in mnemonics, and we doubt not that such may find valuable assistance in a work of this kind.—N. E. Puritan.

'The book, although designed and adapted to the use of schools, is nevertheless worthy the attention of all persons who wish to assist or strengthen memory.'—N. E. Washingtonian.

'A very ingenious and useful book, designed to shorten the labor of those studies which require the exercise of the memory, by a system of memorizing.'—Reading Gazette, Pa.

We feel no hesitation in recommending this work to the deliberate attention of teachers, and the guardians of youth. We learn that it is received into several of the schools in Boston, and used as an auxiliary help to the studies now pursued by the pupils.'—Boston Courier.

'We noticed the first edition of this book a short time since, and in addition to what we then said, will only say now, that it is prepared by one who has paid great attention to the subject, and who has been employed to teach his system by some of our most experienced teachers and wisest men.'—Ch. Register.

'We have given the work a partial examination, sufficient to become convinced that the subject is one of importance.'—Ch. Watchman.

The Memoria Technica is now studied in some of our best schools; and the system taught in it appears to be much approved by those who have made trial of it.'—Evening Traveller.

The work contains a vast amount of important facts and useful information; which, aside from its value as a system of instruction, render it, as has been justly said by many who have examined it, well worth the price of the work as a mere book of reference. Published by

LETTER NO. II.

THE IMPARTIAL BLESSINGS OF CHRISTIANITY.

Sir:—Christianity recognizes but one requirement for happiness and honor, and, that is holiness. The more holiness is followed and enjoyed, the greater the amount of happiness possessed. As the sun that sheds his refulgent beams, giving life, and light, and heat to the systems of which he is the great centre; so Christianity shines and warms, and gives light and life to the vast multitudes of human beings, existing upon this or any other planet, of which it is the divine centre. Like the rain that falls upon the thirsty ground, and the dew upon the blossoms and the flowers, it waters and refreshes every thirsty soul, imparting greenness, vigor, beauty, life. Impartial in its operations, it blesses alike, when equally devoted, the king on his throne and the peasant in his cot; shedding a halo of glory around the poor cottier's fireside as well as in the prince's royal palace. Formerly the gods delighted, according to mythology, in quaffing nectar on Mount Olympus, or Thessaly, while Apollo strung and touched his golden lyre, ravishing their ears with notes of sublimest melody, and the muses sung in sweet responsive strains. Now mortals, beggars, slaves, quaff nectar of a richer flavor, and listen to paeans of more exalting rapture, than ever moistened the lips of Olympian deities, or floated on the breezes of Thessalian heights. There is no distinction manifested in the impartations of its blessings—no chosen spirit, as laid down in the world's vocabulary, selected to receive and enjoy its divine and heavenly influences. The throne of Israel was occupied by a shepherd king; and the poor beggar, Lazarus, who sat at the rich man's gate an object of pity and compassion, was lodged by angels in Abraham's bosom.

Christianity enjoins upon all its followers brotherly love, terms them brothers in Christ, brothers of the Lord Jesus, members of one common household of faith, and co-heirs to the promise of an heavenly inheritance. The early christians, and the early followers of Wesley, were shining examples of the love which the disciples of Jesus were required to manifest one towards another; the former so much so, that two of the greatest enemies Christianity has ever had to contend against, Porphiry and Celsus, endeavored to make their firm devotion and attachment, and the relief which they afforded each other in scenes of poverty and affliction, a ground of objection, and an argument against the religion of Jesus itself. Strange ground of objection this! The Emperor Julian, termed the Apostate Julian, had to exclaim: "It is a shame that our poor should be neglected by us, and be left helpless and destitute, and the impious Galileans relieve only their own people, but ours also!"

To impress more fully the sentiments I have briefly advanced, I reiterate, in part, and extend these remarks. Christianity is a system of religion of Divine origin, and of decided and unequivocal superiority. Its tenets, are pure, mild, and gentle; its promises, cheering and glorious; its commandments, obligatory on all men, having a direct reference to their present welfare, and ultimate good. Its followers are exhorted to love, cherish, and esteem each other; not, however, with worldly feelings, or with reference to earthly honors and distinction; but with the most pure, disinterested, exalted and heavenly views,—as brethren beloved in the Lord. Distinction is unknown in its honors, where piety is not enjoyed. Hence the poor and rich, Jew and Gentile; bond and free, noble and ignoble, learned and unlearned, when the subjects of converting grace, are all united on one common level, introduced into one common fold, subject to the same laws and regulations, the recipients of a common Saviour's love, candidates, for the same haven of rest—heirs in eternal bliss. If any enjoy more of the blessings of heaven, communion with God, and the sunshine of his love, it is those who are the more humble, firm, and unwavering in their attachments to the cross of Christ. This is the great secret of true enjoyment, and rich blessings in the service of God. "Of a truth, I perceive that God is no respector of persons."

If Christianity, then, breathes such extensive benevolence, if God manifests such disinterested goodness and good will towards all mankind; if all men are subjected to the same regulations and rules, and it regards their conduct, or their departure from the faith, there ought to be the most even handed justice exercised towards church members, all partiality avoided in the bestowment of honors or church privileges; and the same credence attached to the word of a poor, as a rich member, where piety and information are about equally possessed. But, alas! this has not been, and is not now in a great many instances the case. And,

1. With regard to church trials. How many a christian has been excluded from the privileges of membership by a partial and unfair church trial, and an unjust interference of usurped authority, and tyrannical overbearings? The natural rights of men are sacred: how much more so their ecclesiastical rights? How much greater credence and weight, have been attached to the testimony of respectable witnesses, above poor, common, upright men, whose characters were unblemished by any imputation of evil? How many a man, who has been presented to the minister as guilty of immorality, has avoided a church trial, and retained his position in the church, because he was a man of influence, paid the minister liberally, and kept a luxurious table, at which he was always welcome! Let us appeal to the infallible oracles of truth, and see if such conduct is sanctioned or reprobated there:—"Ye shall not respect persons in judgment, but ye shall hear the small as well as the great; ye shall not be afraid of the face of man, for the judgment is God's." (Deut. XXXV: 37.) "There is no respect of persons with God." (2. Chron. XXIV:XIX: 7.) "It is not good to have respect of persons in judgment." (Rev. XXIV: 23.) "Thou shalt not respect the person of the poor, nor honor the person of the mighty but in righteousness shalt thou judge thy neighbor." (Lev. XIX: 15.)

Get a man of wealth into the church, and let his course of conduct be such as to merit the reprehension of good men and even the world, yet by many ministers, he will be tolerated within her pale; while a poor man, though guilty of transactions of no deeper turpitude, will be hurled from her borders as soon as a corrupt executive can lay its hand upon him. Alas! may we not say, that "Riches cover a multitude of sins."

2. With regard to church offices. Rich men, mighty men, honorable men, are advanced in offices in some churches, counselled with by the ministers, when the poor man, rich in faith and in the favor of God, like the unfortunate individual in the parable, on one side, to hold offices in some churches, worldly influence and wealth, has, apparently become a sine qua non. Hence all offices, in such churches are held by men of wealth, and high standing in society.

To conclude this letter, Sir, I would remark, that the church of Christ is a family of believers: Christ is the head, and the members the body. There is a close and intimate union between the two: therefore, to act unjustly against a member of that body, however lowly, or poor, or obscure he may be, is to endeavor to militate against the Great Head of the Church. Christ is represented as the True Vine, and christians the branches of that vine: therefore, to injure a living branch is to wound the True Vine. Christ is termed a Son,—the Son of his followers—the great centre of radiation, and christians reflect the emanations of his glory: therefore, to endeavor to cloud the name of a good man by an unrighteous persecution or an unfair church trial, is to endeavor to hide, or extinguish, part of the brightness of the Sun of Righteousness!

I remain, Rev. Sir, yours &c., ANON.

Is it Right.

Br. Bassett: In noticing the religious periodicals of our day, I see frequently Ministers of the peaceful gospel of the loving Jesus, in matters of difference, and may I not say even in matters of indifference, or of small consequence, publishing each other to the world as designedly wrong doers; and while they make professions of love and friendship, they appear to aim at making the heaviest thrusts they are capable of, at the feelings and characters of each other, making charges of falsehood, misrepresentation, lying, &c. Ought these things to be so? Are they right? Is God pleased with these things? is he glorified thereby? We shall all stand before the Judgment seat of Christ; and in as much as ye have done it to one of these, ye have done it to me, says Jesus. What shall we now say? See how these christians love; or see how they hate?

Lord, give to all thy loving spirit. May kindness be engraven on every heart, may the light of knowledge, purity, and the love of God, shine through the ministry to the membership, that they may catch the light, and together like the silver Queen of night, shine around the world, having caught the flame from the source above. Ye are my witnesses says Jesus, to bear testimony to the truth. Oh, when shall the watchman see eye to eye?

Should not christians settle their differences if they can by personal and private interviews? "Go and tell him his fault between him and thee alone;" or by private letter correspondence, if better cant be done. "Agree with thine adversary quickly, whilst thou art in the way with him." Speak evil of no man, how much less then publish him to the world and especially a minister of the gospel, thereby giving occasion of stumbling to many; and encouragement to unbelieving infidels, and scoffers, to mock at and condemn our holy religion, sent down from the Father of mercies, and thereby grieve the holy spirit of God. Oh, provoke not sinners to blaspheme that holy name, you so much love.

Peace in view of Death.—When I am dead and forgotten, the world will be as it is; the same succession and variety of seasons, the same revolutions of the heavens, the same changes of earth and sea, the like occurrances of natural events and human affairs. It is not in my power to alter the course of things, or to prevent what must be. What should I do but quietly take my part of the present, and humbly leave the care of the future to that all-wise Providence, who ordereth all things, even the most cross events, according to his most holy and just purposes?—Bishop Hall.

"The way they do here."

NO. III.

Mr. Editor. I gave you at the conclusion of my last, a few hints relative to the difficulties and trials of those that adorned their profession by a godly walk and chaste conversation. But the privations there enumerated were not all; for in the midst of the general derision in which they were held they seldom had the privilege of hearing the glad-some sound of the gospel of peace. It appeared as though they that were teachers of the people and preachers of the Gospel had no disposition to dispense the glad tidings of salvation in this (almost God-forsaken) spot of creation unless peradventure some wandering Itinerant would chance to pass this way and at the earnest entreaties of some friend of morality would consent to hold forth the unsearchable riches of Christ to any that might be convened for the purpose of hearing. But these occasions were like angels visits "few and far between."

The cloud that had hung so long in lowering blackness now began to show some signs of breaking away—light faintly gleaming low in the horizon of the moral heavens, and promised to dispel the dark gloom that had blinded the virtuous sensibilities of multitudes equaled only (comparatively) by the darkness brought upon the land of Egypt by reason of their covetousness.

A protracted meeting seemed to hasten a return of long neglected duty: and the means made use of to arouse from a slumbering security to a praying watchfulness. As in the days of Elijah of old, on the Mount when all the people collected together to be eye witnesses of the overthrow of Baal by the hand of the old prophet of God, so a person might conclude was the case in some measure here. Large congregations were in attendance to see personally what effect could be produced by two or three men against the powers of darkness, and spiritual wickedness (drunkenness) in high places. For at no great distance from the place where this meeting was in progress, there were some two or three "hell holes" (distilleries) and as many "satanic watch towers" (groggeries) and those that had the management were like Demetrius of Ephesus—they were afraid their craft would not only be set at nought but that the great temple of Bacchus would be deserted and they be out of employment.

The meeting continued for the space of some two weeks, in which time they that had once before made a profession were brought back into the fold of the church, and others added to their number. And others still that had been attending the ministration of the word were seriously affected. At the end of fourteen days a cessation was proclaimed for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of good done—the number added—the effect produced &c. And found that they were in all about seventy that had identified themselves with them as also a great number that were halting between two opinions and had not decided in their minds whether they would obey the dictations of conviction or remain in the camp of the enemy.

No sooner had this great meeting closed and the excitement subsided a little, than its former rival denomination commenced a protracted meeting in the neighborhood, and during its progress several that had numbered themselves with the first became members of the last; and others also that had not even attended at the first, fell into the ranks of the last (apparently) without any hesitation or reservation whatever. After a continuation of three days, it came to a close, and found by calculation that their number amounted to about twenty. And notwithstanding the number short of the other, this last was not without interest. And thinking the prospect fair, they appointed another meeting that was to commence in a few days, and it was hoped that it would be a more favorable opportunity for the attendance of the community.

Thus again the same two denominations were located in the same settlement, but experience had taught them a lesson that was (it seemed) to profit them, for each attended to their own business, and if one attended the meeting of the other, it was in Love and for the mutual worship of God, and not that they might seek an occasion as in former times. No one could be mistaken in the change that had taken place. Atheism, Deism, and immorality appeared to tremble at the prospect before them, while Christians were united in the cause of Christ and moving on toward the haven of repose in peace and harmony.

Plan for Emancipation.—A Virginia slaveholder writes in the New York Observer, that he has adopted the following plan to deliver himself from slavery: "I open an account with each one of my slaves, charging him with the amount of his purchase—this bears a running interest of six per cent. At the end of each year from the date of the purchase, I credit him with the value of his year's service, (ascertained by the current value of like services in my neighborhood,) these credits are also entitled to a running interest of 6 per cent. per annum. When the credits to the slave thus entered with their seeming interest, amount to the sum I paid for him with its interest, he is free. Or, in other words, I allow my negroes to purchase themselves by the value of their labor, and at the price I pay for them.

"I respectfully suggest, if such a system was generally pursued by the owners of slaves it would hasten that great desideratum—the banishment of slavery from our country—and my word for it, it will not make the slave less valuable to his master while he continues such."

Br. Bassett:—In my lonely hours my reflections were turned to my old scrap-book; the following thoughts in my present situation, to me presented unusual interest. If you think them sufficiently interesting to others, you may give them an insertion in your valuable paper.

Who is the happy woman?

The happy woman was born in the city of regeneration, in the Parish of repemance into life, she was educated in the school of obedience, and now lives in perseverance. She works at the trade of diligence (notwithstanding she has a large estate in the country of christian contentment.) She many times does jobs of self-denial.

She wears the plain garb of humility, but has a better suit to put on when she goes to court, the righteousness of God by faith in Christ. She often walks in the valley of self abasement, and sometimes climbs the mountain of spiritual mindedness. She breakfasts every morning on spiritual prayer, and sups every evening on the same. She has meat to eat that the world knows not of, and her drink is the sincere milk of the word.

Thus happy she lives and happy she dies.

Happy is she who has Gospel submission in her will, due ardor in her affections, sound peace in conscience, sanctifying grace in her soul, true humility in her heart, real Divinity in her breast, the Redeemer's yoke on her neck, a vain world under her feet, and a crown of glory over her head! In order to obtain which, pray fervently, believe firmly, wait patiently, work abundantly, live holy, die daily, watch your hearts, guide your senses, redeem your time, love Christ, and long for glory.

A true gentle woman is God's servant, the world's mistress, and her own woman. Virtue is her business, study her recreation, contentment her rest, and happiness her reward; God is her father, the church her mother; and she is a friend to all that need her. Heaven is her inheritance, religion her master, loyalty and justice her two ladies of honor, devotion her chaplain, christianity her chamberlain, sobriety her butler, Temperance her cook, hospitality her house-keeper, Providence her stewart, charity her treasurer. Piety is mistress of the house, and discretion Porter, to let in and out as is most fit.

Thus is her whole family made up of virtues and she is the true mistress of the family.

She is necessitated to take the world in her way to Heaven, but she walks through it as fast as she can. and all her business by the way, is to glorify the name of God and do good to mankind.

Take her all in two words, she is a gentle woman and a christian.

Ministers' Department.

From the Herald and Journal.

To a Junior Preacher.

My Dear Brother.—Believing you will take it kindly, I offer the following suggestions for your consideration.

As conference is drawing near, it will be well for you to begin to make out a "Plan" of your charge, for the benefit of your successor, and through him, the benefit of those he is to serve. The "Plan" should embrace a list of the official members, stewards and leaders,—the time of holding the various public and social meetings, Board meetings, &c., an alphabetical list of the members, with their state in church and life prefixed, and the number of the class to which each belongs, with a list of the classes carefully made out and numbered; and be sure and have each leader's book perfectly conformed to the one in the "Plan;" also see that the residence of each member is as accurately defined as practicable. This will save your successor a great amount of labor. Make out a list of all the subscribers to our periodicals, also of the benevolent societies, and the usual time of taking up collections. You can calculate from the experience you have had what would be pleasant and useful to you in your next charge. By this you may determine what will be desirable to your scessor in your present charge.

When at Conference, fix it thoroughly in your mind that you will not keep your hat on your head while in the house God, even if every other minister of Conference should be so forgetful of what belongs to the place, as to do it. Bear in mind, "This is none other than the house of God."

Studiously guard against giving an impression that you would not dislike overtures from other denominations; you are in the market, and only wait a favorable opportunity to change your church relations. Do not speak of it even in pleasantry. You might in that way give an impression that will injure you for life.

If you have an inclination for some other church, weigh the matter well, and act as conscience may decide; but don't be everlastingly talking about having "offers" from one church and another to join them.

Do not talk a great deal about your appointment, about a transfer to another Conference, nor about your preaching, as though you were more interested in it than any thing else. I have seen preachers at Conference and at camp meeting who were apparently interested only in their own appointments and preaching, as if when this was properly arranged, the world was well provided for!

Guard well against the very appearance of evil. Be not disheartened in your efforts for intellectual and spiritual improvement. As there is no royal path to true literary distinction, so there is none to spiritual pre-eminence. "The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force."

Put away all envy and evil speaking. Learn to rejoice in hearing your predecessor praised. Be careful you do not show displeasure even if his excellencies are served up as a morning, noon and evening repast.

If you have not already, immediately direct your way to the residence of every poor member of your charge. If any must be neglected, let it be the rich. "Honor widows that are widows indeed." Deprecate, as you would the sting of the scorpion, the terrible reproach that must accrue from the remark, when justly made, "Our preacher has been here one year, two years, and has not called on me once;" or the sarcastic complaint, "The preacher never finds time to call on us, though he is in to Esq. L.'s, our next neighbor's, every week; but when we have sickness in our family, and send for him, he is always engaged;" or, "our preacher never spoke to me about my soul, though I have passed hours in his company." Be gentle, be diligent, be holy.—Give no occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully.

Selfishness odious in Ministers.

Selfishness is by some theologians considered the essence of all sin. However this may be, it is certain that it is a prolific root, which is hard to be eradicated from the human heart, and when unchecked, brings forth much bitter and poisonous fruit. We find it working in the hearts of Christ's disciples, frequently, before they received the baptism of the Holy Ghost and of fire on the day of Pentecost. On one occasion Christ asked them, "what was it that ye disputed about on the way?" And they were silent, for by the way they disputed which of them should be the greatest. And on another occasion, James and John had a request made, that they might occupy the most honorable seats in Christ's kingdom. They knew not what they asked. A baptism of blood was what they received. God will forever bring down to the dust the pride and ambition of ministers, and he will exalt the humble to stations of honor. Remember Paul's interrogations. 'Who maketh thee to differ? and what hast thou, that thou hast not received?' Ministers should rejoice in each others gifts. It is a poor business and a bad sign when preachers are much taken up with themselves, or inquiring what the people think of them. Let them faithfully do their duty, and they will not want their reward, even though the wicked and worldly should deride them.

Boisterous Preaching.—A celebrated divine, who was remarkable in the first period of his ministry for a loud and boisterous mode of preaching, suddenly changed his whole manner in the pulpit, and adopted a mild and dispassionate mode of delivery. One of his brethren, observing it, inquiring of him what had happened him to make the change?—He answered—"When I was young I thought it was thunder that killed the people, but when I grew wiser, I discovered that it was the lightning—so I determined to thunder less and lighten more in future."

Thoughts on a Passage of Scripture.

BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD.

And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all. Else, what shall they do who are baptised for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptised for the dead? 1. Cor. 15; 28, 29.

This is a difficult passage to almost every reader, and even to Commentators. Nearly all the Commentators whom we have consulted agree in supposing the passage refers to a custom which prevailed among armies in time of battle. When the fore ranks fell, those behind came forward to occupy the place of the slain; and when these fell in their turn, others would again take their place. The import of being baptised for the dead, as they suppose, is, that those who are baptised fill up the place of those who have been exterminated by death, &c.

This explanation will probably always fail to satisfy the thinking reader. It is strained and unnatural. The true meaning of the passage can only be arrived at by attention to the whole chapter. Observe,

The main object of the chapter is to prove the doctrine of the Resurrection, which a few in the Corinthian church had rejected after having once received it. The Apostle proves this doctrine by proving the resurrection of Christ. He tells these Corinthian Christians who had once received this doctrine, that "if Christ be not risen then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain."—And why would their faith have been vain "if Christ be not risen?" Simply because, in that case, they were trusting for eternal happiness, not in a living, but a dead Saviour.

He further informs them that if Christ be not raised, their faith is not only vain, but they are yet in their sins. And why would they yet have been in their sins, if Christ were not raised from the dead? Because a dead Saviour cannot pardon sins, and their only hope of pardon was in that Saviour whom they now said was not raised from the dead.

He then re-asserts the great doctrine of the resurrection, and after having done so, makes the inquiry, "else what shall they do who are baptised for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptised for the dead?" That is, some of you say there is no resurrection, and that Christ is not raised; and yet you have been baptised in his name. Not only so, but all Christians have been baptised in the name of Christ, who you say is dead. What shall they do, then if it be as you say? A dead Saviour cannot save them, or you. And if it be as you say, why are Christians baptised for the dead? i. e. in the name of a dead Saviour? What is the use of such an ordinance? And if the dead rise not at all, if there be no resurrection, why are all Christians baptised in the name of a dead Saviour?

The inquiry, then, is merely intended to show the absurdity of Christians being baptised in the name of Christ if there be no resurrection of the dead, as Christ himself is not raised but is dead if this great and comforting doctrine be false, as some of the Church at Corinth had been seduced to believe. To remove this error from their minds, and to re-establish in them the truth of this doctrine is the principal design of this chapter.

The Shilling and Guinea.

A STORY WITH A MORAL.

Some time ago, the Duke of Buccleuth, in one of his walks, purchased a cow from a person in the neighborhood of Dalkeith, and left orders to send it to his palace the following morning.—According to agreement the cow was sent, and the Duke happened to be in dishabille, and walking in the avenue, espied a little fellow ineffectually attempting to drive the animal forward to its destination. The boy not knowing the Duke, bawled out to him—

"Flimun, come here an' gin's a han' wi' this beast."

The Duke saw the mistake, and determined on having a joke with the little fellow. Pretending, therefore, not to understand him, the Duke walked on slowly, the boy still craving his assistance; at last he cries in a tone of apparent distress—

"Come here, mun, an' help us, an' as sure as ony thing I'll give you half I get!"

This last solicitation had the desired effect. The Duke went and lent a helping hand.

"And now," said the Duke, as they trudged along, "how much do you think you'll get for this job?"

"Oh, dinna ken," said the boy, "but I'm sure o' something, for the folk up by at the house are good to a' bodies."

As they approached the house, the Duke darted from the boy and entered by a different way. He called a servant and put a soverign into his hand saying, "Give that to the boy that has brought the cow." The Duke returned to the avenue, and was soon rejoined by the boy.

"Well, how much did you get?" said the Duke.

"A shilling," said the boy, "an' there's the half o' it t' ye.

"But you surely got more than a shilling," said the Duke.

"No," said the boy with the utmost earnestness, "as sure 's death that's a' I got—an' d' ye not think it 's a plenty?"

"I do not," said the Duke, "there must be some mistake, and as I am acquainted with the Duke, if you return, I think I'll get you more."

The boy consented—back they went—the Duke rang the bell, and ordered all the servants to be assembled.

"Now," said the Duke to the boy, "point me out the person that gave you the shilling."

"It was that chap there with the apron," pointing to the butler.

The delinquent confessed, fell on his knees, and attempted an apology; but the Duke interrupted him, indignantly ordered him to give the boy the sovereign, and quit his service instantly.

"You have lost," said the Duke, "your money, your situation, and your character, by your covetousness: learn, henceforth, that honesty is the best policy."

The boy by this time recognised his assistant in the person of the Duke, and the Duke was so delighted with the sterling worth and honesty of the boy, that he ordered him to be sent to school, kept there, and provided for at his own expense.

Some persons toil all their lives, and refuse the enjoyments which can only be relished when life is in its prime, that they may be rich when the power of enjoyment is over.

Young men talk of what they are doing, old men of what they have done, and drunkards of what they desire to do.

Be temperate, and your physician shall look in vain for your name on his day-book.

Take great care to fix right principles in your mind, and often review them.

A Mother Praying a Son home.

What thoughts crowd around the heart at the mention of these words. Years may pass away; mountains, rivers, and oceans, may intervene between us and the spot where first we heard a mother's prayers, yet they cannot be lost to memory. Sickness, sorrow and neglect may be suffered, and even the heart may seemingly become callous to all good impression, yet at the sound of a mother's—a praying mother's name, a chord is touched which thrills through the soul, and rarely fails to awaken better feelings. Does danger threaten? We hope and perhaps fondly anticipate, that a mothers' prayers, which have been offered in our behalf, may be answered.

Never did I see this more forcibly illustrated than in the case of a weather-beaten sailor, who resided in one of our coast towns. I had the narrative from the lips of the mother. In making his homeward passage, as he doubled the stormy Cape, a dreadful storm arose. The mother had heard of his arrival "outside the Cape," and was awaiting with the anxiety which only a mother can know to see her son. But now the storm had arisen, and, as she expected when the ship was in the most dangerous place. Fearing that each blast, as it swept the raging deep, might howl the requiem of her son, with faith strong in God, she commenced praying for his safety. At this moment, news came that the vessel was lost! The father an unconverted man, had till this time preserved perfect sullen silence, but now he wept aloud. The mother observed, "It is in the hands of Him that does all things well;" and again in a subdued and softened spirit, bowed and commended her son and her partner, in an audible voice, broken only by the bursts of a full heart, to God.

Darkness had now spread her mantle abroad, and they retired, but not to rest, and anxiously waiting for the morning, hoping at least that some relic of their lost one might be found.

The morning came. The winds were hushed and the ocean lay comparatively calm, as though its fury had subsided since its victim was no more. At this moment, the little gate in front of their dwelling turned upon its hinges. The door opened, and their son, their lost, their loved son, stood before them. The vessel had been driven into one of the many harbors on the coast, and he was safe. The father rushed to meet him. His mother, already hanging on his neck, earnestly exclaimed, "My child how came you here?"

"Mother," said he, while the tears coursed down his sunburnt face, "I know you would pray me home!"

What a spectacle! a wild, reckless youth acknowledged the efficacy of prayer. It seems that he was aware of his perilous situation, and that it laboured with this thought: "My mother prays; Christains' prayers are answered, and I may be saved." This reflection, when almost exhausted with fatigue, and ready to give up in despair, gave him fresh courage, and with renewed effort he labored, till the harbor was gained.

Christain mother, go thou and do likewise.—Pray over that son who is likely to be wrecked on the stream of life, and his prospects blasted for ever. He may be saved.—Ch. Friend.

Immigration, &c.—The N. Y. correspondent of the Washington Union of the 18th inst., says:

'Within the last twelve days no fewer than 10,034 emigrants have been landed in this city from foreign countries—nearly 1,900 per day—some of them in a state of frightful suffering from destitution and disease. Between five and ten per cent. die on the passage!

Religious Intelligence.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Otsego, Ohio, April 30th, 1847.

Br. Bassett: In my former communication, I reported up to our second quarterly meeting. Since that time, I have been filling my regular appointments on the circuit, and have received a number of members into the church at various classes. April 17, a protracted meeting was commenced at Covenant class, which continued nine days, at this meeting we were favored with the valuable labors of Br's. J. Baker, J. W. Case, and J. H. Hamilton. The members with the preachers took hold manfully and "came up to the help of the Lord against the mighty," and the Lord blessed their efforts. Sinners were convicted of sin, mourners were brought to bow at the altar of prayer, and those who could trust alone in a Saviour's blood for salvation, found "the pearl of great price." Fifteen gave us their names to join in church fellowship, to journey with us to a better country, making in all 105 received on Otsego circuit this conference year. May the Lord revive his work more abundantly.

Yours truly, WM. DULING.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Perrysburg, Ohio, May 5, 1847.

Br. Bassett: By the blessing of God, I have been enabled to visit the following Circuits, and Missions. Twincreek, Greenville, Miami, Lima, Kalida, Maumee, &c. The ministers and preachers appointed by the conference are devoting there whole time to the work of the Lord, except, Br. I. Hunt, on Miami circuit, and Br. W. Tipton, on Maumee Mission. They have found it necessasy, for the support of their families, to labor with their hands. How long shall this state of things continue; when ministers called of God, and the church, to adminster in holy things and have been instrumental in the conversion of many souls, shall be driven from the moral vineyard, to engage in secular business, to obtain a competency, for the support of there families, (through the covetousness of the church.) Perhaps we can call to mind no year when prosperity flowed through every vain of society more generally than the present. Labor in the various temporal callings of life is rewarded abundantly. Shall God's ministers who minister in spiritual things be denied a competency of your carnal things? I hope our members will awake to the subject of ministerial support.

As it regards revival intelligence, we would state, to our Brethren, there have been but few conversions, on these circuits, but an increased revival interest in the church. The additions made are about equal to our losses. All things considered, we are doing as well as could be expected. High waters, bad roads, and a great amount of affliction, has prevented regular preaching at some points, which has been injurious to the work. I trust the Lord will bless our ministers who have left all to follow Christ, who have given up there temporal callings, to preach the Gospel, and maintain laymen's rights. Dear Br. let us maintain the unity of the spirit, in the bond of perfectness. Yours in the gospel,

J. M. YOUNG.

Buford Circuit, May 6, 1847.

Dear Brother: We are still alive on Buford Circuit, and are striving to fan up the little spark that is ready to go out. Spring has come—the roads are good. Our congregations have increased greatly, notwithstanding farmers are very busy. We still receive a few members once in a while. Our cry is, O Lord, revive thy work. Pray for us. J. NUTTY.

GENESSEE DISTRICT.

Gibsonville, April 1847.

Br. Bassett: It may be gratifying to the readers of your valuable paper to learn something of the prosperity of Zion, in the old Genesee District. On the Castile and Leicester Circuit, we have been favored with a gracious visitation of God's mercy, and twenty-four have been added to our numbers. Br. B. P. Short, superintendent of Kendall and Clarkson circuits writes me under date 26th ultimo, that the arm of the Lord has been made bare in the conversion of about a score of souls on his circuit.

Br. T. W. Avery, writes me from Holly and Ogden circuit that the Lord is among his people in power; and sinners are being converted. Br. Lewis Sweetland, superintendent of Chautauque circuit writes under date 15 inst. that the God of salvation has been with him in power and Zion's borders have been enlarged and strengthened, over 60 have found peace with God, and three new classes formed.

Ride forth Redeemer of the world, in the chariot of thy love until all shall know and serve thee!

Respectfully yours,

E. A. WHEAT.

WABASH DISTRICT.

Frankfort, Indiana April, 28.

Br. Bassett: In compliance with the request of Brother G. Williams and yourself, I would say that the subject of enquiry is still amongst the living, and still sharing the blessings of a gracious God. Since Conference, has been endeavoring to unlade on several circuits.

Crawfordsville Circuit. Brother Falkenburg is at his post. Found a kind, religious people, and had a good meeting. Logansport circuit is in quite a prosperous condition. Brother Beall is well received. Brethren are already encouraged, and are looking for better times. Union Circuit was left to be supplied. Brother J. C. Wright is now serving this circuit—attended the first quarterly meeting. Visited Cicero Circuit. Brother Petty who was appointed has not come on. Would like to hear from him and know the reason. There is a good membership on this circuit. We had a very good meeting. Brothers Wright and Beall were in attendance.

I am now at home—have cast anchor in the corn field, and drawn down my itinerant sails for a while. We are scarce of itinerants in this District. Some of the circuits are destitute. But we are looking for better times. We are living in quite a serene atmosphere. The storm is over—the breeze is fair. We expect to reach the harbor.

Yours in love, JOSEPH SHIPP.

Mississinewa, Ct., Grant co., Ia., May 1, '47.

As there has been but little reported in your paper from this (Wabash) District, and friends seem desirous to hear whether we yet live, I would say, in reference to the field in which I labor, this has been a year of shaking among us. The ague has shaken the bodies of many persons, quite to their discomfort, whilst those of the secession have agitated some portion of our Zion—(we say some, for in many places, we have scarcely felt the shock.) But, I am happy to say, that by the mercy of God, we are generally convalescent, with fair prospect of returning peace. Yet some are dead to us, and have gone, I will not say to their long home, but elsewhere,—peace be to their bones. Prospects are brightening. Our people are becoming almost as humble as little children. If they only remain in this state, and keep looking up to our great Deliverer, ere long the cloud of mercy will burst, and the Lord rain righteousness upon us. Some have united with the church—others are serious. To considerable extent, the church is revived. May the Lord send better days. I am still travelling Mississinaway and Union circuits, and at present attending to part of Cicero circuit, Brother Petty, from some cause, not having filled his appointment. The harvest is great, and the laborers are few. If we could but have our ministers effectively occupying the field, we have arrived at a point where in all probability we must prosper. Pray for us. J. C. WRIGHT.

P. S. We would say to Brother G. Williams, if he has not otherwise heard it, that his Shipp, President, has not stranded, nor yet foundered at sea, but is still sailing, and will probably ere long, touch at the distant ports. We spoke this vessel, not long since. J. C. W.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO.

THURSDAY, MAY 13, 1847.

Information Wanted,

Of William Pennypacker, formerly residing near Philadelphia, Pa., now supposed to be living near the Wabash river, Indiana. Any information will be thankfully received by the Subscriber, at Bellepoint, Delaware county, O. May 7th, '47. [JACOB PENNYPACKER.

Early History of Ohio.–The 'Reminiscences,' by our friend, Major Nye, have been generally read with interest. We are gratified to say that he intends publishing a few more numbers. Our neighbor of the Zanesville Courier has announced his intention of re-pulishing the numbers in whole or in part.

Personalities.—The article on our first page, signed 'A Friend,' is from the pen of an aged minister of another denomination. It would greatly accommodate our feelings, if in accordance with his suggestion, our several correspondents would, as far as possible, refrain from severities of expression, and from personalities, not calculated to promote christian charity and forbearance.

"Sons and Daughters of Temperance."—Br. F. Swift, of Jacksontown, Ohio, wishes us to state that this new 'Temperance Circle' has now five branches; one at Thornville, one at Hebron, one at Kirkersville, and one at Irville, all of them he says in a flourishing condition. There are no dram shops, he tells us in Jacksontown, save one tavern, and that it does not sell to tipplers. The intention is to drive king Alcohol from the land.

Old Soldiers.—The Cincinnati Commercial states that the Captain and Lieutenant of a new German Company now forming in Dayton under the late call of the Governor, were soldiers engaged with Napoleon for sixteen years. They were both at the battle of Leipsic, and both witnessed the conflagration of Moscow.

Drowned.—Mr. John Sherlock, merchant of Point Harmer, near Marietta, was drowned lately at the mouth of the Muskingum river, by the upsetting of a sail boat. He was swimming towards shore, but became exhausted and sunk, before a boat coming from the shore for his relief, could reach him.

Sears' Magazine.—We have received the May number. It contains a pictorial description of the States of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, with numerous engravings, very instructive and interesting. Robert Sears, Publisher, New York. Don't forget, we are an authorised agent for this excellent work. Call at our office, and subscribe for 'Sears' Magazine.'

New Paper.—We have received a prospectus for a new weekly newspaper, to be published at the village of Rosville, in this county. It is to be called "The Genius of Liberty," and is to be independent in politics, allowing an opportunity for writers of either party to use its columns. The proprietor is Mr. James Taylor, who gives evidence of such a spirit of enterprise, that we should verily expect him to succeed, were it not a newspaper enterprise.

Herald of Truth.—We apprehended that the visits of this most intellectual Monthly, were discontinued to us, as we did not receive the April number. But we have felt quite cheered this week, to receive the number for May. It is rich in thought, and contains a number of valuable papers. The perusal of the Herald, we ever find to be an intellectual feast. We are gratified to find also, that it is to be an organ of benevolence, as well as of mind. L. A. Hine, Editor, Cincinnati. Yearly subscription, $3,00.

Scourges.—It is indeed a remarkable fact that the three great scourges, Pestilence, Famine and War, are at this time visiting as many principal quarters of the globe. David was offered his choice of the three, in a certain instance. He chose to fall into the hands of the Lord, and was visited with pestilence. This is now the lot of Asia, whilst Europe is visited with famine. We, however, it seems, have fallen into the hands of men, and are visited with the sword. Though it is true that we are not called to "flee three months before our enemies," yet it is sadly true, from estimates which have been made, that about twice as many of our men have fallen in the existing war, as perished in the two or three years' continuance of the late war with Great Britain. And whilst we regard this as most deplorable, we should not forget that a much greater number have fallen from the ranks of what we are now accustomed to call our enemy, though of the same human brotherhood. And the scenes of slaughter have not yet ceased. May heaven speedily save us from the disaster, the reproach, and the baleful consequences of this unhallowed war.

Missionary Meeting.—We see it announced in the Zanesville papers that the Baptist brethren have made arrangements for holding a Missionary meeting in that place, commencing this evening, (13th,) and continuing over Sabbath. One or more Foreign Missionaries, with several other Ministers from the East, are expected to be in attendance. The notice is signed by Rev. Messrs. Courtney and Wood, the two pastors of Baptist congregations in Zanesville.

☞ We have a friend or two who would do us a favor by remembering us just now, as we have been expecting with some solicitude to hear from them.☜

Daniel Webster.—This distinguished Statesman is taking a tour in the Southern States. On his return he is to visit, by invitation, Cincinnati and Columbus, probably in the month of June.

Another Battle.—By an extra of the Cincinnati Commercial, we have intelligence of a battle between Gen. Scott & Santa Anna, at Cerro Gordo. As usual, the Americans were victorious. On April 17th, the advance under General Twiggs encountered the enemy. But the main battle occurred on the 18th, with the full American force under General Scott, and resulted in a complete triumph. Santa Anna very narrowly escaped. He did so by taking his saddle mule from his magnificent travelling carriage, mounting him and taking to the chapperel. His carriage and most of his valuables fell into the hands of our men. General La Vega, and four other Mexican Generals were taken prisoners, & 6000 men. These were set at liberty on their parole of honor not again to take up arms during the war. Fifteen officers refused to sign, amongst them, Gen. La Vega. Col. Shields was dangerously wounded by a ball passing through his lungs. It is supposed that five hundred Americans were killed, and a much greater number upon the Mexican side. General Scott was on his march in full force for the city of Mexico.

We acknowledge the courtesy of the Editors of the Zanesville Gazette, in furnishing us with an extra of the Pittsburgh Commercial Journal, with the like intelligence by telegraph from the East.

Our prayer is that there may be no more fighting. We long for peace.

Ridiculous.—The New York Sun states that on the 11th instant a solemn Tedeum was celebrated at the Catholic Church at Natchitoches, in commemoration of our triumphs at Mexico. The church was crowded with people of all religious denominations. The Rev. Mr. Justiniani delivered an appropriate address. Why should an American Catholic Church be made a theatre of rejoicing at the slaughter of Catholics of a neighboring nation? We think that his Holiness at Rome, as the common Father, will have to admonish his children at Natchitoches.

Rev. S. J. Spees, late of Troy, New York, has been appointed General Agent of the American Board of Foreign Missions for the Western States. He has entered upon his duties, and is to be found at the Missionary Rooms, Cincinnati, Ohio.

An Example.—The Cincinnati Protestant says that the Unitarian congregation of that city have contributed eighty dollars to extend education amongst the colored population, after hearing a discourse from their pastor, Rev. Mr. Perkins, upon the subject. An example for the orthodox.

Foreign News.—The Steamship Caledonia arrived at Boston on Thursday last. Her news was immediately telegraphed to New York. The New York Sun of the 7th gives us the particulars. The Steamer had a rough passage. The United States Sloop of War, Jamestown, laden with breadstuffs and provisions for the relief of the suffering in Ireland, arrived at Cork on the 12th instant. Its arrival was hailed with the greatest enthusiasm, and the inhabitants were intending to illuminate their dwellings. The Hibernia arrived on the 10th.—The lady of Mr. Bancroft had the honor of dining with the Queen at Buckingham palace on the 15th. The state of affairs in Ireland is said to be improving. Matters had reached their worst, and were mending. Ronge is undergoing an imprisonment at Breslau, for preaching without permission of the authorities. Death and distress were said to be daily increasing in France. The cause of emancipation is constantly gaining in France. Ten hundred and ten slaves were liberated in Guadaloupe last year, 1115 in Martinique, 177 in French Guiana, and 300 in Bourbon. The new Constitution of Prussia is said to have a good effect.

Rather Nautical.—We have two worthy brethren in the State of Indiana, brothers, Rev. Tho's. Shipp, President of the Indiana Conference, and Rev. Jos. Shipp, President of the Wabash Conference. The latter, not having been heard from through our paper since Conference, one of his brethren got us to publish an enquiry respecting the Ship President, a few weeks ago, and we heartily seconded the enquiry. The friends of Brother S. will be gratified to find a response from him in our present number. The vessel is safe, and has spoke us at last, and favored us with a small Ship-ment ($5,) of dues from distant subscribers. We trust that hereafter we shall hear and receive oftener. By the way, we would state that we are favored with occasional private advices and ship-ments from the President of the Indiana Conference, but we would suggest to him that it would gratify his friends and brethren to have him report himself occasionally through our paper. Please let us hear Br. S.

Rev. Elijah Bailey.—The death of this aged minister is announced in the Boston Olive Branch. He was principal founder of the connection of Reformed Methodists in New England. He was upwards of 80 years of age—an excellent man.

Irish Emigrants.—We see it stated in the Boston Olive Branch, that the ship James H. Shepherd, which lately arrived at the port of that city, took out 240 Irish passengers from Liverpool. Of these, 31 died on the passage; two died on board the day she arrived; and one dropped dead on deck with ship fever. The situation of those miserable emigrants as seen in the steerage, is affecting. Men, women and children were lying on rough boards, or a litter of straw; nearly naked. A number were reduced to skeletons, and some to insanity. Upwards of 30 were removed to the Alms House. Only the day previous, the Ship Eliza Warwick arrived with 215 Irish emigrants, and the Barque Globe with 147. The whole number of emigrants that have arrived at the port of Boston since January 7, according to official accounts, is five thousand and forty eight!

Ex-Gambler Green, has been challenged in Philadelphia, by a champion gambler, to a public debate on the advantages of Gambling. His name is J. H. Freeman. Mr. Green has accepted. So says Scott's Weekly.

Illuminations.—We meet with extended accounts of Illuminations and rejoicings in several cities on account of the recent victories. Baltimore, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, and finally, New York have had each, a high day. A great demonstration was had at the last named city on Friday last. Salutes were fired, and parades and processions were had during the day. The 'Sun' states that from almost every roof in the city flags and banners were waving. But the greatest of the fete was the illuminations at night.—The principal streets were like one extended blaze of light, whilst above glared innumerable rockets. Fifteen hundred lights were placed in the windows of the extensive Sun Buildings, whilst fifty flags were displayed from the walls and roof of the same. A great many hundreds and thousands of dollars must have been expended in that one city, in the one day and night, which might have been appropriated to useful purposes. We have no doubt that the brilliant display pleased the children, and some grown folks, but edified nobody. We are gratified that in our parts, by common consent, such demonstrations are deferred, at least till there shall be peace.

Not the one.—In the account we gave two weeks ago of the disaster at Chicago, we relied upon statements published in our exchanges. We were about making a correction, from seeing one made in the Ohio State Journal, at the instance of Judge Wilson of Steubenville, when we received the following note from our friend, Rev. J. E. Wilson, which we insert with pleasure.

Camden, O., May 7, 1847.

Br. Bassett.—Your paper of the 29th ultimo contains an account of a disaster at Chicago, Ill., in which R. S. Wilson, Esq., editor of the Journal, was seriously injured while aiding in firing a cannon in consequence of Taylor's victories, &c. The statement then goes on to affirm that "the sufferer is a son of Judge Wilson of Steubenville, and a brother of Rev. J. E. Wilson, formerly of the Methodist Protestant Church." The Mr. Wilson alluded to (in whose affliction I sympathise) is not a brother of mine. I do not think I have a brother who could make merry over so much murder and bloodshed. By making this correction, you will oblige your old friend, JAMES E. WILSON.

Robert Owen.—This old philanthropist sailed for England on Monday last, as we learn by the New York Sun of that date. He goes out with a new scheme, to lay before the British Government for the relief of Ireland. Next autumn, he is to return to this country.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, (N. S.) convenes in Cincinnati on Thursday, 20th instant. We trust that our neighbor, Rev. Mr. Kingsbury, who will be in attendance, will find it convenient to communicate for our columns during his absence, whatever he may meet with of interest, CONVENTION.

To the editor of the Western Recorder.

Whereas, the annual Conference of the Onondaga District, passed a resolution at its last session recommending a call for a convention of the northern and western Conferences (in free States) and from the best information, I have hitherto been able to get of the minds of the members of said District, a majority will decide in favor of said convention. I therefore deem it proper to call for information from the Presidents from said Conferences in regard to this matter, and let us negotiate upon the utility of such convention and of the time, place and ratio of representation &c. My opinion is that each District should hold a convention, send one lay delegate with the President or a proxy with instructions to represent their wishes, and that would lessen the expense and the people's wishes should be regarded according to the number on each district. This is only my momentary opinion and as Br. Ira Hogan is committee with me in said call he can either subscribe this or add his own opinion as I have written these few lines only with a view to get the thing started, and without reflection.

Will the editor of the Western Recorder give it an insertion, and send a copy of the same to each President and oblige yours, &c.

J. BAUM, Pres't.

P. S. My address is Central Square, Oswego Co., N. Y. J. BAUM.

N. B. The object of the above named Convention is to take into consideration the relation we sustain to slavery, in the M. P. Church.

MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCE.

Cholera at Oroomiah.

LETTER FROM MR. PERKINS.

The Asiatic cholera, it is well known, has been raging for some time in Persia. Its ravages have been truly appalling, even in cities which are regarded as comparatively healthy. It made its appearance at Tabreez in October last; and in the short interval of three weeks, it is supposed to have hurried six thousand persons into eternity. Mr. Perkins says that an European physician, who remained in that city during the prevalence of the disease, reported the number of deaths as sometimes amounting in one day, to five hundred.

Much solicitude will doubtless be felt in this country, in respect to the safety of the mission at Oroomiah. The following communications will show, that while the awful scourge has been permitted to interrupt the labors of our brethren, it has hitherto received commandment to spare their lives. Under date of Nov. 6, Mr. Perkins wrote as follows:

"It is now about ten days since the cholera first appeared in Oroomiah. It has since been gradually increasing in the city, to which its prevalence is as yet limited; but it has not raged to an extent to compare with its ravages at Tabreez and Tehran. It is difficult, however, accurately to ascertain the extent of sickness and death here at present. They are doubtless very considerable. Six corpses were seen two days ago, for instance, to be carried out of the small Jewish quarter of the city, at the same time. As the season is far advanced, we hope that the malady may not prevail here with such appalling violence as has been the case in more healthy cities in this country, the present year; though we know not what a day may bring forth.

Most of our circle repaired to our health-retreat at Seir, on the first appearance of the cholera in Oroomiah. Doctor Wright is still actively engaged among the sick and dying, with more or less success, though it may be a question whether it will be his duty to continue to expose his life, in the pestilential atmosphere of the city, much longer. On the mountain at our health-retreat, we regard our exposure as far less than it would be in the city; though we are but five miles distant from it. While we are all now in comfortable health, we by no means consider ourselves as out of danger. We naturally feel, in these circumstances, that there is but a step between us and death, and that we are loudly admonished to set our houses in order; though we would not distrust the faithfulness of our covenant God, nor be afraid of the destruction that wasteth at noon-day. May the Lord glorify himself in us and through us, whether in life or in death!

Our seminaries had been together several weeks before the cholera made its appearance. You will rejoice to hear that the scores among the pupils who, we hope, are new creatures in Christ Jesus, still appear remarkably well, having evidently advanced in the Christian race growing in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior, during the diversion of their summer vacation, and amid the exposures and temptations incident to their intercourse with their people. We dismissed these seminaries a week ago, thinking it wise to do so before any of the members should have fallen victims to the scourge on our premises. It was a severe trial to their feelings to be separated suddenly from the mission, especially in this season of calamity; but they quietly acquiesced in our views of what was duty. They will be much less exposed to the malady, humanly speaking, scattered in their villages, than they would have been in the atmosphere of the city, and especially in their confinement and close contact with each other, on our mission premises. We pray and trust that these lambs of the flock may be spared, to continue as burning and shining lights among their people. We have heard of many of them, since their dispersion, as exerting an excellent Christian influence on their friends and neighbors at their homes. Possibly, and not improbably, far more good may be effected in this way, by their temporary interruption than if nothing had occurred to disperse them.

No Nestorian has yet fallen by the cholera here. But this class, as well as the Mohammedans, will naturally be cut down, to a greater or less extent as the malady progresses: though as most of them reside in the villages, instead of the city, their exposure is thus diminished. The thoughts of the Nestorians are of course turned to death and eternity, in an unusual manner, at this hour of terror. I hear that a special fast has been observed in one large village, which is much less under our influence than some others, in view of the general peril. The pious Nestorians, scattered here and there as salt, are faithfully warning and exhorting all around them to prepare to die. We hope that this fearful scourge may thus be overruled for the furtherance of the gospel; though we well know how liable those are, who have resisted the calls of mercy, to harden themselves also under the threatening voice of judgment; and this they will do, unless that voice be accompanied by the subduing influences of the Holy Spirit."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Fatal Collision at Jersey City.

A distressing and fatal collision occurred at Jersey city on Saturday.

As the ferry boat Sussex was on her trip to the city of New York, the Captain stopped her progress to allow a schooner, then under full sail, three hundred yards distant up the river, to pass her, as it is a rule understood between steam and sailing vessels that the former must give way to the latter. But instead of keeping his course, the Captain of the schooner, by some unaccountable conduct yet to be explained, steered his vessel out of her course and ran into the ferry boat then lying passive, although he was hailed and warned to keep away while yet at some distance. The bowsprit of the schooner swept the ladies cabin, crushing it in, and tearing every thing before it until it struck the wheel house. There were five ladies in the cabin, all of Jersey city, including the lady of the Mayor, (Mrs. Dummer,) all of whom received more or less injury, and, sad to state, one of them, Mrs. Carter, wife of the proprietor of Philadelphia Hotel, at Jersey City, was supposed to have been instantly killed, as the bowsprit thrust her body through the opening made in the wheel house, and it was recovered near the Battery a few hours after. Mrs. Dummer is very much bruised, and it is feared that one of the bones of her leg is broken. Miss Morrell is bruised internally, but it cannot be ascertained yet how badly. The other two, a daughter of Mrs. Dummer and Miss Southmayd, escaped with having their dresses torn. On hearing a warning cry to "run," it is supposed all the ladies made for the inside passage, except Mrs. Carter. The schooner was the Francis Cory, of Newark.

Another note received mentions that the Captain of the schooner was not sober, and ascribes the dreadful accident to intemperance.

Death of Prince Murat.—Prince Murat, a son of Napoleon's celebrated Marshal, died at Talahassee, Florida, on the 15th instant, in his 46th year. His father was King of Naples. After the expulsion of his family from Italy, they resided in Austria, when he came to the United States. He has ever since, with the exception of an occasional visit to Europe, resided in this country. His life here has been quiet and unostentatious. The Floridian, noticing his death, says:

The deceased was a man of great eccentricity of character, was gifted with a high order of mind, which was enriched by solid literary acquirements, and was withal a most interesting and agreeable companion. He was the author of some works on the subject of our institutions, which it is said possess considerable merit. There was every demonstration of high respect for his memory, and his friends abroad will be gratified to learn that there was manifested a due appreciation of his worth and interesting career.

Reasons for not Fighting a Duel.—M. de Langerie and M. de Mentande, both remarkably ugly men, quarreled, and challenged one another. Arrived at the place of meeting, M. de Langerie stares his adversary in the face, and says: "I have just reflected; I can't fight you." With this he returned the sword into the scabbard. "How, sir; what does this mean?" "It means that I shall not fight." "What! you insult me, and refuse, to give me satisfaction?" "If I have insulted you, I ask a thousand pardons; but I have an insurmountable reason for not fighting with you." "But, sir, may one know it?" "It will offend you." "No, sir." "You assure me!" "Yes, I assure you." "Well, sir, this is it: if we fight, according to all appearance, I shall kill you, and then I shall remain the ugliest fellow in the kingdom. His adversary could not help laughing, and they returned to the city good friends.

Slavery in Virginia.

One day last week we fell in company, in the stage, with an intelligent gentleman from Virginia. He is a native of Connecticut, and has purchased him a farm in the heart of the Old Dominion, on which he has resided only about three or four years. We conversed freely on the subject of slavery, principally in economical point of light. His testimony only confirmed what we had often heard before, namely, that slavery is fast ruining Virginia. He stated that many Northern men are moving in and buying farms, which they cultivate by free labor, on which they are growing rich, while extensive slaveholders are growing poor on the same quantity of land. He did not know of but one Northern man in his vicinity who had bought slaves; they are generally opposed to slavery, and he thinks as they increase in numbers the influence of their principles, and more particularly the influence of their successful free labor cultivation, must hasten the overthrow of slavery in the State. He gave it as his decided opinion that all landholders would be gainers by emancipation, that the rise of land under free labor would more than balance the loss of their nominal property in slaves. Those who hold slaves and hire them out and live on their wages, alone would lose, and they would be left paupers by emancipation. This he thinks is one of the strongest influences against the abolition of slavery. Ignorance he regards as the next greatest difficulty in the way of emancipation, yet he says the system must be overthrown, if by no other influence, by its own consumptive operations, by which it feeds upon and consumes its own vitals and drinks up the spring of its own life. He states that there are whole sections where it has nearly run itself out by its impoverishing influence. He said a man with 600 acres of land & fifty slaves, cannot support his establishment, but must inevitably run his lands down and become involved, while a Northern man on 100 acres by his side will, by free labor, grow rich.

One other influence, he stated, must tend greatly to hasten the overthrow of slavery in Virginia, which is the uncertain tenure by which slave property is held. So great is the number that escape to the free States, that it produces an all-pervading sense of insecurity, lessening greatly the disposition to make investments in rational locomotives. He stated as his opinion that a majority of the free population of Virginia are now opposed to the continuation of slavery, though not sufficiently enlightened on the subject to enable them to devise the best method of abolishing it. He thinks slavery would be very insecure, and its continuance doubtful, were it not that the slaveholders have secured to themselves a great advantage in the Constitution of the State, which enables a minority to control a majority.—True Wesleyan.

Backward Spring.—A letter from Montreal, April 28th, says: "The hills of ice in the St. Lawrence have, at this moment, a magnificent appearance. It is astonishing to see the immense piles which now cover the river in front of the city.—The weather is cold and the snow two feet deep."

Mr. S. Goodrich, ("Peter Parley,") of Roxbury, Massachusetts, came passenger in the Sarah Sands, from Liverpool. We understand that Mr. Goodrich has left his family in Paris, whither he will soon return.

Another Hero Gone!—The Baltimore Sun notices the death of Mr. Darius Stansbury, who fought at North Point and Bladensburg, under Maj. Heath. He was sixty-nine years old and much beloved.

Singular Will.—A case was tried in Maryland to set aside the will of John Townsend, but the Jury was discharged, not being able to agree. Mr. Townsend has liberated all his slaves, about fifty in number, and devised to them all his lands and property, and if the law interferes to prevent it, his slaves shall become the property of his nephew, he paying each one cent per annum for their services. It was proved that the testator labored under religious delusions,—supposing he held converse with God, and one of his commands was, to liberate his slaves: on the other hand it was shown that he was a shrewd and liberal man, and rational in all other subjects but religion.

Lawful Revenge.—Many years since a gentleman in Newington, a parish of Weathersfield, Connecticut, who was a very religious and conscientious man, married one of the most ill-natured and troublesome women he could find in the vicinity. This occasioned universal surprise wherever he was known, and one of his neighbors ventured to ask him the reasons which had governed his choice. He replied, that, having had but little trouble in the world, he was fearful of becoming too much attached to things of time and sense, and though, by experiencing some afflictions, he should become more weaned from the world, and he married such a woman as he thought would accomplish his object. The best part of the story is, that his wife, hearing the reason why he married her, was much offended, and out of revenge became one of the most pleasant and dutiful wives in the town, declaring that she was not going to be a pack-horse to carry her husband to heaven.

Ohio Baptist State Convention.—This Body convened at the Baptist Church in this town, on yesterday evening, John M. Gallagher, Esq., of Springfield, presiding. A large number of delegates are in attendance; and many more it is ascertained are to arrive to-day. The Convention will continue in session until Tuesday next.—Wooster Democrat, May 6.

Important Decision.—In the great riots which took place in Philadelphia in 1844, it will be remembered that there were among other property destroyed, two churches burned. One of these was St. Augustine's. The laws of Pennsylvania, as do those of Maryland, very properly make the city or county, where property is so destroyed, liable for all damages. There have been a number of suits brought for the recovery of damages for property destroyed in these riots in Philadelphia. In every case, we believe, the suits have gone in favor of the claimants. That instituted by the trustees of St. Augustine's Church was raised by the county authorities of Philadelphia on the ground of the invalidity of the charter under which they held it. The case has been postponed from time to time, and was only brought to a hearing this week before the Supreme Court. The decision of the Court was given yesterday by Chief Justice Gibson, that the charter is valid, and that, as a consequence, the county must answer to the trustees. Of course the county will pay for the church, as it ought to have done, without dispute.—Baltimore Patriot.

A Deserved Compliment.—The National Intelligencer contains the following paragraph:

"No State in the Union is more punctual in the payment of her creditors than Ohio. About $300,000 have already been placed in the bank of New York, to meet the interest on the public debt of Ohio, which falls due on the first of May."

A fire broke out in the colleries near Cumberland Md., on Tuesday last, destroying 3000 cords of wood, and 4000 rails.

he ceremonies of laying the corner stone of Smithsonian Institute were performed at shington on Saturday, with great pomp. The cession was a long and brilliant one, embracing President and the heads of departments, sev- ladies, most of the officers of government— had a holy day on the occasion—the Ma- e and Old Fellow societies, with their striking umes and emblems, the volunteer companies Washington, and a crowd of citizens. The legacy was accompanied by a declaration its design, and the execution of that design has en assumed, as well by an acceptance of the oney as by several open and formal avowals by r government. It was "to found an institution Washington for the increase and diffusion of nowledge among men;" to found, not an academy, t a college, not a university, but something less chnical and precise, something whose import d circuit should be bolder and more compre- nsive: an institution, not merely for dissemina- g, spreading, teaching knowledge, but also, d foremest, for creating, originating, increasing

She was urt in the head; her cheek bone was broken in, er front teeth knocked out, and her hand broken, nd she was otherwise injured. It is yet doubt- ul whether she will recover.

ANOTHER.—A young man named Charles Ful- er, from Lewiston, Me., was in the woods at Me- ardis a week since last Friday, and while stand- ng upon the snow it gave way, letting him down upon the stub of a bush that had been cut about two feet above the ground, which entered his abdomen and so injured him that he died the next Monday evening.

BLACK VS. WHITE MECHANICS.—At Pensacola the white mechanics in the Navy Yard complain of the employment of slave labor, on the public works as injurious to their interests, all the brick- ayers being slaves.—This is wrong—our Gov- rnment has no control over slavery, and has no ight to employ slaves, unless white mechanics cannot be obtained. White persons pay a tax indirectly to Government, and should have the benefit of the tax. Slaves pay no tax and their masters receive their wages. We have no objec- tion to the employment of free blacks, where they themselves receive the benefit of their in- dustry, but in Slave States it strikes us as proper and expedient for the Government to employ none but whites.—*N. The Central Railroad and Trade of the West.

Each day affords some new and powerful evi- dence of the important benefits that must accrue to every Philadelphia interest by the completion of our Central Railroad. Among these may be instanced the statement of Mr. W.—one of the largest packers of Cincinnati, who in conversation with gentlemen here, assured them that one mil- lion of hogs would have passed over our road the present season, from that market, had it been completed! Their weight averaged, this year, 240 lbs. each; which would equal 1,200,000 bbls. of salt pork, freighting 240 ships of 500 tons each! As they would have been sent in bulk, the carriage of casks, salt and brine, would have been saved—while the manufacture of casks, sale of salt, and employment of a multitude of our people in curing, packing, &c., would have added largely to our local business, when adding $7,000,000 to the value of this single staple of the teeming West, beyond its price at Cincinna- ti. To those acquainted with this branch of trade, the superior value of meat originally cured with Turks Island salt, will at once be recollected— for such is the impurity of the Western, that be- fore shipment, it is needful to repack the casks, at a charge of one dollar, as regulated by law. The risks of the voyage down the Western rivers, and of spoiling by heat, together with the enormous charges at New Orleans, must not be forgotten. If such be the attractions offered by our market for pork, the superior economy of securing sim- ilar saving in beef, must be self-evident, as it is generally driven on foot to Eastern Cities, entail- ing a heavy loss in weight, over and above the charges of driving. The noble cattle of the Western valleys and prairies, cured here for for- eign markets, would render Philadelphia, the great port for the shipment of salt provisions, giv- ing an impulse to her prosperity almost unparal- leled. If these premises are doubted, let the in- credulous refer to the significant editorial recent- ly republished from the N. O. Bulletin, of Jan. 23, in your journal.

It is to be lamented that this noble enterprise has been assailed on grounds utterly unworthy of serious consideration. If the commerce and prosperity of Boston were nearly doubled by her Western Railroad in half a dozen years, Phila- delphia cannot fail to realize far greater benefits from the completion of her magnificent line to St. Louis. The world does not contain its paralled, and in the rich harvest to be reaped by our belov- ed city, all will be benefited—and none more than those whose narrow and illiberal measures have so far impeded its progress; and harassed— though not disheartened—the patriotic men pledg- ed to its consummation. The lectures of Mr. Roebling, recently delivered before the Pittsburgh Board of Trade, and now republishing by Mr. Minor in his excellent Railroad Journal, will be issued separately and cannot fail to carry convic- tion of the value of this noble enterprise to the mind of every candid reader. HEAVY LOSS.—The extensive cotton and wool- en manufactories of Morgan, Allison & Co., at Lebanon, Tennessee, were destroyed by fire on the 10th ult. Loss $40.000, $20,000 of which was insured.

NEW CITIES.—New Bedford and Charlestown, Mass., have become cities. The city government of the former was organized on Wednesday last, and Abraham Howland, Esq., elected Mayor. G. Washington Warren, Esq., is Mayor of the city of Charleston. The birth of both these cities was celebrated with public rejoicings.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—Tuesday evening.—A son of Lewis Brenholtz, on First Street, was killed a few minutes since by a barrel of salt rolling over him. He was about six years of age, and was killed instantly.—Zanesville. Gazette.

BOUNDARY OF OHIO.—We learn from the Win- chester Republican, that Governor Smith, of Vir- ginia, has appointed Messrs. Rich. K. Meade, of Petersburg, Wm. Green, of Culpepper, and George W. Thompson of Wheeling, Commissioners on the part of the State of Virginia, to meet the Com- missioners of the State of Ohio for the purpose of adjusting the boundary line between the two States.—*Z. FIRE IN THE STATE PRISON.—An extensive fire occurred on yesterday evening, between four and six o'clock, in the Ohio Penitentiary yard, by which all the workshops on the eastern side of the yard were destroyed, together with most of their contents. These shops were occupied by Mr. P. Hayden, in the manufacture of saddle-trees, hames, plating and machinery. The building was one of the first ones constructed in the Pen- itentiary; and it was contemplated removing it to give place to a better one, within a year or two; so that in this respect, the chief loss to the State will be the want of the building, until one better adapted to the present exigencies of the Prison can be supplied. The chief loss is sustained by Mr. Hayden, in machinery, manufactured articles, and stock. The fire originated in one of Mr. Hayden's shops and is supposed without design on the part of any one. Mr. H. was present in his shop when the alarm was first given. There were about four hundred and fifty Prisoners em- ployed in the various shops within the yard at the time, and they rendered efficient aid to the fire companies of the city, in extinguishing the fire. It is perhaps remarkable, that among so large a number, and at a time of so much excitement as well among the citizens and officers of the Prison as among the convicts, so great a degree of order and subordination prevailed. At the signal given, when the fire was subdued, and the fire compa- nies and citizens were about to withdraw, every prisoner was at his accustomed place, and march- ed in order to their cells. This speaks favorably of the discipline which obtains in the prison and of the efficiency with which that discipline is en- forced by the proper officers in charge of the in- stitution.—O. S. Jour. 8th.

LITTLE MIAMI RAILROAD.—The receipts on this road for April, 1847, have been as follows:

Freight,	$15,720 73
Passengers,	6,372 74
	$22,093 27

Receipts in April, 1846, were $8,846,74, show- ing an increase of $13,246,53 this year.

FIRE IN DUMFRIES, VA.—Eighteen houses burnt.—About 3 o'clock, on the 27th ult., while the wind was very high from the west, a fire broke out in Mrs. Boyle's house, opposite the brick tavern, and destroyed nearly all the houses at the east end of the town. Nearly all the men were absent, engaged in the fisheries on the Po- tomac. There was an awful silence—no bells, no engines—and the inmates of the house, most- ly females, looking on in mute despair. Few saved anything but their wearing apparel.

ANOTHER BOAT AND CARGO BURNT.—The splen- did steamer Duke of Orleans, from this port, with a full cargo, for New Orleans, was entirely con- sumed by fire early yesterday morning, while aground at Hat Island. The steamer Harry of the West, in coming up, passed within a very short distance of her, between three and four o'clock in the morning, when all was quiet on board the Duke, and the only light about her was that of the lamp suspended in the hall. When about a mile above her, Capt. Carlisle discovered that she was on fire, and immediately put his boat about to go to her assistance, but when he got along side, so rapidly had the fire spread, that the cabin was completely enveloped in flames, and the deck had fallen in. Fortunately for those on board, a flat boat used in lighting her lay along side, on which they made their escape from the burning boat; but the passengers, of whom there were few, the officers and crew, saved very little, except what they had on when the alarm was first given. No lives were lost.

Nothing was saved of the boat or cargo. The books and papers in the clerk's office, were all consumed, but we learn that the money was sav- ed.—When the Harry left her at six o'clock, the wreck was still burning.

The Duke was a very fine boat, bought a few months ago, by Capt. Holmes, and others on board, for twenty thousand dollars, and was insured for six thousand. The cargo, we presume, was mostly insured. A part of her crew were brought up by the steamer Harry of the West.—St. Louis Republican, May 1.

SLAVE CASE IN LOUISIANA.—We take great pleasure in copying from the Alexandria Republi- can the following notice of proceedings in a case involving the freedom of six negroes, a woman and five children, which came up before the Dis- trict Court of that Parish on the 17th ult. How many years has it been, since such a result as was obtained in this case, would have been a matter of most difficult achievement here in free Ohio?

The Alexandria Republican says:

"It is only in a case of this nature that a slave can be a party to a suit in our courts, and consid- erable interest was felt in it. Though slave-hol- ders, our citizens are as adverse to holding in bondage any one legally entitled to freedom as would be the veriest abolitionist in the North, and hence the most summary justice was administered in the case. It was the first case tried, and the evidence, which was taken mainly with a view to enable the holder of the negroes to indemnify himself against their vendor, being clearly in their favor, was submitted to the jury without argu- ment; who at once gave them a verdict.

The facts of the case were these: The woman with her children were, in 1807, slaves in Ken- tucky, from which State they were taken to Indi- ana Territory, where they were indentured to serve for 20 years, the laws of the Territory pro- hibiting slavery for a longer period. Subsequently they were sold, and their new owner brought them to Mississippi, and again sold them as slaves for life, to the father of the present, or more proper- ly, late owner here. One of the family, a boy, was left behind in Kentucky, and sued for and re- covered his freedom, there some years ago, since which time he has been running as a steward on a boat. Not long since, while at our landing, he fell into conversation with a boy belonging here, whom he soon discovered to be his brother. He informed him of the fact of the family being free, and at once took the steps that have eventuated in establishing it. One or two highly respectable citizens from Indiana were here are witnesses in the case.

RELIEF FOR IRELAND.—The following despatch from Lord Palmerston to Mr. Packenham, convey- ing thanks of the British government, and the British nation, to the citizens of the United States, for their liberal contributions to relieve the suffer- ings of the Irish people, will be read with pleas- ure:

Foreign Office, March 31, 1847.

Sir,—I have received your dispatch, No. 8, of the 12th ult., stating that measures have been ta- ken for the purpose of raising a subscription in the United States for the relief of the destitute Irish poor.

And I have to instruct you to take every op- portunity of saying how grateful her majesty's government, and the British nation at large, feel for this kind and honorable manifestation of sym- pathy by the citizens of the United States for the sufferings of the Irish people. It might, indeed, have been expected, that a generous and high minded nation would deeply commisserate the sufferings which an awful visitation of Providence has inflicted upon so large a population, descend- ed from the same ancestors as themselves. But the active and energetic assistance which the people of the United States are thus affording to the poor Irish, while it reflects the highest honor upon our transatlantic brethren, must tend to draw closer, and to render stronger and more lasting, ties of friendship and mutual esteem, which her majesty's government trusts will long continue to exist between the two great branches of the Anglo-Saxon family—separated, indeed, from each other by geographical position, but united together by common interests, to which every succeeding year must add increasing ex- tension and force. I am, &c.

PALMERSTON.

To the Right Hon. Richard Packenham, &c. &c.

THE EMPEROR AND THE BISHOP.—The Empe- ror of Constantinople was mortally incensed a- gainst St. John Chrysostom. One day, inflamed with anger, he exclaimed in presence of his court, "Would that I could revenge myself of that priest." Four or five of his courtiers assembled around him, venturing their opinions as to the manner in which his vengeance could be most effectually gratified. The first said, Exile him; the second, Confiscate all that he possesses; the third, Throw him in prison, and load him with chains; the fourth, Are you not all-powerful?—is not his life at your command?—give instant orders for his death. A fifth, possessed of more penetra- tion than the others, and not fearing his master's displeasure, boldly said: You are all mistaken; if you exile him, what do you gain? Is not the whole world his country? Confiscate his posses- sions, you but deprive the poor of them, not him- self. Throw him in prison, he will bless his chains, and esteem it a privilege to suffer. "Bless- ed are they that suffer persecution, for theirs is the kingdom of Heaven." If you condemn him to death, you unclose the gates of heaven to him. Prince, would you know the only sure means of revenge? Force him to commit a crime. I know him well; "that man fears nothing except to sin." "Hic homo nihil timet nisi peccatum." No; he fears neither exile, nor the loss of proper- ty; neither chains nor torture, of any kind. He fears but sin.

MEDICAL CONVENTION.—A Convention of the Medical faculty of the State of Ohio, is appointed to be held in this city, commencing on next Tuesday week, the 18th inst. From present in- dications we are led to infer that the coming con- vention will not be surpassed by any that have preceded it.—O. S. Journal.

"MASON AND DIXON'S LINE."—What was the origin and purpose of it? We hear it frequently spoken of as connected with slavery, and as orig- inally relating to that subject. Nothing can be further from the truth. At the time that line was established, slavery existed on both sides of it. A brief account of its origin may be of some inter- est just at this time.

As early as the year 1682, a dispute arose be- tween William Penn and Lord Baltimore, respec- ting the constructions of their respective grants, of what now form the States of Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland. Lord Baltimore claim- ed to and including the 40th degree of north lati- tude; and William Penn mildly, yet firmly resis- ted the claim. The debatable land was one de- gree of 69 English miles on the south of Pennsyl- vania, and extended west as far as the State itself. The matter was finally brought into the Court of Chancery, in England, and, after tedious delays, on the 15th day of May, 1750, Lord Chancellor Hardwicke made a decree awarding costs against Lord Baltimore, and directing that commissioners should be appointed to mark the boundaries be- tween the parties. The commissioner so appoin- ed met at Newcastle, on the 15th day of No- vember, 1755, and, not being able to agree, sep- arated. After a further litigation and delay, the whole matter was settled by mutual agreement between the surviving heirs of the original liti- gants.

In the year 1761, Mr. Charles Mason, of the Royal Observatory, was sent to Pennsylvania, with all the needful astronomical instruments, to measure a degree of latitude. That duty he per- formed, and a report of his proceedings was made to the Royal Socitey of London, for the year 1767.

This Mr. Mason and Jerimiah Dixon were ap- pointed to run the line in dispute, which appears to have been done in conformity with the Lord Chancellor's decree. This is the famous "Mason and Dixon's line," and the boundary between Pennsylvania on the south and Maryland on the north. Any one desirous of more detailed infor- mation will find it in Douglass's History of Amer- ica, published in Boston, in 1751; Proud's Histo- ry of Pennsylvania; the Memoirs of the Histori- cal Society of Pennsylvania; and 1 Vesey's Re- ports, 352, Penn, Lord Baltimore.

Little did the actors in this matter think that, in aftertimes, the line established with so much trouble and expense would ever be connected with a subject calculated to shake a great nation to its centre.

MINESOTA.—This new territory is bounded on the North by Canada West; on the East by Mich- igan and Wisconsin; on the South by the parallel 43° 30′ which is the most northern line of Iowa; and on the West by the river Sioux and Red Riv- er of the North. The line separating Minesota from Michigan, is in Lake Superior, and that sep- arating it from Wisconsin passes along Lake Su- perior to the Falls of the St. Louis river, and thence South till it strikes the river St. Croix, which it follows to the Mississippi. Thence down the Mississippi to latitude 43½ the place of beginning.

Embraced within these boundaries there are about 90,000 square miles—equal to 58 millions of acres. It is in nearly the same latitude as the State of Maine. In area it exceeds the Island of Great Britain, and it is nearly half equal to France. Comparing it with old States—it is as large as New York and Pennsylvania. For the produc- tion of Wheat and Grasses its soil and climate are favorable. Now, it appears to the people of the United States as extremely distant and interior. So did Wisconsin 15 years ago. In commercial advantages, it will not be one of the most favored of the States, nor yet one of the least. By means of Lake Superior, on which it borders for more than one hundred miles, from Pigeon River to Fond du Lac, its Northern and middle portion will have cheap communication with all the Lake shores and the Atlantic, and, through the Upper Mississippi and St. Peters rivers, will hold easy intercourse with the whole great valley below.

Lake Superior affords abundance of good har- bors, and the Mississippi offers fine navigation up to the Falls of St. Anthony, more than one hundred miles above the southern boundary of Mi- nesota.

With the exception of its western portion, it is well watered by rivers and lakes. Its lake bor- der is rich in metalliferous deposites.

The most important points in Minesota, at pres- ent, and probably for all time to come, are Fond du Lac, at the Western extremity of Lake Supe- rior, and Fort Snelling, near the Falls of St. An- thony.

With many, its cold climate will be an objec- tion. It is pretty well north, but, if a man wishes to raise a vigorous family (and we know of noth- ing more desirable) he will much sooner seek a home in Minesota than in Texas. There is, how- ever, abundant room, as yet, this side of that ter- ritory. North-western Ohio, Michigan and Wis- consin should first be settled.—Toledo Blade.

DISTRESSING CASUALTY.—Another dreadful accident, resulting in the loss of life, occurred last Tuesday morning, upon the Boston and Worcester Railroad between this place and Westboro', under the following circumstances.

Mr. Francis B. Hitchcock of this town, was re- turning from Boston on Tuesday morning, upon one of the freight trains, by invitation of a friend, one of the hands employed upon the train. He was seated upon the outside of one of the cars, in the place usually occupied by the brakeman, with his attention absorbed upon some other object, which prevented him from seeing, at a place a short distance this side of Westboro', where the public highway crosses the railroad, a low bridge, until it was too late to avoid collision by stooping. He was struck by one of the beams, upon his head, in such a way as to throw him from the car. —His body fell completely across the rail, and the whole train passed over him a little above the hips, severing his body almost completely, break- ing his leg and crushing his ancle, besides other injuries. He was taken up and brought to Wor- cester by the same train, and every attention paid to him that could be, but the case was hopeless, and he expired a few moments after reaching here, about an hour and a half from the time the acci- dent occurred.

Although so badly mutilated, Mr. H. preserved his senses to the last, and gave directions, even after his arrival, concerning his removal to his boarding house, and the conveyance of the intel- ligence of his decease to his relatives.

He was a young man of excellent character, and universally beloved by all who knew him. The Pacachoag Division of Sons of Temperance, of which he was a worthy member, attended the funeral in a body, on Wednesday morning; after which, his remains, attended by a delegation from the Order, were conveyed to Brimfield, his native town, for interment. Mr. H. was about 22 years of age, and has left a widowed mother, and a large circle of friends, to lament his untimely end. —T. D.—Christian Citizen.

ACCIDENT.—On the 22nd ult., as Paul Lacroix, a sugar broker, was passing a new building in New Orleans, the staging broke, a part of which falling on him, broke his neck. He died instant- ly.

FIRE AT FLUSHING.—A destructive fire occur- red at Flushing L. I., on Saturday.—It broke out in a barn belonging to a Parkes, from whence it communicated to his dwelling and several other buildings, burning down nearly a block. Water was brought from the steamboat wharf, quarter of a mile distant and it required the co-operation of men, women and children to stay the fire.

HON. JACOB WAGENSELLER, State Senator from the Union District, is dead. Our readers will re- member that he suffered a painful surgical opera- tion last fall, from the effects of which his system has never been able to re cover.—Philadelphia N. American.

To a person who regretted to the celebrated Dr. Johnson that he had not been a clergyman because he considered the life of a clergyman an easy and comfortable one, the doctor made this memorable reply:—'The life of a conscientious clergyman is not easy. I have always consid- ered a clergyman the father of a larger family than he is able to maintain. No, sir, I do not envy a clergyman's life as an easy life; nor do I envy the clergyman who makes it an easy life.'

MR. SEARS' PRESENT TO THE QUEEN.—Our read- ers (says the New York sun,) will recollect that a few months since we alluded to the gratifying fact, that Mr. Robert Sears, of this city, had forwarded a complete set of all his interesting pictorial pub- lications to the Queen of England. The following article respecting their safe arrival and presenta- tion may prove interesting to our readers. It is copied from the London Patriot, of February 22:

"AMERICAN PRESENT TO THE QUEEN.—Many in this country will be interested in learning, that a present of books from America has recently been made to our Gracious Queen, by an eminent pub- lisher in N. York. These works are, "The His- tory of the Bible," "Description of Great Britain and Ireland," "Information for the people," &c. They are profusely illustrated with fine engravings on wood, printed in imperial octavo, sumptuously bound in fine Turkey morocco, and very elegant- ly gilded, exhibiting admirable specimens of the progress that is being made in typographical and artistical skill in the United States. The present was sent from America to the care of the Rev. Thomas Timpson, by whom it was forwarded to the Right Honorable Sir George Grey, Bart., the Home Secretary, for presentation to the Queen. Sir George, in a polite letter, has assured Mr. Timpson that he has complied with his request, and that her majesty had graciously accepted the volumes. Reflecting on this gratifying fact, and remembering that the vast republic of the New World possesses our language, laws, literature, and religion, & our blood flowing in their veins, every true patriot and Christian must feel delighted, and pray that a perfect cordiality and everlasting peace may be enjoyed between the two great nations, that this enterprise may be mutually beneficial, and the means of universal good to all the nations upon earth, especially in diffusing the Gospel.

NOTICES.

Portsmouth Circuit, Muskingum Conference.—The third Quarterly Meeting will be held in Jackson, commencing, May 22. Brother Clancey will perceive that this is the time of his visit to the circuit, and we shall of course ex- pect him to be present. We are sorry that it is not in our power to accommodate him in having his meeting on the river. If he should come by the river, he will have to take the stage at Gallipolis. W. W. TIPTON.

Twin Creek Circuit, Ohio District.—Our third Quarter- ly meeting will commence on the 23d of May, at the Pleas- ant Hill meeting house, Indian Creek. We respectfully invite Brothers C. H. Williams, R. M. Dalbey, T. Finkbine and G. M. Hunt. W. PELAN.

Otsego Circuit.—Our third quarterly meeting will be held at Franklin Meeting House, commencing, June 5th; a general invitation is given, we are "no respecter of per- sons," we would gladly "engage" all who could come. We love all our good Brethren and do not wish to pass by any. Come Brethren I am laboring alone and need your help. WM. DULING.

Driftwood Mission, Indiana, April 19, 1847.

BROTHER BASSETT: We are placed in rather an awkward position, on this little Mission, in consequence of being left without any pastoral care. The Superintendent, Brother Sevier, left for home, about the first of January, with ap- pointments out, and we have not heard of him since.— Whether he has been called home to his reward, where the weary are at rest, or prevented by sickness of himself or family, we do not know, nor can we hear. If this should meet his eye, or that of any other person that can give in- formation, they will please let us know by letter or other- wise.

We are in a cold state on this Mission, at this time. Re- ligion appears to be almost extinct with many that, not long since, were warm professors. J. M. BYARLAY.

TANNER'S CREEK CIRCUIT, IA. CON.—The third quar. meeting is to embrace the 5th Saturday and Sunday of May next. Ministerial aid is most ardently solicited. Mt. Pleasant, Meeting House is the place. W. W. PAUL.

Woodsfield Circuit, Muskingum Conference.—Brother Clancy is requested to attend our third Quarterly Meeting, three miles South of Woodsfield, to be held in Jackson School House, the last Sabbath in May. Call with Isaac Pearce. We are getting along in harmony and peace. H. T. LAWSON.

Zanesville Circuit.—Our third Quarterly Meeting will be held at Claylick, commencing, May 22d. Brother Kin- ny is invited; Brother Munhall is engaged, and Brothers Bassett, Nicols, and Remsburg, have been invited, but have not definitely responded. C. S. CALLIHAN.

ANNUAL SERMON.—The Annual Sermon in behalf of the American Sunday-school Union, will be preached on Sun- day Evening, May 16th, at the Church on Washington Square, by Rev. GEORGE W. BETHUNE, D. D. Service to commence at ¼ before 8 o'clock.

ANNUAL MEETING.—The services commemorative of the TWENTY-THIRD anniversary of the American Sunday-school Union, will be attended at the MUSICAL FUND HALL, Locust Street, between Eighth and Ninth Streets, Philadelphia, on Monday Evening, May 17th.

☞ To avoid confusion and disappointment, tickets will be issued, as in former years, and may be obtained at any time after May 10th, at the Society's buildings, No. 146 Chestnut street, or of any of the Officers or Managers of the Institution.

Bucyrus Circuit, Mask. Conference.—Our next Quarterly Meeting will be held at Everhart's School House, commencing, May 29th. To this meeting we respectfully invite Brs. G. R. Bow- man, J. Jack, I. Thrap, G. M. Scott, and J. Sow- der. Please remember, I am alone, and need help. Come, by all means.

A. S. ROBINSON

Delaware Circuit, Muskingum Conference.—Our third Quarterly Meeting will be held in the neighborhood of Br. Langwell's, three miles south of Eden, commencing the last Saturday in May, (29th.) To this meeting we invite T. Pot- ter, S. Catlin, S. Lancaster, A. K. Earl, A. S. Robinson. We have no ordained Elder on this Circuit, and have sustained some disadvantage on account of it. I give notice at this early peri- od, that the brethren may have time to arrange their business and attend. Don't fail to come.

WM. HATFIELD.

NEWARK CIRCUIT.—Our third Quarterly Meeting will be held at Elizabethtown, (Perryton,) Licking county, commencing, May 29th. Brothers Case and Bassett are invited; and Brothers Ragan, Marshall, and J. Thrap, are engaged to be in attendance. W. MAYNARD.

POETRY.

Written for the Western Recorder.

I miss Thee, my Mother.

O, I miss thee, my Mother! at early dawn,
While the dew-drops ill trembles in the opening flower;
And the wild-bird is tuning his matin song,
And the insects are humming in bramble and bower:
And at noon, when the sun is far risen above,
And the laborer is plodding his homeward way,
And the plough-boy his whistling notes prolong,
Then I miss thee, dear Mother, when retiring to pray.

I miss thee, my Mother! at eve's early hour,
When the day is reclining on the bosom of night,
When twilight its magical beauty displays,
And the few gather round their lov'd sire with delight;
When the old family Bible, is brought to our view;
And thence pious instructions in wisdom are given;
When humbly we bow at the altar of prayer,
And meekly implore the protection of heaven.

Yes, I miss thee! at home, at church, and with friends,
Though loud rings the laughter, or deep be the sigh;
Though music and merriment brighten each face,
And the soul, in its fullness gleams forth from each eye:
Perhaps 'tis a song, once familiar to thee,
That falls on my ear, like sweet anthems from heaven;
Perchance, just a word, or a smile, or a tear;
But they whisper of thee, and the cord's again riven.

O, I miss thee! but I would not recall thee to earth,
Though 'twere mine but to wish, and the answer be given,
For I know thou art safe o'er the Jordan of death,
And now bask in the glories which illuminate heaven;
I know thou art happy—far happier than we,
Who are destined awhile yet to conflict with sin—
But the day is not distant,—nay its dawnings appear,
When we'll breathe the last sigh, and drop the last tear,
And our new life-immortal begin.

Atheism.

BY MRS L. H. SIGOURNEY.

"The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God,"

"No God! no God!" the simplest flower
That on the wild is found,
Shrinks, as it drinks its cup of dew,
And trembles at the sound;
"No God!" astonished echo cries
From out her cavern hoar,
And every wandering bird that flies
Reproves the Atheist's lore.

The solemn forest lifts its head,
Th' Almighty to proclaim;
The brooklet, on its crystal urn,
Doth leap to praise his name;
High sweeps the deep and vengeful sea,
Along its billowy track,
And red Vesuvius opes its mouth,
To hurl the falsehood back.

The palm tree, with its princely crest—
The ocean's leafy shade—
The bread-fruit bending to its lord,
In yon far island glade—
The winged seeds, borne by the winds,
The roving sparrows feed,—
The melon on the desert sands,
Confute the scorner's creed.

"No God!" with indignation high
The fervent sun is stirred,
And the pale moon turns paler still,
At such an impious word;
And from their burning thrones, the stars
Look down with angry eye,
That thus a worm of dust should mock
ETERNAL MAJESTY!

Paul Pry in reply to J. H.

MR. EDITOR, SIR: With your permission I wish to reply through the pages of the Western Recorder, to a communication over signature of J. H., of Batavia; in which a few questions are proposed on the subject of the rights or powers of unstationed ministers in the Methodist Protestant Church. I admire the tact of this Batavian, in endeavoring to lay the train for an investigation of quite a different nature from that intended, or referred to, in vol. 8, No. 25, of Western Recorder, under the head of "Paul Pry and the local preachers." Br. J. H. look this way Sir, and let us read the subject referred to above, and we shall find two plain propositions set forth; first that there are ten points of difference between a local minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and an unstationed minister in the Methodist Protestant Church. Secondly, that the office of an unstationed minister in the Methodist Protestant Church, is preferable to the office of a local minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, on the first, the ten points are definitely stated. On the second, from an examination of these points of difference, the conclusion is drawn, and the preference given to the ministerial office in the Methodist Protestant Church. Now my good friend J. H., which of these two propositions do you deny, or which of the ten points do you deny? If you deny neither of the points, and admit the two propositions, then all I contended for is granted, and we are not at issue in the case.

Much has been written from Batavia, and other places, by J. H. and others on the rights of the unstationed ministers, they have rights, and they should be maintained, carefully guarded and never relinquished. Yet permit me to say Sir, it is one thing to assert, the office of an unstationed minister of the Methodist Protestant Church, to be preferable to the office of a local minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and another thing to assert, that I am perfectly satisfied with every thing in the constitution and book of discipline relative to elections, privileges, Electoral College &c. J. H. takes it for granted because I prefer the one to the other, that of course I have no fault to find, and that whenever attacked, I am ready to defend every minutia in the Book, and hence he says "dont' dodge the questions," my good fellow stand up to the trough, fodder or no fodder. I asserted facts indisputable, and if the Br. hailing from Batavia disputes any of them, let him state definitely which they are, and he will find the pen of Paul Pry, ready to defend, and set forth the truth. But as I am a member and minister of the Methodist Protestant family, courtesy demands that I should at least give a passing notice to the questions of my friend J. H. First then we suppose a case. Suppose a circuit, or Station to elect an unstationed minister to represent it, in the Annual Conference. J. H. asks "whom does he represent?" I answer his constituents composed of (perhaps unstationed ministers or preachers) Exhorters, Leaders, Stewards, Trustees and all the members male and female. Should any resolution be brought up touching the rights of any of these different officers or members, the elected minister true to his trust would immediately meet the obnoxious motion face to face, and by his discharge of duty, let J. H. and others know that he is the representative of his entire Circuit or Station. True, his name would be entered on the list of lay delegates, but his voice and vote would be in favor of right, through all the business of the conference.

And now as it regards the Electoral College. let each circuit and station send up one unstationed minister (if they have one) agreeably to the constitution and book of discipline, and I assure you, they may wield a powerful influence in the election of delegates to the General Conference. In the Pittsburgh Conference district, there are some 40 circuits and stations; thirty of these I presume could constitutionally send a delegate to the electoral college, and were these united with the divisions that sometimes occur in Itinerant ranks, they may control any election. I cannot believe my friend J. H. wishes the power to be placed in the hands of unstationed ministers at the expense of the itinerants, though I must acknowledge it looks very considerably that way, for he complains "that the unstationed minister to entitle him to a seat in the college must be elected by his brethren, this he says is a difference betwees itinerants and the unstationed ministers," does he mean that all unstationed ministers should have a seat in the college, then indeed, they would no longer be in the minority, but with an overwhelming majority, would carry all before them. I know Sir, that unstationed ministers, are frequently not elected, and consequently do not attend, to take their seats in the electoral college, but this is not the fault of the constitution, it grows out of one of three things, first it may be a neglect to elect, or it may be 2nd penuriousness either on the part of the church or minister elect, to meet the necessary expense and time, to attend the sitting of the conference or college,—or 3d it may be, the confidence our unstationed brethren repose in the Itinerants, that they think their interests entirely safe in their hands, and indeed, let the cause of their absence be what it may, neither the constitution, book of discipline, nor itinerants, are to be blamed; you are to look for the blame to some other source. The church of the Saviour being a body, one body, it is not reasonable to suppose, that the members of the body will war with each other, the interest of one member is the interest of the whole, conflicting interests, and rights, are not known in the spiritual body, the church. Says Christ "ye are all Brethren one of another," "members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones." Oh! never let it be heard in the branch of the family to which we have the honor of being united, that our interests are opposite. Come Br. J. H. there is not a faithful watchman on Zion's walls, but will meet you in the spirit and temper of a christian, and award to you all your rights. If after the experiment of sixteen years, it is found our constitution needs amending, let us constitutionally call a convention, but first let us be sure "we are right; and then go ahead." I do not claim for our constitution and book of discipline, perfection or infallibility, yet I fear that in escaping from Babylon, we may angle past Jerusalem, and in our desire to amend, may make it like Young's Infidel, "the worse for mending." Br. J. H. asks again, if an unstationed minister should be elected to the General Conference, "whom does he represent?" I answer, the church in general, and the unstationed ministry in particular; and that unstationed ministers are elected, may be seen by reference to the list of ministerial members to the different General Conferences. I was informed by the delegation from the Maryland Conference at the last Gen. Conference, that they were in the habit of electing one half of their delegation from the unstationed ranks; perhaps the last delegation was a deviation, though I think they were about equally divided. In looking over the different conferences, I find, they generally select, whether in or out of the Itinerant ranks, those whose all is identified with the cause of mutual or equal rights. Br. J. H. I hope to become better acquainted with you, I feel pleased with the spirit and temper of your communication, and most heartly assure you, agreeably to your request, I shall pry more closely into the matters referred to, you will find me Sir, ever ready to oppose tyranny and oppression, both in church & state, and furthermore you will find me ever ready, to vindicate the principles of civil and religious liberty, Br. J. H. I would be glad to see you face to face, but as that perhaps may never be the case, you shall hear from me occasionally through the Recorder; and whenever I assert, and you deny, then I am put on the defensive, and "will never give up the ship whilst there is a shot in the locker" unless overcome by stronger arguments, and taken prisoner by the force of reasoning. Now my good fellow I bid you (for the present) adieu; begging leave to subscribe myself, Your peeping, prying friend. PAUL PRY.

Sketches by Rev. A. McGuire.

Travels and labors in forming circuits in Ohio, in the early organization of the Methodist Protestant Church.

NO. II.

On the 16th of January 1829, I received a note from an old local preacher, J——D——who had given part of the ground for a meeting house in our neighborhood, in which I had an appointment, made previous to my leaving the Methodist Episcopal Church. In the note he says he has heard that I have 'joined the Radicals.' He continues, "If you have, we do not intend that you shall preach any more in Olive Branch Meeting House, and we hope that you will not blame us, as you are the man that have shut the doors of many meeting houses against yourself."

Regardless of this note, I went to my appointment, and entered the pulpit before the old Brother arrived. When he came, he also entered the pulpit, and asked me to go out of doors with him. I declined—he insisted—I refused. He asked me if I had joined the Reformers. I said yes, I have. He then told me I must not preach here to-day. I said, yes, I will preach here this day, it is my appointment—the people have come out to hear me, and I shall preach. He then said, Preach, but dont make another appointment, and left the pulpit, & just as I was rising to commence, one of the Brothers of the opposing party, began to sing. I saw that they designed to prevent me from preaching. As soon as they were done singing, the old Brother said, let us pray; and as soon as he said Amen, I gave out the two first lines of my hymn, and the congregation rose and joined me in singing. After I had prayed I read my text, Isaiah 33-22. The Lord is our Judge the Lord is our Law giver, the Lord is our king, he will save us. The text naturally divided itself into four heads; when treating on the second clause: the Lord is our Law-giver, I brought into view, the 'Divinely authorized' Episcopal Law-makers and expounders. When I got thro', I invited some one of them, (there were two or three Preachers) to come and close, the old Br. came into the pulpit, and began to abuse me. I had to tell him that such abusive language, was a poor way to support their Church Government, but it appeared to be all the way they had to do it, and we would have to let them have that way. In the few minutes which he occupied, a number left the house; he closed, with looking at me with an angry countenance, and saying, You need not make another appointment here, if you do I shall shut the door against you, I then told the congregation that I rejoiced in suffering such opposition, especially, because our Blessed Lord and Saviour, was abused and slandered,—because our venerale father Wesley was hindered from preaching in the old church, when he began to preach reform. I then gave out a hymn, and called on Br. Robison to pray. I then went on to Rochester, and preached in the house of an Episcopal Methodist. I then went to Deerfield, where God had blessed my labors, three weeks previous, to the conversion of several souls. I got as many of the male members together as I could, that I might inform them that I had left the church, and also to read and explain the Articles &c., they all appeared well pleased, and said, that was Republicanism, and spoke strongly in favor of our principles. But Oh! what a poor weak vassilating creature is man, by the time I came round again and expected to organize, they were nearly all turned against me, through the influence of J. B. F., and the Preacher in charge and chose rather to be deprived of their rights as men and christians, than to come out and enjoy gospel liberty.

On Thursday 23d, I went to M'Canicksburgh, fifteen miles north of Cincinnati, here I met with John Stewart, Preacher in charge of that circuit, having been informed by Br. Carter, (who had received me into his house,) that I wished to preach in their church. After asking a number of questions, such as where have you been, where are you going, what are you doing! he then asked, Is it true that you are appointed by the Baltimore Convention, an agent to organize societies, &c., I answered yes, Sir. And have you accepted the appointment! I have Sir. Well then, we dont want you to come here. We are all in peace, and do not wish any of you to come here to disturb us, and you need not expect to preach in our church, at least if I had the key you should not get in. I replied, O, brother I do not expect you wish us to come amongst you, lest the poeple be informed of what kind of government they are under, for we know, & you know, that it is to your interest to keep the people in ignorance on that subject, and every stratagem has been made use of by you travelling peachers, to prevent an examination of the power and assumed authority, exercised, by the Bishop and his officers over the local preachers and laity, and now since the General Conference has claimed a divine right to expound Gospel doctrine and discipline, and legislate for themselves and for the whole church without their voice so we without your consent, claim justly and truly a divine right to oppose your unscriptural claims, and to open the eyes of the people, bidding defiance to your inquisatorial punishments, of judging and expeling, &c.. His principal argument in reply was that the Church Government has done so much good. See the vast number that have joined us, &c. I asked him, if it was preaching their church government that had converted sinners, and brought so many thousands into the church? nay verily, I would venture to say that you may preach your church government until your eyes burst from your heads, and you would not get one sinner converted to God, nor one man of good information to join the church. We then entered into controversy on the subject. He become, to all appearance very angry, and called me a liar several times, for which I reproved him in a mild but plain way saying, Br. such language does not become a christian minister. By this time sister Carter invited me in to dinner, I took refreshment, and rode to Br. Mutchners near Spring Meeting House, and was received as a brother. A. McGUIRE.

EFFECTS OF ROCKING CHAIRS.—A writer in the Boston Transcript, in condemning the constant use of rocking chairs by young ladies in particular, says: "Nearly half a young lady's indoor life is spent, the body half suspended by the elbows, and the muscles of the back entirely relaxed, in the rocking chair. The necessary consequence is, a crooked spine, a weak back, a high pair of shoulders, and an awkward manner of carrying the head,—effects perfectly incompatible with graceful movements of any kind. The majority of laboring men carry the head and shoulders less ungraceful than the majority of ladies, merely because exercise with them strengthens the back, and the forming rocking chair has never humped their shoulders, and pitched forward their heads."

A Frenchman wishing to tell a fat lady that she was very considerate, said, "Madame, you are very considerable."

Tobacco.

Come old and young and hear me tell
How strong tobacco smokers smell,
Who love to smoke their pipe so well,
That for tobacco they will sell
Their right to social union.

They always scent the atmosphere,
And you may know when they are near—
Though not a word from them you hear—
Their breath grows stronger every year,
While in this smoking union,

They clean their pipe-stem with a wire,
Then fill the bowl and put in fire,
And smoke till it does quite expire,
Nor do they ever seem to tire
In this laborious union.

Sometimes from three to six you'll see
Collected in one company,
And every fellow in good glee;
They then must have a smoking spree—
A fœtid, smoking union.

And then the fumes and smoke will rise
Like morning mists, towards the skies;
Then woe to him who has weak eyes,
Unless he takes his leave, and flies
Away from such a union.

With impudence they oft presume
To vex all persons in the room,
Who can't endure tobacco fume,—
And they must bear this wretched doom,
Or leave the smoking union.

Some keep their money from the poor,
And send them hungry from their door,
And haste away to some one's store,
And spend it for tobacco more,
To burn in smoking union.

The heathen who in darkness lie,
May in their errors live and die,
Before those persons c'er will try,
Them with the gospel to supply,
To teach them heavenly union.

I wonder how such folks can say
They have religion every day,
And love the Lord, and love to pray,
When they his money smoke away
In guilty conscience union.

There are some who tobacco chew,
And though it often made them spew,
And made th em drunk as Bacchus, too,
The practice they did still pursue,
At th' expense of social union.

Sometimes within their neighbor's door
They'll cast their quids, some three or four,
And spit on carpet, hearth, or floor,
Sometimes a gill, or even more,
And talk of social union.

Oft times within the church you'll view,
That persons there will sit and chew,
And spit upon the floor or pew,
Until it spreads a foot or two,
And sing of heavenly union.

When they are mad they'll chew much more,
Until the angry fit is o'er,
Than they were known to chew before;
Their anger then is much too sore
To think of heavenly union.

The quid is oft so large within,
The juice runs out and stains the chin,
And then I always have to grin,
And think there is no little sin,
In this tobacco union.

Van Wert, Ohio, 1847. [ANTI-TOBACCO.

From the Western Christian Advocate.

"Things that Grieve Me."

Mr. Editor.—In the Western Christian Advocate, of February 5th, 1847, I find an article written by an "Itinerant," under the cognomen of the foregoing caption. Now, I do not intend to offer any objections to the subject therein named, but shall merely offer the following remarks, as an amendment or addition:

1. It grieves me to see ministers of the Gospel indulge in the filthy practice of chewing tobacco, at any time or place, and especially in the pulpit; for an eminent divine hath said, that "cleanliness is next to godliness," which I believe to be true; and, then, I always thought that ministers ought to set no bad or indecent example before the people.

2. It grieves me to see lay members indulge themselves in the odious practice of using tobacco in any form, at any time or place, and especially in chewing in time of worship, and ejecting their filthy spittle all around them, on the floor, on the stove, on a bench, or perchance on a brother's clothing, or against the pulpit. This is positively disgraceful, and egregiously indecent. All members are not clear of this charge. Remember somebody has to clean the meeting-house, or it will soon become intolerably offensive, and scandalously dirty.

But, laying aside the indecency and immorality of the practice, it is expensive, and very unhealthy. What great good might be done by a judicious outlay of the money that is annually expended for tobacco in Ohio? It would educate many that are ignorant; it would give food to the hungry, clothe the ragged, naked, and dirty in comely apparel, and send scores of missionaries to benighted and heathen lands. It would annually furnish the means for constructing churches, turnpikes, railroads, telegraphs, and do many other things for the comfort, convenience, and welfare of the people of this great state.

Again, I said it was unhealthy. The ultimate active principles of tobacco are deadly poisons, cause many diseases, and are most virulently destructive of life. The nervous system, the brain, the lungs, liver, and stomach, as well as the heart, all suffer from its habitual use. Tobacco has been analyzed by Vauquelin and other distinguished chemists, by which its active principle, called Nicotia, has been discovered and separated. This is one of the most virulent poisons known. A single drop of it was sufficient to destroy a dog, and small birds perished at the approach of a tube containing it. Tobacco also contains an oil which Mr. Bodie has proved to be an active poison. A single drop, administered to a cat, destroyed it in about five minutes; and two drops given to a dog, was followed by the same result. Just think of these things, ye tobacco chewers—ye that daily take this poisonous herb, "and roll it under your tongue as a sweet morsel." Reflect, that, although its baneful effects are not always immediately apparent, its influence is gradually undermining the physical constitution, & thereby laying a foundation, broad and deep as life, for future disease and death; and that one, or both of these results, is as sure and certain as it is that night follows the day, or day follows the night. And behold the tobacco chewer. What sort of a biped is he? Unto what shall I compare him? shall it be to a Chinese, or Hindoo opium eater? shall it be to a poor, deluded inebriate, hugging his brandy bottle?

Friend of humanity, view the sable picture, and again behold the man! When in company, see him skulk out to one side, in very shame—turn his back, and take a delicions chew; or, if he be not very particularly polite, he will hardly take this trouble. If he go to a neighboring house, behold him take his chair, even in a warm summer's day, and huddle up to the chimney corner, or in front of a cold stove, in order to obtain a convenient place in which to eject his filthy spume; or if he be not overstocked with good manners, the top or side of the stove, the carpet, the floor, the sofa, or anything else, may receive the filthy bespearment. What an abomination—what a stain on Christianity! And, O, what a breath he has—what mortal can endure it? it savors of the pest-house. O, shame! shame! where is thy blush! If the ladies of this noble state, with one united voice, should proclaim aloud their intolerable hatred, and their unconquerable 'veto' against this indelicate abomination, and evince a firm resolve not to be content to dwell in a mansion filled with this pestiferous miasma, or in an atmosphere that is scented and perfumed with the smoke and vapor of tobacco, the practice of chewing would soon become unpopular and highly dishonorable, and, therefore, speedily die a natural and merited death. Much more might be said, but I here let the curtain drop.

MEMORIA TECHNICA:

Or, the Art of Abbreviating those Studies which give the greatest labor to the Memory; including Numbers, Historical Dates, Geography, Astronomy, Gravities, &c.; also Rules for Memorizing Technicalities, Nomenclature, Proper Names, Prose, Poetry, and Topics in general.—Embracing all the available Rules found in Mnemonics or Mnemotechny of Ancient and Modern Times. To which is added a Perpetual Almanac for Two Thousand Years of Past Time and Time to Come. Adapted to the use of Schools. By LORENZO D. JOHNSON. Second edition, revised and improved.—Boston.

PRICE—50 CENTS.

In presenting to the public the "Memoria Technica" which, in some respects, may be said to contain a new theory of instruction, the publishers beg leave to call the attention of Teachers, School Committees, and others interested in education, the peculiar merits of the work. It has been already introduced into several of our best and most popular schools in Boston and vicinity, and has already received high commendation from many of our most distinguished clergymen and other literary men who have examined it.

Notices of the Press.

'This system of Mnemotechny, differing considerably from the one introduced by Prof. Gouraud, is designed to furnish all the rules for aiding the memory without lessening mental culture, which can be made available during a course of elementary study. The illustrations may be easily comprehended by any person of ordinary mental capacity, and the application of the principle upon which the system is based must necessarily furnish an agreeable and useful exercise to the mind. It is well adapted to common school instruction, and may be made a very profitable study, if rightly pursued. Every page of the work gives evidence of a desire to present the laws of association distinctly & clearly, so as to enable the learner to establish such relations between things, events, &c., as will aid the memory. We commend the book to teachers and all interested in this important subject.'—N. Y. Teachers' Advocate.

'The art of improving the memory is surely a very important one, and whoever contributes any thing to further this end, certainly renders an important service to the public. Mr Johnson, we believe, has succeeded in bringing his system of mnemonics into such a practicable form, as will render it an essential aid to all who do not naturally have a great power of memory.'—Ch. Witness

'This is a treatise on artificial memory prepared for the use of schools. The subject is a curious one, and worthy of attention.'—Boston Recorder.

'This system of mnemonics, being the first work of the kind ever prepared for the use of schools, and being so arranged and simplified that any one of ordinary capacities may easily acquire a knowledge of its principles, is certainly worthy of examination and study. It is most emphatically an aid to the memory, and as such, is well adapted to common school instruction. We heartily commend it to public notice, while we hope that Mr. Johnson will receive the reward due to his industry and perseverance by seeing this work extensively introduced into our schools, public and private.'—Tem. Standard.

'The author promises to endow his pupils with an infinite faculty of memory. If he can do it without too much trouble on the part of the recipients, he will do a good thing, and as far as we can judge, he seems likely to accomplish it. While his system is much more simple than any we have before examined, it contains a great deal more. Moreover, it makes the thing a matter of practical education, within the reach of all.'—Chronotype.

'There are minds of a certain class that are wont to be interested in mnemonics, and we doubt not that such may find valuable assistance in a work of this kind.—N. E. Puritan.

'The book, although designed and adapted to the use of schools, is nevertheless worthy the attention of all persons who wish to assist or strengthen memory.'—N. E. Washingtonian.

'A very ingenious and useful book, designed to shorten the labor of those studies which require the exercise of the memory, by a system of memorizing.'—Reading Gazette, Pa.

We feel no hesitation in recommending this work to the deliberate attention of teachers, and the guardians of youth. We learn that it is received into several of the schools in Boston, and used as an auxiliary help to the studies now pursued by the pupils.'—Boston Courier.

'We noticed the first edition of this book a short time since, and in addition to what we then said, will only say now, that it is prepared by one who has paid great attention to the subject, and who has been employed to teach his system by some of our most experienced teachers and wisest men.'—Ch. Register.

'We have given the work a partial examination, sufficient to become convinced that the subject is one of importance.'—Ch. Watchman.

The Memoria Technica is now studied in some of our best schools; and the system taught in it appears to be much approved by those who have made trial of it.'—Evening Traveller.

The work contains a vast amount of important facts and useful information; which, aside from its value as a system of instruction, render it, as has been justly said by many who have examined it, well worth the price of the work as a mere book of reference. Published by
GOULD, KENDALL & LINCOLN,

☞ We expect to have a supply of the above work, forwarded to us for sale, in Putnam, at 50 cents per copy, when we find there is demand for them.

REMINISCENCES

OF THE FIRST SETTLEMENT OF OHIO.

NO. X.

Friend Bassett: In the former part of my notes, I mentioned the fact, that the first settlers of Marietta brought the institutions of the gospel with them; and that schools were established as soon as there were children to attend them. Since I wrote that article, I have received a sermon preached by the present Pastor of the Congregational Church in Marietta, the Rev. Thomas Wickes, in commemoration of the organization, in the fiftieth anniversary, Dec. 6th 1846; from which I should be gratified, if you will make a few extracts which I have marked for that purpose. I would observe that Mr. Wickes seems to think that Dr. Cutler was the first to preach here, which was not the case. My father in notes left by him, mentions attending preaching the first Sabbath after he arrived at Marietta, which was before the arrival of any family.

I will also observe that I was one of the children who attended the Sabbath school of Mrs. Lake. I will thank you to insert likewise the names of the persons who formed the church, and those who joined it within the first year after, from a pamphlet published by the Church in 1834. Almost every member of these, as well as the Deacons, I was acquainted with. HORACE NYE.

May 13, 1847.

I shall not dwell upon the many interesting events connected with the early settlement, but shall confine myself entirely to its religious history. It is with this alone that we have to do on the present occasion. It is however a fact of much interest, that the religious history of Marietta commences almost, if not quite, as early as its social and civil. It should be recollected that this was the first settlement made in what was then the North Western Territory, embracing the whole region of country north of the Ohio river—that it was in the midst of a wide extended wilderness, far beyond the bounds of civilization, and accessible only by a long, toilsome, and hazardous journey across the Allegheny Mountains. Yet almost from the very beginning, the infant colony enjoyed the stated labors of the ministry. Very soon after the organization of the Ohio Company, which was at Boston in the year 1787, the enlightened and liberal men, who had the control of its affairs, began to think of providing for the support of the gospel, and the instruction of youth, in the new settlement which was about to be made. They knew the inestimable value of these institutions in their own beloved New England: and they sought to transplant them with her sons to this Western valley. Accordingly, on the 7th of March, 1788, a resolution was passed by the Company convened at Providence R. I., making provision for the support of gospel institutions and a teacher of youth. Dr. Manasseh Cutler, one of the Directors, was empowered to carry this resolution into effect, by engaging some minister of the gospel to go out to this infant colony, and become the spiritual instructor and guide of the people. In the course of that same year, Dr. Cutler was successful in engaging Daniel Story, a resident to the ministry, to enter this new and distant field of labor, who after a long and toilsome journey, arrived at Marietta, in the spring of 1789, one year after the first detachment broke ground in the wilderness. Thus before the timber was felled on this soil, was the glad sound of Salvation proclaimed by her appointed ministers to this little band of New England's sons and daughters, though far from the homes and sanctuaries of their Fathers. Nor even was Mr. Story the first one, who had the honor of preaching the gospel in this wilderness. Dr. Manasseh Cutler, who had taken a prominent part in the affairs of the Ohio Company, and who with Winthrop Sargent had negotiated the purchase of the land with the government of the United States, a man withal of distinguished ability and attainment, was appointed by the Company to visit the new settlement as their agent. Dr. Cutler arrived at Marietta in August of the year 1788 with the first company of families, that made their way across the mountains: and on the 24th of that month, which was the Sabbath, held public worship in the stockade garrison, which had been erected by the first detachment of pioneers. Dr. Cutler remained until some time in September, and continued to preach during the period of his visit. After the departure of Dr. Cutler, Gen. Benjamin Tupper,* who had been a deacon in a church in New England, conducted religious services regularly among the colonists, until the arrival of Mr. Story in the following spring. So that from the beginning, the Sabbath was observed by the assembling of the people to hear the preached gospel, or for prayer and praise. The colonists brought with them the God of their Fathers—that God, who had carried them so successfully through their long revolutionary struggle. Here they set up his holy altars, around which they gathered with their children.

* Previous to his departure from New England, General Tupper made application to the Northern Association in Hampshire county, Massachusetts, "for a form of church order and discipline fitted to a church to be collected in a new plantation," i. e. in the new settlements to be made in the West. That Association accordingly drew up an elaborate document, containing a form of church order, sustained by arguments from Scripture, together with Articles of Faith and a Covenant. The church order recommended is a combination of Presbyterianism and Congregationalism. The office of Ruling Elder is urged as Scriptural: yet all the decisions of the Eldership are to be laid before the whole church or brotherhood for their consent and concurrence. This document was brought out by General Tupper, and is now in possession Wm. R. Putnam, Esq.

I wish it may be noticed, that the Ohio Company, in their corporate capacity provide for the support of the ministry. There was as yet no church or religious Society organized in the new Settlement. But the Company, having a care for the spiritual interests of their colony, provided for it a minister of Christ, and paid him in part out of their own funds, it being arranged or made a condition, that the settlers themselves should furnish the residue of his support. Twenty dollars was also paid by the company to Col. E. Battelle, for giving religious instruction at Belpre. He acted as chaplain to that settlement during the Indian War, reading the church service regularly on the Sabbath to the inmates of "Farmers' Castle," as the stockade garrison at Belpre was called. In addition to this, when the purchase of this tract was made by the Ohio Company from the U. S., Government, Congress stipulated, that every twenty-ninth section in each township, (every township being divided into thirty-six sections) should be reserved or set apart for religious purposes. It was unknown, of course, where the twenty-ninth section in any township would fall, until the surveys were made. In the township of Marietta, that section fell in the town plot, and of necessity became much more valuable on that account, yielding a much larger income, than if it had fallen elsewhere. The annual ministerial rents, distributed in the various churches of Marietta, arise from this source. Mr. Story, knowing of this provision made by Congress, doubtless looked to this in part as the means of his support; though on account of the Indian war following, there was no income arising therefrom until about the year 1800.

These facts are worthy of notice, as they show the interest which the Ohio Company felt, in establishing and sustaining the institutions of the gospel in the infant settlemens, which were then making in this great Western valley.

Another fact of interest, connected with the early religious history of Marietta, was the establishment of a Sabbath School in the stockade garrison in the year 1791, which was probably one of the first Sabbath Schools taught in the U. States. This school was started by Mrs. Archibald Lake, a pious and aged widow from New York. She was grieved to see the children of the garrison,* spending the Sabbath afternoons in frivolous amusements: and she collected them together in her own dwelling, where she taught them the Westminster catechism, and lessons from the bible. Her scholars, about twenty in number, and consisting only of the younger children, were much interested in listening to her simple and affectionate instruction. Mrs. Lake continued her school for four or five years while the war lasted, after which she removed to Rainbow, on the Muskingum, and her school was broken up. It is not a little singular, that one among the very first, perhaps the first Sabbath school, that was ever established in America, should have been found in these Western wilds, far beyond the bounds of civilization, in a garrison, surrounded by hostile Indians, and continued through all the sufferings and privations of that war. Some of the present members of this church were connected with that school.

Let us now return to the account of Rev. Daniel Story. As before stated, he arrived at Marietta in the spring of 1789 and commenced his labors as an evangelist, for he was not ordained until several years after. Settlements had been commenced already at other points within the Ohio Company's purchase, beside Marietta, viz: at Belpre and Waterford: to which places Mr. Story devoted one third of his time.

There being no roads or bridges constructed at this early day, his visits to these places were made by the river in canoes, the mode of travelling which was generally in use among the settlers. It was in fact almost the only mode of communication between the different settlements for many years. During the continuance of the war, Mr. Story was compelled to confine his labors to Marietta, as the danger involved in passing from settlement to settlement was too great to allow the exposure. The place in which divine worship was at first held, was in a room in the north-west blockhouse of the stockade, which was set apart for that purpose, and for the holding of courts; and also in a room in a public house, at the corner of Front and Green streets, now occupied by stores. When, however, the War broke out in 1791, it became hazardous to pass from the stockade to the point, the streets being filled with fallen timber, and the girdled trees still standing over all the ground intervening, and now occupied by our dwellings, affording places of ambush and concealment for the enemy: divine service therefore on the Sabbath was confined to the blockhouse in the garrison. After the war, Mr. Story preached a portion of his time in a large room of the stockade or garrison which was erected on the point.

In the year 1796, about eight years after the first settlement, measures were adopted for the organization of a church. A number of the settlers and residents had been members of churches at the East, and the time had now come, when it was deemed proper to effect a distinct organization among themselves, and set up a church of Christ in the wilderness. On the 4th of Dec. 1796, a meeting of the friends of the Redeemer was called, to take the necessary steps to this end. A committee of three was appointed to draft the form of a Confession of Faith and Covenant, to be submitted to the meeting. On the next day this committee reported, and after a repeated reading of the Confession of Faith and Covenant, they were unanimously adopted. The Confession of Faith, as adopted, was a very brief one, being different from the one now used in this church, which was drawn up at a later period by the Rev. Samuel Robbins. Mr. Story, with two of the brethren, was appointed a committee to examine the vouchers or letters, which the several individuals had of their regular standing in some Congregational or Presbyterian church of this country, or one of the dissenting Protestant churches of England, and to decide upon the propriety of their becoming members of the church about to be formed. The formal organization was effected the next day, Dec. 6, by the persons signing their names to the Confession of Faith and Covenant.

The number who united in affecting this organization was 32—15 males and 17 females. Of the 15 male members, 7 had been officers in the revolutionary army. This fact shows in some degree what the material was, of which the church was composed. One circumstance respecting its formation is a little singular. There is nothing appearing in the records of the meetings prior to, or at the organization, nor in the articles of Faith adopted, which shows at all to what denomination, they intended to belong, or what form of government they design to adopt. The early church records, which have come down to us, are imperfect, and the omission may be accounted for on that ground. It is probable that a vote was taken in some way determining the point, the record of which has not been preserved.—It appears that the church assembled from time to time for the transaction of business, according to Congregational order. There is, however, no record of the election of any deacons until 1799, nearly three years after its organization, when four persons were chosen to that office; Dr. Josiah Hart of Marietta, Joseph Spencer of Vienna, Va., Benjaman Miles of Belpre, and Nathan Proctor of Waterford. The members of the church were scattered through these several settlements, and a deacon was chosen for each one. There were not materials for separate churches at all of these points, but one was formed at Marietta, embracing all, from twelve to twenty miles around.*

In March of the year 1797, very soon after the formation of the church, measures began to be taken toward the calling and settlement of a pastor. Mr. Story was the choice of the church to this office. Hitherto he had been employed by the Ohio Company to labor within their new settlements: but he was now called to the pastoral office in the church, which had been recently constituted. About this time, Mr. Story made a visit to New England, and Dr. Manassah Cutler was appointed by the church their agent, in connection with Mr. Story, in calling a council in New England, for his ordination to the Gospel Ministry, and his installation over this church. A council was convened accordingly, May 1798, in Hamilton Mass., at which Mr. Story was regularly ordained, and he soon returned to Marietta to assume the pastoral charge, to which he had been called.

In 1797, the same year that Mr. Story received the call of the church, better provision was made for public worship, by the erection of a commodious building, at an expense of about one thousand dollars, designed both for an Academy and a place of worship. It was called the 'Muskingum Academy,' and stood on the lot immediately adjoining this church. The same building is now on Second Street, occupied as a private dwelling. Divine worship continued to be held in this Academy, until the erection of this house we now occupy, which was commenced in 1807, and dedicated in 1809.

* The following is a list of the members admitted during the first two years, as published in connection with the Confession of Faith, and Covenant of the said Congregational Church. It will be seen that the number does not quite correspond with that given in the extract from Mr Wickes. H. N.

Letters to an Eminent Minister.

LETTER III.

Manifested anxiety for the conversion of the Wealthy.

Sir: I now request your attention while I introduce another feature of obvious error, in some churches, and committed by many ministers; a great desire for the conversion of respectable members of society, and little manifested anxiety for the salvation of the rest of community. You cannot but be aware, sir, if you have examined the conduct of many ministers and churches, that their partiality assumes as many shapes as Proteus himself, though of a different nature; and if you will allow another mythological figure, possesses as many heads as the hydra which infested the marsh of Lerna, which Hercules was unable to destroy without the assistance of Iolaius—the moral of which you are no doubt acquainted with. There is a continued itching among many ministers and leading members for the accession of prominent members of society to their branch of the church without even a justly corresponding anxiety for the conversion and accession of the rest of mankind. The poor, especially are little thought of, and cared about as much. The high and respectable standing of men in worldly honors and riches, was never recognized by the Saviour of the world as an inducement worthy of all toil and effort to influence them to become communicants at the altar of Christianity. He came to seek and to save the lost sheep of the House of Israel. How widely different the conduct of ministers in this our day! and hence we very frequently hear expressions similar to those contained in the following dialogue, which we introduce to illustrate our subject:—

Minister.—Good morning, Brother B. I did not observe you at our meeting, last evening.—I felt sorry that you were not there, as we had a very interesting time, and received a great accession of strength to our church. I suppose, however, that rumor has wafted you the intelligence by this time?

Lay Member.—No, sir, I have not yet received any information of that kind. Pray whom has the church been so fortunate as to secure.

M.—The popular and wealthy Mr. Cresonius.

L. M.—Indeed! You truly astonish me, sir!! Who would have supposed that!!! And then, to think of it, a man of such commanding influence and wealth!

M.—He belongs to one of the most respectable families, whose influence here, you know, sir, is almost unlimited; besides, he is accounted by community as a very liberal gentleman, and his union with the church may have a great bearing on the remainder of the family, and probably be the means of elevating our society. Our church, hitherto, unfortunately, has not been composed of the best material which has kept us somewhat in the rear of other orthodox denominations.

L. M.—That is very true, sir; and I have repeatedly advanced the same opinion. It has always appeared to me, that we could not prosper until we received men of influence into the church. And as Mr. Cresonius has thrown the weight of his respectability on our side, I sincerely hope that it will tend to bring about a more congenial and prosperous state of affairs.

We might extend this dialogue, and bring before you more of these very peculiar sentiments, found no where but in the shallow hearted and frozen bosom of the religious speculator; but our limits will not allow it. We therefore pass, by noticing that the command of the Great Teacher is: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." And that the invitation of the Gospel is: "Ho every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters; and he that hath no money, come ye, yea come, buy wine and milk WITHOUT MONEY AND WITHOUT PRICE."

What does the Apostle James say on this subject? "My brethren have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons. For if there come into your assembly a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in also a poor man in vile raiment; and ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and say unto him, Sit thou here in a good place; and say to the poor, stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool: are ye not then partial in yourselves, and are become judges of evil thoughts." (James II. 1—4.")—The Apostle, through the "dim vista" of succeeding ages, surely rested his prophetic vision on these degenerate days, and thus accurately describes one of the greatest evils of our times.—Could a picture be drawn closer to life—more exact in feature, striking in expression, and forcible in coloring? Rich men, men on whom the world has bestowed its honors, are anxiously desired, and sought after to join "the church," and are immediately installed in their different offices.—Who governs many churches and rules in their assemblies? Whose counsels are anxiously obeyed, and whose dictates are carried into execution? Men who wear "gold rings," and are "clad in gay clothing." Who occupy the uppermost seats in the sanctuary, but they who wear "goodly apparel?"

The whole camp is thrown into commotion when an individual high in rank, and wealth, and worldly honor is received into the church, when but little apparent interest is manifested at the accession of numerous individuals occupying the humbler walks of life. For my own part I rejoice in the conversion of any sinner; and I hold the soul of the meanest slave that lies "uncoffined and unshrouded by the wayside," as purchased by as great a price, and as sure of a mansion in the kingdom of glory, as the greatest monarch who ever ruled the destinies of millions of subjects. Do you advance influential motives as a ground of reasonable consideration? I offset it with the lamentable fact, that, generally speaking, when it comes to evangelical worth and religious integrity, individuals of what is termed influence, and wealth, and rank, weigh the least in spiritual graces and christian worth. And if they were formed into a separate and exclusive organization, it is greatly to be feared that they would pine away and die. The poor of the church are its very life in Christ Jesus.

Whoever gave a minister the right to toil and labor, "compassing sea and land," to induce a man of wealth to become a professing christian, merely from that consideration? And yet it is a matter of frequent occurrence. If a man, low in the estimation of the world, and sunk in the depths of sin, desires to become a member of some christian church, it is with evil surmisings and doubts, and a fear of contamination by some, that he is received. If a Manassah or a Magdalene were to solicit mercy at their hands, and knock tremblingly at their doors for admission, they would hesitatingly receive them, or probably turn them away with desolate hearts and ruined hopes.—The Saviour of mankind would eat with publicans and sinners, men that we have no authority to believe were earnestly engaged in search of religious truth; but now publicans and sinners, when deeply anxious to become acquainted with the way of salvation, receive either a formal welcome, or positive denial from those whose duty it is to stand with open arms to invite them to the paths of virtue and peace. The cold treatment of such characters, and the distrust with which they are received into the churches, is ruinous to many of their hopes, and blighting to their prospects. I will relate a circumstance in illustration. A. B. had been a very wild and wicked man, but became convicted, and experienced a change of heart. He had occupied a low situation in life, and was esteemed very poor. He joined the church, and during his probationary term, gave evidence of a reformed and changed life. He was received into the church with much evil prophecying; but passed his probationary term with christian integrity; yet instead of being acknowledged as a full member, he was, unlawfully, continued over another term. He heard the cause, doubted the sincerity of the church, and fell into his former course of life.

The poor of the world are the pillars of the church, which, if removed, would let the whole fabric fall into a mass of ruins.

I remain, Rev. sir, yours, &c., ANON.

TEMPERANCE.

Affecting Incident.

I recollect one member of Congress, who was always rallying me about our Congressional Temperance Society. "Briggs," he used to say, "I am going to 'jine' your temperance society, as soon as my demijohn is empty," but just before it became empty, he always filled it again. At one time, towards the close of the session, he said to me, "I am going to sign the pledge when I get home." "Well, you have said so a great many times." "But," he replied, "I am in earnest; my demijohn is nearly empty, and I am not going to fill it again." He spoke with such an air of seriousness as I had not before observed in him, and as impressed me; and I asked him what it meant—what had changed his feelings. "Why," said he, "I had a short time since a visit from my brother, who stated to me a fact that more deeply impressed and affected me than anything I recollect to have heard upon the subject in any temperance speech I ever heard or read:

"In my neighborhood is a gentleman of my acquaintance, well educated, who once had some property, but now reduced—poor! He has a beautiful and lovely wife, a lady of cultivation and refinement—and a most charming daughter.

"This gentleman had become decidedly intemperate in his habits, and had fully alarmed his friends in regard to him. At one time, when a number of his former associates were together, they counselled as to what could be done for him. Finally, one of them said to him, 'why don't you send your daughter away to a certain distinguished school?' which he named. 'O, I cannot,' said he, 'it is out of the question. I am not able to bear the expense. Poor girl! I wish I could.' 'Well,' said his friend, 'if you will sign the temperance pledge, I will be to all the expense of her attending school for one year.'—'What does this mean?' said he, 'do you think me in danger of becoming a drunkard?' 'No matter,' said his friend, 'about that now, but I will do as I said.' 'And I,' said another, 'will pay the rent of your farm a year, if you will sign the pledge.' 'Well, these offers are certainly liberal—but what do they mean? Do you think me in danger of becoming a drunkard? What can it mean? But, gentlemen, in view of your liberality, I will make an offer: I will sign if you will!' This was a proposition they had not considered, and were not very well prepared to meet; but for his sake they said we will, and did sign, and he with them.

"And now for the first time the truth poured into his mind, and he saw his condition, and he sat down bathed in tears.

"'Now,' said he, 'gentlemen, you must go and communicate these facts to my wife—poor woman, I know she will be glad to hear it, but I cannot tell her.'

"Two of them started for that purpose. The lady met them at the door, pale and trembling with emotion—'What,' she inquired, 'is the matter?—what has happened to my husband?'

"They bid her dismiss her fears, assuring her they had come to bring her tidings of her husband—but good tidings, such as she would be glad to hear.

"Your husband has signed the temperance pledge—yea, signed in good faith.' The joyous news nearly overcame her—she trembled with excitement—wept freely, and clasping her hands devotionally, she looked up to heaven, and thanked God for the happy change. 'Now,' said she, 'I have a husband, as he once was, in the days of our early love.'

"But this was not what moved me," said the gentleman. "There was in the same vicinity another gentleman—a generous, noble soul—married young—married well—into a charming family, and the flower of it. His wine-drinking habits had aroused the fears of his friends, and one day, when several of them were together, one said to another, 'let us sign the pledge.' 'I will if you will,' said one and another, till all had agreed to it, and the thing was done.

"This gentleman thought it rather small business, and felt a little sensitive about revealing to his wife what he had done. But on returning home, he said to her—'Mary, my dear, I have done what I fear will displease you.' 'Well, what is it?' 'Why, I have signed the temperance pledge.' 'Have you?' 'Yes, I have certainly.' Watching his manner as he replied, and reading it in sincerity, she entwined her arms around his neck, laid her head upon his bosom, and burst into tears. Her husband was affected deeply by this conduct of his wife, and said—'Mary, don't weep, I did not know it would afflict you so, or I would not have done it—I will go and take my name off immediately.' 'Take your name off!' said she; 'no, no!—let it be there. I shall now have no more solicitude in reference to your becoming a drunkard. I shall spend no more wakeful midnight hours. I shall no more steep my pillow in tears.'

"Now for the first time the truth shone upon his mind, and he folded to his bosom his young and beautiful wife, and wept with her. Now, I can't stand these facts, and I am going to sign the pledge."—Speech of Gov. Briggs, at Lowell, Massachusetts.

"Curse ye Meroz,"—Judges 5 ch., 23 verse.

By whose authority? The Angel of the Lord's.

What has Meroz done? Nothing.

Why then is Meroz to be cursed? Because they did nothing.

What ought Meroz to have done? Meroz should have come up to the help of the Lord.

Who stood opposed to the Lord? A wicked mighty man.

Could not the Lord do without Meroz? The Lord did without Meroz.

Then there was no loss sustained by the cowardice of Meroz?

None on the Lord's part; but Meroz lost its character, the esteem of good men, and the approbation of the Angel of the Lord.

Then it was the duty of Meroz to have come out for the Lord against the mighty? To be sure.

Then because they did not, are they to be cursed? Yes, and that bitterly too.

Is it right that a man should be cursed for doing nothing? It is so when something ought to be done by him, and he does it not.

Who says so? The Angel of Lord. "That servant who knew his Lord's will, and did it not, shall be beaten with many stripes." Luke, 12: 47.

Is the use of Tobacco Sinful.

Brother Bird—I regard the common use of tobacco in chewing, smoking, snuffing, &c., as a giant evil, nay, sin, that has been crippling the energies and paralising the efforts of the Zion of God for many years, and feel it my duty to contribute my mite towards the removing of this incubus from the vitals of the church. I feel encouraged when I reflect that there is a large portion of the servants of God, that it is only necessary to show them an error in order to induce them to abandon it—then let us investigate the subject—let us expose its evils—let us "keep it before the people," that the common use of tobacco is sinful. In order that the subject may be dealt with fairly, I propose the question to ministers of the gospel for discussion, in the following form, viz:

"Is the common use of tobacco, in chewing, smoking, snuffing and rubbing, sinful?

Now, Mr. Editor, I most heartily and cheerfully assume the affirmative of this question as true, and in attempting to prove my position I shall bring forward the three following arguments, and if any of my good brethren in the ministry, or out of it, can answer and refute them, I will as heartily and cheerfully acknowledge my error.

1st. It is injurious to man's physical health. 2d. It involves an unnecessary expense. 3d. These habits are filthy and disgusting.

1st. It injuries the human constitution, and consequently is sinful. The Almighty God created man and endowed him with all the faculties that he possesses, that they might be employed in his service, and he is only capable of fulfilling this grand design, when enjoying the highest degree of perfection, both physically and mentally, of which he is capable; and for him to neglect his health is to disqualify himself for doing the will of his Heavenly Father. And if it be sinful for him to disqualify himself negatively, that is to fail to attend to his health, it is a more palpable violation of moral obligation than for him to do so directly by inflicting wounds upon himself.

That the use of tobacco is injurious to health may be, at least partially sustained from the sensations produced on the system when it is brought in contact with the tongue—the bitter, acrid, pungent, nauseous taste goes to show that the particles of which it is composed have no affinity for the human system. It sickens the stomach and enervates the whole man more readily than almost any other plant in the entire vegetable kingdom. Another evidence of its poisonous nature, is the studious care of even the experienced practitioner to avoid swallowing any of its essence. When this drug is put into the mouth, nature, as if sensible of her danger, sends forth a flood of saliva to carry off the poison and thereby save herself from destruction. And this constant draught upon the salivary glands causes indigestion, and indigestion causes debility, headache, &c.

But an objector says, "I have used it for many years and it has never hurt me." Upon the same principle he may say that it does not injure him to cut and lacerate his body, for he has cut his flesh frequently and is now well. It did injure him at the time, but nature restored him. Tobacco injures every man that uses it as certainly as fire will burn him if he comes into contact with it, and the only reason the injury is not permanent, is because the God of nature cures up the wound he has inflicted.

Another says, "my tobacco injures no one but myself; therefore no one has a right to complain." Not quite so fast, brother, the Lord has an interest in you—your family and mankind in general have an interest in you, and by injuring yourself, you sin against God and man.

I know that the evils arising from the use of tobacco, are looked upon as a smaller matter—this, however, is a fearful mistake.—Many by using it, disqualify themselves for performing those physical labors that God designs them to perform, and to thwart the design of the Almighty, is no small matter surely. But, again, it disqualifies them for those mental efforts He designs them to make.—For instance, the minister of the gospel chews tobacco and is suffering from indigestion, a pain in the breast, or an affection of the liver, and general debility brought on by its use. The time arrives for him to preach,—the congregation assembles, but he is unable for the exercise of the pulpit and does not attempt it—the people are disappointed, the flock are not fed, and the lambs especially suffer, the mourner is not comforted and sinners are not warned. And tobacco has done all. Is this a small matter? But suppose he determines to try to preach—he goes into the pulpit with his pained and enervated system—complains of ill health, as an introduction to his discourse, and then toils through his time. His mind sympathising with his poisoned body, he enters not into the spirit of the gospel, and the result is, God's people go away unedified, and sinners unawakened—the effort is a failure, the Cause of Christ suffers, and souls are lost. This, perhaps, is the last sermon that some ever hear—they die unpardoned, and go down to hell, when if the minister's health had been good, his mind would have been vigorous and clear and he would have entered into his subject with zeal, and have preached effectually—sinners might have been saved that were lost. All this is very probable and no doubt has often happened. Then is it a small matter for a minister to chew tobacco? Ministers, destroy not souls, with your tobacco, for whom Christ died. It is a sin for any man to impair his active powers—the common use of tobacco impairs man's active powers, therefore it is a sin for any man to use tobacco. Although many have done well who use it, this does not prove they would not have done better if they had not used it.

You will hear from me at the earliest convenience on the two remaining arguments if you think this worthy of publication.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Waynesburgh, Green County, Pa.
May 10, 1847.

Br. Bassett: Through the medium of the Recorder I wish to say to Br. G. Brown and the friends of Zion a few things relative to Waynesburgh Circuit.

Since my last, we have held a few protracted meetings, all of which were more or less profitable unto the church.

First meeting was our 2d Quarterly meeting which was held at Rodgersville, this was a very interesting meeting—some five or six professed faith in Christ and obtained an evidence of sins forgiven, five joined. Second meeting was held in Waynesburg, continued ten days. This was a good meeting for this place, six experienced a change of heart, five joined church, found some that had been lost for years. Good Lord grant that they may stay found this time, and be found in heaven at last. Brs. R. T. Simonton and J. C. Hazlett came to our assistance, continued one week, laboring very zealously for the cause of their Master, and with much acceptibility. We feel much indebted to those brethren, they came to help us at a time when the roads were almost impassible; may the good Lord reward them—we cannot. The church in this place, I think is doing much better then they have been doing since my acquaintance with them; some ought to be doing better yet, or have no place in the church. We have a few faithful souls here, who say that they will never have their funeral preached until they go to the good world—these will compare with the members of any church. I hope we will get some more like them. They do not forget when preaching, class, and prayer meeting days come. I find it a difficult task to get along with a church when discipline has been unknown, and no church regulations for years, tis worse than going into the wilderness and clearing out the ground in the first place, much easier to get along where law is known from the beginning.

Third meeting was held at the Brick School House, here we had a glorious time—continued three days. Church much revived—one came on board the ship of ZION bound for sweet CANAAN. On Monday we had the best Love-feast that I have ever witnessed—continued four hours, had a delightful breeze from the spicy plains of GLORY. O, how pleasantly we sailed over life's rough sea; every sailor was at his post.

Br. Simpson is yet at his post, doing well, health much improved, pleasant colleague. For sometime I have been severely afflicted, scarcely able to attend my appointments, I took a fever in February which has left my lungs much affected, so much so, that the PLEURA appear to be inflamed, bleeding at the lungs at times. I am afraid that my itinerancy is near a close, it is a work in which my soul delights. I like to be among a hospitable and kind hearted people at all times, but more especially when afflicted and worn out.

Fifty one persons have been added to the M P. Church upon this circuit the present Conference year. This is more than could have been expected, considering the condition of the circuit; to God be all the glory, we are looking for better times than what we have enjoyed.

Yours, W. A. PORTER.

P. S. Our approaching annual conference will be well sustained in this place, members of all churches, and those who belong to no church are making large calculations on taking an active part, and are looking forward to the time with great interest.

The citizens of this place, all join in giving a pressing invitation to Brs. THOMAS H. STOCKTON, C. SPRINGER, A. H. BASSETT, and any others of our brethren from the surrounding districts who may make it convenient to attend, ample provision will be made for the members of conference, and all preachers and ministers from neighboring conferences. I make these remarks at this early period in order that the brethren may have all doubts removed (if there be any) in reference to the willingness and ability of the citizens of Waynesburgh to sustain the conference.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Mt. Vernon, O., May 12, 1847.

Bro. Bassett: After these business details, finding I have still a portion of my sheet unoccupied, I will spread over the remaining space a few items of intelligence respecting our religious movements on this Circuit.

Since my last communication, we have been favored with the official visit of Brother Clancy, who labored hard for two days at Ebenezar Meeting-house, Scheneck's Creek, preaching three times on the Sabbath-day. He is a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. His labors were highly appreciated, and have left impressions, which, we trust, will not soon fade away. My worthy fellow-laborer, Brother Catlin, and myself, continued on the meeting till the Thursday night following, when other appointments called us away. One united with us on this occasion.

On the following Saturday a protracted meeting was commenced at Hopewell, near Homer, by Brother Catlin, who, though feeble in health, and considerably worn down by incessant toils during the past inclement winter, is still forward to the work of the Lord. Brothers Inskep and Channel were efficient helpers on this occasion in the work of the Lord. I did not reach this meeting on account of other engagements, till the latter part of the following week, when on account of the busy season, and weariness of the flesh from loosing rest so many previous nights, the interest of the meeting had measurably abated; but as I learnt from Brother Catlin, the Lord was present with them in power on the Sabbath-day, bringing back wanderers to himself, and bringing down sinners to bow at his footstool.—Four souls professed to realize the blessed change from darkness to light,—from death to life; and four persons united with the society—On the Monday morning, at the Love feast, "the chiefest among ten thousand" was present with his believing children, and "his banner over them was love."—Pray for us, Brother, that the Lord may still continue "to send us prosperity," on Licking Circuit.

THOMAS POTTER, Su'p't.

Youngstown O., May 11, 1847.

Although in my charge, I have had much to discourage, yet I am thankful there is much to encourage me, the friends are very kind, our congregations are large and attentive, and although death has robbed us of several of our members, we still keep filling up the ranks, and are crying, O Lord revive thy work. Amen. S. GEE.

A mind without principles is like a ship without rudder or ballast, having nothing to steer its course, or keep it even.

A small neglect sometimes breeds a great mischief—for want of a nail the shoe is lost, for want of a shoe the horse is lost, for want of a horse the rider is lost.

SERMONS.—We direct attention to a prospectus in our advertising columns for publishing a new series of sermons, by Rev. Thomas Power, of the Muskingum Conference.

NEW MUSIC BOOK.—See prospectus for the Ohio Harmonist, in our advertising columns. One of the publishers who has called upon us, assures us that he has obtained about eleven hundred subscribers within a few weeks, in a tour through part of the State.

ANNUAL CONFERENCES.—From notices we publish this week, from the ministers stationed at Waynesburg, Pennsylvania, and Youngstown, O., it appears that the Pittsburgh and Muskingum Conferences, are likely to meet with a very clever reception at the places of their ensuing sessions. Gratifying.

THAT ADJUTANT GENERAL.—Gov. Bebb has appointed O. M. Mitchell, of Cincinnati, Adjutant General of Ohio Militia. We see that many newspapers announcing the appointment, give it to Professor Mitchell. Will our friend Curtiss, of the Cincinnati Commercial, please inform us if this new Adjutant General can be the Director of the Cincinnati Observatory, who is of the same name? We should think that gentleman would prefer to be amongst the stars without the stripes.

J. N. MAFFITT.—This celebrated preacher, it appears, has lately been deposed or unchurched by the decree of the functionaries of the M. E. Church in New York. It seems that some two years ago, charges or complaints were preferred against Mr. M. but his case was found difficult to be approached. At first he met a committee appointed to confer with him, consisting of Drs. Bangs and Peck, and Rev Mr. Martindale, and apologised for some alleged facts. But all endeavors to obtain a second meeting failed. All attemps subsequently to bring him regularly to trial under charges, also failed. He evaded the proceedings sometimes, and in other instances had from one to two lawyers employed to manage his cause. At length Bishop Hedding directed Mr. Martindale to go on with the trial, Mr. Maffitt did not attend in obedience to the citation, but a lawyer and clerk, and several of his friends appeared, and presented a written communication, forbidding all proceedings, on penalty of the law. Mr. Martindale then discharged the committee, stating that the Discipline makes no provision for the trial of a preacher in his absence. It was then announced that the case should come before the next Quarterly Conference, but Mr. Maffitt did not appear, and that body passed a resolution, disowning, or throwing him out of the connection. The result, as given in the Christian Advocate and Journal is that "according to the decision of Bishops Hedding and Janes, Mr. Maffitt is not a member of the Centenary M. E. Church; also that he is not a member of the Norfolk Street Church, and according to the Discipline, cannot be received as a preacher in other places, without such a certificate as he has not in his possession and which he cannot now obtain."

We have seen many newspaper denunciations of Mr. Maffitt, but are not prepared to join in them. We by no means rejoice in his fall: we regret most sincerely that so eloquent a preacher, calculated to effect so great an amount of good, should deservedly or undeservedly have his influence prostrated. We know not the nature of the charges against Mr. M. And we know not whether he is guilty or not. If he be guilty, those who condemn and denounce him, ought to be without sin, themselves.

Every one should know that great popularity is dangerous to any minister. And our most serious apprehension in reference to Mr. Maffitt, for years has been, that adulation had spoiled him. We have indeed witnessed, years ago, too plain indications of this, in the bearing of the gentleman. We see that he is holding forth at Pittsburgh and Allegheny, in sermons and lectures. The last announcement was for a public lecture in P. in behalf of Ireland.

THE DEBATE ON GAMBLING, between Messrs. Green and Freeman, was opened in Philadelphia last week. The Saturday Evening Post states that the audience generally were disappointed inasmuch as Mr. Freeman disclaimed intention to defend gambling, but only to show the folly and injustice of attempting to put it down, by making it punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary. Yet Mr. F. evidently attempted to defend gambling, not however as a thing good in itself, but as being no worse than many other practices which are tolerated by society. He related that when he was a young man, he had lost his all at the gaming table, and that from that blow, he had never recovered. It had broken his heart. That confession, we should reckon, will not go far in support of gaming. Yet he makes his living by it. The Post states that he is evidently a man of considerable information and talent. We join in the wish and prayer of the Post, that Mr. Green may succeed in convincing him, and persuading him to abandon a pursuit so dishonorable and so ruinous.

MISSIONARY FOR CHINA.—Rev. W. Simmons proposes in the Western Christian Advocate to be one of fifty to pay twenty dollars, for the support of a Methodist Missionary in China, to be sent from one of the Western Conferences of the M. E. Church.

DEATH OF ANOTHER PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER.—The Presbyterian of the West announces the death of Rev. James Robinson, of Union county, on the 23d ult. in the 78th year of his age. This venerable minister was abundant in labors, and he was successful in winning souls to Christ. He is said to have been esteemed by all who knew him. His end was peaceful.

SERIOUS LOSS.—LETTER FROM REV. JONATHAN FLOOD.—We gave a statement three weeks ago, of the afflicting disaster which recently happened to our old friend and brother, in the loss of his dwelling, and nearly all its contents by fire. Br. F. is well known as one of the pioneers of the M. P. Church, of the Ohio Conference, and for many years a sacrificing laborer in the itinerancy of said Conference. And he is still a firm adherent and friend of the Church, now that the infirmities of age are upon him. We know well the circumstances of Br. F. They are far from being affluent. Some two or three years since, he emigrated from Green county Ohio, to Randolph county, Indiana, and was enabled to purchase a lot of new land, and to erect for his family such buildings, we presume, as new settlers are wont to do. The recent destruction of his property, under the circumstances of his time of life, and recent emigration to a new part of the country, where it is likely but limited assistance can be furnished him, has been a severe blow. We are sure that the sympathies of those in Ohio who know Brother F. so well, will be excited, and we trust that such contributions will be made, as will essentially relieve our aged brother and his family in their distress. We publish his letter below, relating the particulars of the disaster. Those disposed to render aid, can address Brother F. by letter, or if they see proper to remit to us for him, it shall be cheerfully attended to. We trust that the preachers in the Ohio District, where Brother Flood is so well known, will receive, and send from those who sympathise, what they will freely give.

Randolph County, Ia., May 5, 1847.

BROTHER BASSETT:—Through the mercy of God myself and family yet live and are enjoying a moderate state of health, and are still striving to seek a better world. As it respects religion in this part there is but little a-doing among any of the denominations. We have a small class of eighteen or twenty members that meets at my house and we have some very comfortable meetings, though nothing like a revival. Our preachers are Bro. Outcalt, and Bro. William Williams, who continue to labor with usual zeal. I hope the Lord will bless their labors among us. I should like to have my post-office address changed from Fairview to Winchester, Randolph county, Ia. And now my Brother I would lay before you some things connected with our condition from a late occurrence, as it has been suggested to me by some of my friends here, though it is a matter of delicacy for me to touch in any way. I thought at last to lay it before you and request you to do in the case as your judgment might decide. (It was suggested to me if my old friends in Ohio knew my situation they would gladly afford me a little assistance.) I will give you the facts in the case: On last Monday night three weeks ago, we all went to bed as usual, myself however first. My wife and some of the children remained up in the kitchen until near ten o'clock, when they repaired to bed. After they were in bed some little time I got up and went out in the porch—all then was dark and still. I returned to bed and fell into a sound sleep. In a very short time my wife and myself were roused—she called to the children to rise or we should be burned up; the fire was then ascending from the kitchen, and the gable end of the big house was on fire. The first thought that struck my mind was to run to the kitchen to procure a bucket if possible, but it could not be come at, so I then ran as quick as I could back into the big house with the design of saving some papers that were in a drawer at the lower part of the book case; by the time I got there the fire was sweeping the walls of the clothing that hung around it, and the book case was on fire: however, I succeded in twisting it out of its place, and both it and myself fell on the floor. The books all fell out. I turned it back, throwing in what books I could, and dragged it to the porch where William met me and took it.—The children in the time had got out part of the bedding and left it in about two rods from the door, but so rapid was the fire in its progress, that what things they had got out before they could be removed from where they were first taken, some burnt entirely up, and almost every article that was saved was scorched or burnt more or less: fortunately the dresses that the women wore the day before, were taken out with what bedding was saved. William and myself had our drawers on, and he had one pair of pantaloons saved; but James and myself had none. All the household and kitchen furniture, our meat, and about three hundred weight of sugar, eight or ten gallons of molasses, with almost all my books, and our clothing; so that when day came it was one of the gloomiest mornings that I ever beheld. Not a hat or a bonnet, shoe or stocking left. By what means the fire took its start in the kitchen part, we can give no account as there was less fire on the hearth that night than usual, and my wife said she covered up the coals with ashes, and thought she had drowned out two small chunks that were in the hearth, but so it was, as to the manner is all conjecture. I think in one minute and a half from the time we left our beds the whole buildings were wrapt in flames. Had we remained asleep that length of time longer, not one of us could have made our escape. It would be in vain to attempt a description of my feelings at that time, when seeing the fruits of my labor for years consumed as it were in a moment. But in the midst of the scene of affliction, we as a family united in thanksgiving to God, for his general and special providence for our deliverance. The wind blew at that time from the North East, had it blown from the West the barn and corn cribs could not have escaped. I must say it to the praise of our neighbors, they went to work and put us up a cabin, so that the next Saturday night we lodged in it—they also furnished us with some meat, some bed clothing and some clothes to put on. I hope the Lord will reward them for their kindness.

I need not tell you that I am illy prepared to write, but as I am writing to one who will excuse my imperfection, I submit it the more cheerfully

I remain yours in esteem,

JONATHAN FLOOD.

DR. GEO. M'CLELLAN, one of the most distinguished physicians in Philadelphia, and perhaps the most distinguished surgeon in the country, died very suddenly on the 9th inst., in the 51st year of his age. So says the Saturday Evening Post.

NEW ORLEANS.—M. Y. Beach Esq. of the N. Y. Sun, now on a tour south, writes home from New Orleans, that that city is "vilely slandered, on the score of health and morals."

SANTA ANNA.—The National Era, with great propriety says, it is not generous to insult a fallen foe. It strikes us also that the newspaper press of this country is not acting a noble part, by taunting the unfortunate general, after his signal defeat, accusing him of cowardice, and upbraiding him with the loss of his dinner and his wooden leg. The Era asserts that Santa Anna did not fly till the battle was lost—that he stood as long as he could with any prudence. And neither bravery nor patriotism required him vainly to throw away his life. The Era repudiates as unfounded the charge of cowardice alleged against him, and thinks that those who raise the charge, know not the history of his valor and daring in 1823, in 1829, and in 1841. He wears a cork leg, because he lost his natural one in the defence of his country. Should we not honor the patriot and the brave, though an enemy?

LADIES' NATIONAL MAGAZINE.—We have received the June number, embellished with two fine engravings. An elegant mezzotint is promised for the July number. C. J. Peterson, publisher, Philadelphia.

REV. ORANGE SCOTT.—We regret to learn by the Boston Olive Branch that this gentleman is in an advanced stage of consumption, and it is thought cannot long survive. Mr. S. is principal founder of the seceding branch called the Wesleyan Methodist Connection in this country. The Olive Branch states that his private means suffered altogether in the financial difficulty of getting up a new Book Concern, and having to trust too many irresponsible persons, which with his labors as a minister & writer, it is thought have overtasked his constitution, and he will "in all human probability fall a martyr to his zeal and sacrifices in the cause."

WEEKLY CHRISTIAN WORLD,—Long looked for, come at last. We have just received the first number of the above named work, a handsome sheet, well filled, printed, of course, in neat style, as it hails from the city of Brotherly Love. Editors, T. H. Stockton, J. G. Wilson, W. S. Stockton, T. Stork. It is a specimen number sent out to the subscribers, and to the subscribers of the former work who have paid for the fifth volume. If sufficient patronage is received, the regular weekly publication is to be commenced in July.

Life and Scenery in Texas.

Letter of Bishop Paine.

In a late number of the Nashville Christian Advocate, we find an interesting letter from Bp. Paine, of the M. E. Church, South, detailing incidents of a recent tour in attending the session of the Texas Conference. We transfer to our columns the following extracts.

Leaving Galveston we sailed north-west up the bay, which is several miles wide and exceedingly beautiful. The night was very dark; heavy clouds hung over the sky, and we were threatened with a norther. Our frail old boat kept on her way slowly enough, encumbered with a huge wood-boat, until we reached the mouth of the Trinity river—thence, having left our encumbrance, we tacked back and ran up San Jacinto, passing the battle ground, and afterwards up Buffalo Bayou to Houston.

The land, on the banks of these Bayous, is covered with evergreens—live oak, wild peach, laurel, and an abundance of pine, at a little distance from the stream. The long moss, indicative of a hot and humid atmosphere, hangs in graceful and sombre festoons upon every tree and shrub and at certain seasons alligators literally swarm in these sluggish and feculent Bayous.

We found Houston, at the head of Buffalo Bayou, to be a thriving town, with, a population of about three thousand—rents high—streets muddy—distance from Galveston about seventy miles. During the past season this has been the depot of all the produce raised between here and the Brazos river; and as the amount by each producer has been too small to justify his shipping it to a distant port, the most of it has been sold here. Hence its trade has been quite brisk, and will, doubtless, greatly increase, even if the canal, now being cut to connect the Brazos with Galveston Bay, should be completed, and divert the produce of that region to the Island—the Texan Tyre.

I deeply regretted the necessity of leaving immediately for the seat of the Texas Conference, lest by remaining until after Sabbath I should fail to arrive in time to open the session. The brethren in Houston were evidently hurt at my abrupt departure, but the result proved the propriety of the step—for owing to the excessively bad weather, which set in on Monday, and continued through the week, those brethren who remained and spent Sabbath in Houston did not arrive at Conference until a day or two after it began. So on Friday morning, bidding adieu to my travelling companions—Kilbreth, Ferguson and Fisher—I mounted a horse and, in company with bro. R. Alexander, put out for Washington county. Our general direction was north-west.—For about seven miles we travelled through a pine and post oak forest, on a horribly muddy road, and then launched out into the wide and picturesque prairie region. These prairies, bordering on the Gulf, are very level and poor, and in winter or spring are boggy. We found it so to-day, and after toiling hard and wading through miles of water reached, about sunset, our stand, only 22 miles distant from Houston. On this entire route there were but few houses, but herds of cattle and deer frequently appeared dotting the ever green surface of the beautiful scenery. O. our quarters, for the night, I shall say but little. Our hostess was an aged widow and she lived in Texas. Still I did not relish the squeaking and grunting of about 40 full grown hogs and as many pigs, which seemed to have found uncomfortable quarters under our house—if we may judge of their feelings by their complaints and wailings. Long after sunrise, next morning, I could see some of them through the chinks of our floor stretched out in profound repose, without the fear of bears, wolves or panthers before their eyes. Well, although their comfort and safety may have wrought a slight discomfort to us travelling bipeds, yet surely we should and do rejoice at their security and their owner's good fortune. I have, however, known some families where such an occurrence would raise the question as to the propriety of having a separate lodging place for their honors, but no such monopolizing and aristocratic notions seemed to exist in this happy republican family, and consequently the question is not mooted here.

We started again on Saturday morning, with an additional companion in travel, an elderly widow, an acquaintance of Bro. A.; for who in Texas does not know him? She had been a pioneer settler in these regions—about 70 years of age—she rode a fine mettlesome steed with perfect ease and grace, sitting as erect as a dragoon on parade, and was generally in advance of the company. She was a fine specimen of a pioneer lady—her early advantages had, of course, been inconsiderable, and of books and science in general she was perhaps profoundly ignorant. But there was a shrewdness and a fund of strong common sense in her conversation which greatly interested me. She had been a close observer of nature, and of human nature especially, for many years. Had been accustomed to the hardships and dangers of the frontiers until she had acquired a degree of self-reliance and firmness never met with among her sex in other circumstances. Withal she was a deeply pious member of our Church, and her house had long been the resting place of the weary itinerant of the wilderness. A ride of 14 miles through the prairie brought us to her house, occupying an eminence which commands one of the richest landscapes in Texas, and we saw her cattle and hogs grazing in the distance, but although invited to tarry all day, or at least for dinner, we declined the invitation, and pushed on in order to find a neighborhood where a congregation could be collected on the next day for preaching. Late in the afternoon we reached Bro. Graves'—lately from Jacksonville, Illinois, and found a hearty welcome and pious family. We were now about fifty miles from Houston, and near the Brazos, i. e., within four or five miles. The land, for the first thirty miles, had been a flat and poor prairie—the balance, up to this neighborhood, has been rolling, sandy and very poor. Here begins the indications of good land.

On the next day, which was Sabbath, I preached to a small audience in a school house, not fit for either of the purposes to which it is applied. It was a solemn and impressive time, and I could but hope that some permanent impressions were made. We dined with Mr. P———, a friendly and gentlemanly Georgian, and after dinner rode across the Brazos to Rev. L. D. Bragg's, where I was to lodge during the session of the Texas conference. Yours truly, R. PAINE.

Launch of a Steamboat. The Right Way.

Bro. Bassett: I hasten to acquaint you of our doings here, as (I believe) we are directed by the spirit of the Great Head of the Church. On this day, by the request of Captain Atkinson, (Master, and part owner of a splendid new Steamboat now on the stocks, and to be launched day after to-morrow.) Our estimable Brother George B. McElroy, preached an evangelical sermon on her deck, to a very respectable audience of our citizens, from Acts 13, 41: "Behold, ye dispisers, and wonder, and perish; for I work a work in your days, a work in which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you."—Now, I do not design to communicate to you the magnificent frame-work, nor rich clothing, with which he delivered the discourse to his anxious congregation who seemed buried in deep interest while he poured upon their ears the soul-animating strains of the Gospel of reconciliation. But, I am exceedingly anxious to publish to the world, the blessed renovation in the character, and conduct of our boatmen, and boat-builders within a few years: for which I, as one, feel to give glory to God. I have been engaged in boat-building for a number of years, and in different places on our river, and have been acquainted with a number of boat owners and Captains,—and must say: I never saw things on this wise before. For at many launchings, bachanalian songs, and revoltingly wicked carousals characterized the scene, while the Master of the boat almost invariably led the van, and when the boat or vessel struck the water, a jug of whiskey or other spirits was broken on her head. This was called the boat's christening. But blessed be God, Captain Atkinson through the benign influence of the wonderous work accomplished in our days, by the preaching of the Gospel, has learned a better mode of christening his boat. Viz: by the solemn worship of his and the Christian's God upon her, and thus to characterize her, as one of our Sabbath keeping agents of inland commerce and transportation. Oh, that the travelling, and business public of our Union may soon be blessed with all God fearing, God loving, God honoring and Sabbath keeping boatmen, with whom or to whose care they can with confidence consign themselves or property to the different ports or places of destination, and thus enjoy the assurance in their own souls of Divine protection and heaven's richest blessing. I will here state that the Captain is a member of the Presbyterian Church, I hope the church of his choice and all other christians may extend to him their patronage and prayers.

Muskingum Conference—Next Session.

Br. Bassett, Brother Clancy having written to me to ascertain whether the Annual Conference can be sustained in Youngstown or not, in answer to his, I beg leave to say, that I have taken the steps recommended by him and find that provision can be made for more men and horses than are likely to be at the Conference. The citizens of this place would not be disgraced by letting the Conference be taken away from them, so our worthy President may tell those brethren who were doubting; to throw their fears to the winds and take "no thought for the morrow," in reference to this subject. God and the good people of Youngstown will amply provide for them—we have an "Evangelical Alliance" in this town and prove that "unity is strength."

Yours in Christ Jesus, SAMUEL GEE.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

IMPORTANT DECISION.—Slaveholding law do not hesitate to exact justice from the rum-selle One of these licensed murderers, in South Carolina, sold Bob a gallon and a quart of whiskey.—The negro got drunk, lay out all night in consequence, and died before morning from exposu to the cold. His owner brought a suit again the rum-seller for the loss of his slave and reco ed $600. The same principle of justice wou award heavy damages to the suffering family the drunkard, whom the liquor dealers rob a afflicts. We wish that suits of the kind were stituted among us; it would be one of the mo effective movements against the coffee-house sy tem that could be made.—Cincinnati Protestant.

ROBBERY AND ATTEMPTED MURDER.—On Fr day night last, the crew of a flat boat, from Port mouth, lying near the Water works, consisti of five men, were attacked while asleep, wi clubs and knives, by a band of depredators, wh had already rifled the boat of $70. Their cri brought the neighbors to their rescue, when th robbers fled, dropping in their flight a number pieces of dry goods and other stolen articles.—Cin. Protestant.

We have cautioned the public repeatedly against rushing on board the Ferry boats, thereb endangering limbs and lives, but caution does n good. Accidents are constantly occurring. Yesterday, Thomas Coffin, a gentleman residing i Maiden Lane, fell between the Fulton ferry-boa and dock, dislocating his arm at the shoulder. is downright carelessness and nothing else, thi produces these casualties.

DEAD NEWSPAPERS.—Some postmasters nee to be informed that they are responsible for new papers not taken out of their office, unless they giv the publisher seasonable notice of the fact. W were, some time since, informed that numbers o the Watchman had been accumulating in a cer tain post-office, a year or more. We according forwarded our bill to the postmaster himself, wh we hope, will duly honor it—Watchman of th Valley.

COMMERCE OF BALTIMORE.—Twenty-four ves sels cleared from Baltimore during the mont of April, with bread stuffs, for various ports i Europe, their cargoes in the aggregate amounte to 78,310 bbls. flour; 12,995 bbls. corn mea 15,928 bushels of wheat, and 349,335 bushels o corn. The total value of domestic produce ex ported during the month, was one million, on hundred and ten thousand dollars.—New Yor Sun.

PATENT OFFICE.—This valuable bureau is ev ery day increasing in importance, and may b considered one of the most useful institutions the country. During the past year there wer 1273 applications for patents for new invention The number issued was 619, including 13 re-is sues, 5 additional improvements and 50 design the number of patents expired was 473. Th Commissioner has received $50,264 16, whic after paying all the expenses of the Bureau left balance of $4.195 45 in the Treasury. The re port itself is full of valuable and interesting de tails.—N. Y. Sun.

From the Cincinnati Gazette, of May 15.

DISASTROUS FIRE.—About 4 o'clock this morn ing, a fire broke out in the foundry of D. A. Pow ell, Esq., on Butler street, and extending round t Front street, consumed a large amount of proper ty before the firemen, who were early on th ground and worked with their accustomed ener gy, arrested its progress. The books and paper of Mr. Powell were saved with difficulty; th brother of Mr. P. being slightly burned on th back of his neck when making his escape fro the building with them. It is supposed the fir originated from the soot in the flue of the coo oven igniting and the cinders drawn up the flu fell upon the roof and set it on fire.

RATHER STRANGE.—At the recent fire in Day ton, there were some three thousand bushels o flaxseed in one of the consumed houses, of whic not more than two hundred bushels were destroy ed, though exposed of course to great heat. Th outer surface was baked into a hard coat, whil all within this covering was saved. This sam flaxseed was in the cellar at the time of the gre flood in Dayton a few months since, and after th subsiding of the water was found uninjured, slimy coat having formed over it, effectually pre venting the entrance of water. Thus it seem flaxseed is fire proof and water proof. The es timated loss by the above mentioned fire is se down at about $15,000.—Cin. Com.

CHEAP POSTAGE.—It will be gratifying to th public, generally to learn that the revenue is annu ally increasing, exhibiting the same improve ment that marked the progress of the same re form in England. The Union publishes the in crease for the last quarter at each of the followin cities, with thirty or forty others whose names ar not given, which, compared with the same quar ter last year, indicates an increase of over 17 pe cent.

TO RAISE GOOD RADISHES.—Take pure sand some depth from the surface; or pure earth, belo where it has been tilled or ploughed; make a be in the garden, six or eight inches deep, and as bi as you please; in this throw your radish seed and they will grow well without manure, and b free from worms; we have tried it frequently, an never failed.

Radishes that are grown very early in the sea son are of slow growth, and inferior to thos grown after the weather is warm enough to haste them, as the faster they grow, the more tende and finer the flavor.

PITTSBURGH, FRIDAY, May 14, 1847.

ATROCIOUS MURDER.—Information was left n the Mayor's office yesterday morning by a ca- l boat Captain, of circumstances that warrant- d the suspicion that a murder had been commit- ed. About three miles above Allegheny city, the aptain found a pocket book containing a number f papers smeared with blood, a hat and a cane— he hat dinged as if by a blow. The name in he pocket book is "Frederick Bollmeyer, New isbon Ohio;" the hat has the makers' names, McClory & Bollmeyer, Warren Ohio."

From the papers found in the pocket book it ppears that he had on his person when he left ome $228 75, of which amount $200 was in- ended for the Messrs. McCutcheon of this city.— Bollmeyer arrived in town on Sunday, and ad- ressed a note to the McCutcheon's, stating that e was about visiting Tarentum, but would be ack in a few days, and would pay them the mon- y.

The memoranda of his expenses found on a iece of paper, the back of which was covered ith blood, enabled the officers to trace his pro- ress up to his leaving Tarentum for Pittsburgh.

Another memorandum stated the places at hich he was to call in Pittsburgh.

From other papers it appeared that his money onsisted of $100 in Eastern par funds, and a ke amount in Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky mon- y.

The Mayor's officers went over yesterday orning and found a pool of blood on the first ridge above the Acquaduct—about two miles elow where the pocket-book was picket up.

At ten o'clock the body was found, and the oroner held an inquest over it. The body of ollmeyer when found had a bruise over the root f the nose, probably inflicted with "a colt." A ope was around his neck, and another bound his et. This has been a most horrible affair, and we ope may be sifted to the bottom, and the perpe- ators brought to punishment.

Bollmeyer was a man about 45 years of age, hd had a wife and a large family. He was much spected.

Ballmeyer was traced by later enquiries to a vern in the Fifth Ward, which he left about alf-past nine unaccompanied, night before last.— itts. Com. Journal.

CARPENTER KILLED.—Tobias Barben, a car- nter of the Northern Liberties, while at work on a house at Cooper's Point, N. J., on Satur- y afternoon, lost his life by the falling of a rder. He leaves a wife and children.—N. Y. un.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.—The grand Jury of Ontario unty met and adjourned, there not being a sin- e case of crime for indictment.

RELIEF ITEMS.—Five hundred dollars has been nt from the army under Gen. Taylor, to the elief fund in New Orleans.

Those Savages, the Choctaw Indians have ntributed $170 to the relief fund.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—While a ceremony of bap- n was taking place in the Mohawk at Utica, t Sunday, a portion of the foot path of the dge, at the foot of Genesee street, gave way, cipating some 30 or 40 persons on the stone utment of the bridge and into the river, some or 20 feet below. Mr. W. O. Smith, druggist, d proprietor of the City Garden, was so crush- and wounded that he died in the course of the ernoon. A Miss Palmer and Miss Sheldon, d each a leg broken; Mrs. M. M. Jones was verely injured in the shoulder, and Miss Taylor s considerably injured. Ira Chase, Esq., was o much injured, but not dangerously.—N. Y. n.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRES AMONG THE JERSEY PINES. The long drought which the rain of Sunday t put an end to, contributed to the spread of e among the pines in Jersey. GOLD FROM EUROPE.—The steamship Caledo- , arrived last week at Boston, had on board 91,500, or nearly two and half millions of dol- s in gold.

HORRIBLE.—A young man named Charles H. Smith, aged only 23 years, was hung, or rather butchered, tortured, slowly smothered and worried to death, at Hickman, Ky., on the 20th inst., for the murder of Abraham O. Tyler. He was led from the jail in the afternoon to the place of execution, where a large crowd were of course in attendance. He addressed the crowd, declaring that he killed Tyler in self defence, but expressing the belief that the termination of his own sufferings had now arrived. Poor fellow, he was sadly mistaken, for however innocent of murder himself, he was to be murdered most inhumanly, not by law, for that simply commanded his execution, but by the law's ignorant administrators. A small cotton rope was placed around his neck, which of course broke when the drop fell. The victim lay stretched on his back for some minutes upon the ground in great agony and apparently dying. But he recovered sufficiently to again ascend the platform.—This time the Sheriff went to the other extreme, using a rope or cable so large and rough that the noose would not tighten! In ten minutes after he was swung off, the tortured man was still kicking, apparently in great agony. Horrible! This in a civilized community and in this age! The Sheriff, we understand, was not censured by the majority in attendance. Of course not.—Cincinnati Commercial.

KNOWS BEANS.—Elishu Barrin says "American Beans are becoming a standing dish in England"—very like they will run alone pretty soon.

THE OUTBREAK IN ACCOMAC.—We learn from a good source that Accomac Court House was, on the election day, the scene of a great and singular excitement. It seems that the Methodist denomination in that county are divided as to a choice between attaching themselves to the Northern and Southern division of that Church, and that this question became an issue in the canvass.

Our informant says that about 3 o'clock on the day of election, when Gen. Bayly was running far ahead of his competitor, Mr. Jones, and had received the votes of most of those who preferred the Southern Conference, the advocates of the Northern division of the church made their appearance at the polls, and began to cast their votes rapidly for Gen. B. The friends of the Southern Conference, on seeing this, charged Gen. Bayly or his friends with betraying the South by courting both parties, and immediately several blows were aimed at Gen. B., which, fortunately, by the interposition of friends, were warded off. The excitement during the remainder of the day and night was very great, and at the close of the polls Gen. Bayly left the Court House, guarded by his friends.—Petersburg Va. Intel.

DROWNED.—A boy, by the name of Wilson, was drowned just above Wellsville, last Tuesday night.

FIVE CONSCIENCES.—First, he says, "there is an ignorant conscience, which neither sees nor saith any thing, neither beholds the sins in a soul, nor reproves them. Secondly, the flattering conscience, whose speech is worse than silence itself, which, though seeing sin, soothes men in the committing thereof. Thirdly, the secret conscience, which hath neither sight, speech, nor sense in men that are past feeling. Fourthly, a wounded conscience, frightened with sin. The last and best, is a quiet and clear, conscience.—Of these, the fourth is incomparably better than the three former; so that a wise man would not take a world to change with them. Yea, a wounded conscience is rather painful than sinful, and affliction no offence, and is the ready way at the next removal to be turned into a quiet conscience.' —Rev. T. Fuller.

APPLES FOR ENGLAND.—Elihu Burritt, who is now in England, and whose disinterested philanthropy is so widely known, is making the most diligent use of his observations in that country, and offering hints to his countrymen at home that may be of the greatest utility to them. He urges the people of Maine, an apple growing state, to turn their attention to the shipment of apples to Great Britain. Apples which in Maine are permitted to rot upon the ground, made into cider or fed to hogs, are worth $1 per bushel in many of the British seaports. He estimates the cost of sending them to England at 20 cents per bushel.

THE LAST FIVE DOLLARS.—A five dollar note was recently shown us, with the following sentences written on the back of it:

'This is the last of three thousand and seventy-five dollars, left to me by my mother at her death, on the 27th day of August, 1840.

'Would to God she had never left it to me, but that I had been taught to work to earn my living! I would not have been what I now am in degradation.

'New York, July 1, 1846.

SPANISH COIN.—All the battered and defaced Spanish coins received at the Post offices are now sent to the mint to be re-coined. This measure will soon drive them out of circulation, 'a consummation devoutly to be wished for.'

LAKE CHAMPLAIN.—The Steamboats are running between Whitehall and Plattsburg; beyond that point the ice is strong enough to bear loaded teams.

FIRE.—The Cincinnati Steam Saw Mill and Planing Mill, which, with the lumber yard attached, occupied nearly the whole square encompassed by Ludlow, Congress, Lawrence and Symmes streets was last night totally destroyed by fire.

The origin of the fire is unknown, but supposed to be the work of some miscreant incendiary.—The proprietor, Mr. John H. Stolley, informs us that he was on and inspected the premises at half past eleven, and at twelve the fire broke out. It commenced in the front of the saw mill and apparently under that part where the logs are drawn up. The fire company, Independent No. 2, were promptly on the ground, followed soon after by four or five others, but in the combustible materials the fire spread so rapidly that their best efforts were vain.

There was no insurance, and the loss, we are sorry to learn from Mr. S., will exceed $10,000. But the most melancholy part of the occurrence is yet to be told. After the saw mill was reduced to a smoking ruin, the remains of a man were found lying under it upon the ground near or at the very place where the fire originated. No clue could be found to his identity; and so mutilated were the remains—every part indeed but the trunk and a part of the head being gone—that nothing could be learned or inferred from them.—*Cin. Encouraging for Ireland.

The Pittsburgh Gazette of last week, thus speaks of matters pertaining to Ireland:

The worst of this calamity, thank God, is over. The Irish landlords and Irish peasants have shaken hands, and are aiding one another to redeem the land of their common ancestry from the misery which has so long enshrouded it. Hearts have been melted that seemed not long ago as hard as stone, and sympathies have been aroused that should never die. Even the terrible evil of famine has not been without its good upon the hearts of mankind. We read that the Grand Sultan of the Turks gave his five thousand dollars for the relief of Ireland, and Turk and Christian, Jew and Gentile, Free and Bond,—yes, the very slaves from American plantations,—have taken delight in contributions for the relief of Ireland. Nor is this all. By common consent, and unsolicited, the charities of the United States have been sent to the Society of Friends in Ireland, for common distribution. The honor of a good christian name has been a passport to the charities of Mankind, and the Quakers of Ireland,—for Catholics and Protestants alike,—have become the almoners of the princely benevolence of the world.

KILLED ON THE HARLEM RAILROAD.—The Coroner held an inquest on the body of an unknown man found lying dead Tuesday morning in the tunnel of Harlem Rail Road. From the position of the body and the injuries upon it, it was evident that he had been run over by the train which passed through the tunnel before day light on Monday morning, and as it appeared unperceived by any person on the cars.

MUNIFICENCE.—A poor Irishman at New York picked up $1,000 in bank bills in Wall street, on Thursday, and delivered the money to a broker, who had lost it. In the fulness of his generosity, the broker gave the finder a York shilling for his pains and honesty. The latter, however, threw back the gift—the commission was too small for the extent of the operation—and left the broker utterly astonished at the refusal of his benefaction.

IMPORTANT DECISION.—Judge Wilde, at the Springfield session of the Supreme Court, instructed the jury in a libel case, that if the publisher of a paper admitted an article which he did not know contained libellous matter, or was not aimed at a particular individual, he was not liable; but that the responsibility fell upon the writer, and that it would tend to abridge the liberty of the press were it otherwise.—Post.

STEAMBOAT BURNT.—The Steamboat Ambassador was destroyed by fire on Monday, about twelve miles below Pitsburgh. Loss, $20,000.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—On the night of the 22d ult., a man by the name of Reinhart, was instantly killed on the Railroad at Schuylkill, Haven, N. York.

ACCIDENT TO A RELIEF SHIP.—The British barque Gratitude, which left Alexandria on Saturday for Cork, Ireland, took fire in her rigging, when her mizzen mast had to be cut away to save her. She will be brought back to Alexandria for repairs.

FOUR PERSONS DROWNED.—On last Friday six men were engaged in fishing with a seine, about three quarters of a mile below Knight's dam near Port Washington. While approaching the shore in water about waist deep, two sons of Daniel Barr, aged about 18 and 20; a man named Thomas Griffith, and a son of Jacob Miller, either got the cramp or became entangled in the seine, and were drowned before assistance could be obtained. The other two reached the shore with great difficulty. The bodies have all been found.—Tuscarawas Advocate.

EDUCATION AMONG THE CHEROKEES—The sites for the two institutions provided for by the Council, during its last session, have ultimately been chosen. The one in the vicinity of this place, the other at Park Hill. They are to be eighty feet square, constructed of brick, with a foundation of stone. School, dining, and sleeping apartments, &c., all to be in the one building. One hundred pupils each it is intended that they should accommodate.

MR. BANCROFT IN ENGLAND.—Mr. Bancroft, our Minister in England, has recently been elected a member of the London Society of Antiquarians, on motion of Lord Morpeth. Mr. Bancroft is believed to be the first American on whom this honor has been conferred.

On Friday last, a fatal accident occurred in Cool spring township, Mercer county. We learn from the Luminary that a number of the citizens had collected at Mr. John Vernon's for the purpose of rolling logs, and when they had got through working, it was proposed to engage in a sham fight; and for this purpose, they pared off, some on horseback and others on foot, one party representing the Americans, the other the Mexicans. The war continued for some time, when Mr. K. B. Turner undertook to unhorse one of the opposing party, and getting in too close quarters, the horse kicked him in the breast, injuring him so much as to cause his death on the following evening. He was about 42 years of age, and has left a wife and seven children to lament his untimely end.—Pitts. Com. Jour.

CAUTION TO SODA DRINKERS.—A young man in Lousville was killed by drinking soda water from an unwashed fountain which, lying by since last season, had accumulated verdigris.

ALARMING OUTRAGE.—Mr. J. R. Gitchell, of the firm of Collins and Gitchell, Cincinnati, was robbed, last week, of $450 and his watch, on Sixth street, near Plum, as he was returning from his business to his home, at half past ten in the evening.—The villain knocked him senseless with a bludgeon, where he lay waltering in his blood, till he was discovered the next morning, and taken to a house. He was not dangerously wounded, though dreadfully bruised.

THIRD PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.—The newly erected edifice of this church, on the corner of Fourth and John streets, Cincinnati, is to be dedicated next Sabbath, by the Pastor, Rev. T. A. Mills; services to commence at 3 o'clock, P. M. The other churches of this city, in the same connexion, with their pastors, have been invited to unite with this church on the interesting occasion, and to participate, also, with them at the communion table, in commemorating the Lord's death, which is to take place in the evening.

The house is a very neat edifice, 56 feet by 74, erected at an expense of about $11,000. Its internal construction is a happy model of church architecture, combining taste, economy and convenience. We are particularly pleased with the position of the orchestra. Instead of posting the choir aloft in the gallery, as is commonly done, cut off from all communication and sympathy with the congregation, it places them on a moderate elevation in the front part of the house, where the congregation can conveniently join with them in their sacred services. The workmanship of the house appears to be very neatly and faithfully executed.—Watchman of the Valley.

A fire in Nashville on the 5th ult., destroyed about eighteen houses.

ARREST FOR BRINGING CRIMINALS TO THE U. S.—Captain Yeogle, of the British brig Thetis, has been arrested at New York, and held to bail in $2,000, for bringing nine pardoned convicts from England to the United States. One of the gentlemen robbed a person at a hotel, and being arrested, a pardon from the Queen of England was found in his pocket. This put the city police upon the alert, and it turned out that eight others had been brought over in the same vessel.—N. Y. Courier.

The Emperor of China is the oldest monarch in the world; Mehemet Ali, King of Egypt, is next to him; Ernest Augustus King of Hanover, born June 6, 1761, is the third in age; and Louis Phillippe, born October 5, 1762, the fourth.

The Philadelphia American of the 28th ultimo says:—"The Magnetic Telegraph is rapidly extending itself southward and westward. It will be completed to Fayetteville, North Carolina, in three months, and to New Orleans in six.

Miscellaneous.

Thoughts on a Passage of Scripture.

For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. COR. xv. 22.

In offering a few thoughts in our last number on another part of this chapter, we took occasion to say that the main design of the Apostle is to prove the doctrine of the resurrection, and thereby to remove an error upon this subject which had crept into the church at Corinth. This explains the passage now before us,—'For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.' As all die a temporal death through Adam's transgression, so in Christ shall all be resurrected from the dead. The resurrection of the race of Adam by the power of Christ, is the doctrine taught in the passage. It has no reference whatever either to the happiness or misery of the dead, after they shall be resurrected. Other passages are sufficiently explicit upon the subject of future rewards and punishments. This teaches the melancholy truth that all die in Adam, and the great doctrine of the resurrection of all, as any unbiased mind will readily see by examining the whole chapter, and keeping in mind its principal object. It is a portion of the Scriptures which has been much abused by errorists, and misapplied in some cases by the orthodox.—Christian Patriot.

From the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

Long Sermons.

Mr. Editor—There are a number of reasons why ministers should not preach long sermons, and if you will give me a hearing, Sir, I will point some of those reasons out, that our sober-thinking divines may improve in this respect.

And the first reason I shall offer is, that very many of their hearers are afflicted with such treacherous memories that but a small portion of their sermons can be recollected, and consequently not practised.

A second reason is, that all the improvements of the present age tend to lessen the time of performing labor, and it is a sin for any man to do more work on the Sabbath than is absolutely necessary.

A third reason is, that this is an age of hurry and business, and the people are so much engaged during the week that the mind has become habituated to dwell but a very short time on any one subject, and therefore cannot listen with interest to a long sermon.

A fourth reason is, that the subject matter of the gospel is so well understood that a mere allusion to any subject is sufficient to satisfy the people of the present age; hence a sermon of a few allusions would abundantly satisfy the people, and the ministry would secure to themselves the honor of possessing the only real virtue that is commonly attached to preaching now-a-days, viz:—brevity.

Another reason is, that there are so many other duties of such paramount importance, that to preach a long sermon would almost be sacrilege.

The last reason I shall offer at present is, that but very few are interested in any part of the sermon but the Amen, and the sooner they hear it the better they like it, and those are considered the best preachers that can put their text and their Amen closest together.

Yours, as ever, D.

The Iron Horse.

And the Iron Horse—a word for him, of Saxon stock; for it matters not where he is stabled or harnessed for his mission—whether to thunder through Siberian wastes with Nicholas's ukase; or from Cairo to Timbuctoo, with a message from Ibrahim Pacha; or from Thibet to Calcutta, on a commercial errand—he will show his Saxon pedigree, and his Saxon groom and rider. Where he goes, there will go the English language, and the genius of the English race. From the far, still depths of Central Asia, he will bring Londonward letters to English churches, and then to English manufacturers and bankers; and then new furnaces and forges will illuminate the hills and clouds of Wales with their midnight glow; and the tall factory chimnies of Lancashire and Yorkshire will thicken to a forest, and labyrinths of busy, bee-winged machinery, will be added to the looms and spindles plying now. And the Iron Horse will shake the sombre solitudes of barbarism with the giant tread, and run to and fro, and whistle tribes of men to come out of their dens and caves and forest lairs into the sunlight and sympathy of civilization, and to change their beast and bird-skin garments for those of fine-spun wool and cotton. And at every place where he stops for fuel-food, he will drop a Christian missionary, and teachers of the English tongue.; and, returning, will bring in his saddle-bags more letters for Bibles, and for bales of cloth and clothing.—Burritt.

SPIRITUAL SORROW.—The tear drop of spiritual sorrow is more brilliant than the glittering diamond sparkling in the sun-beam; but it shall be exhaled by the light of the Lord and exchanged for a gem of pardon.

When you find sorrow a sleep do not disturb it.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

OHIO HARMONIST.

The HARMONIST will contain a choice selection of about 150 pages of Psalm and Hymn tunes, compiled with much care from the best authors in the United States, to which is added a supplement of Temperance songs, designed for the use of congregations, singing schools, temperance meetings, and musical associations.

It will be arranged in three parts,—parts first and third contain the seven syllables in the patent notes; the seven sounds being represented by SEVEN DIFFERENT CHARACTERS, to wit:—do, ra, mi, fa, sol, la. si.

Part second contains the four syllables in the old patent notes.

It will also contain the rudiments of music on a plain and concise plan.

The object of the publishers in getting up this work, is to assist the public in singing the do, ra, mi system with much ease and accuracy, without being compelled to go through a long and tedious study of the round note system.

It also contains a Hindoo piece, accompanied with both the Hindoo and English languages.

The entire work will be executed on good paper and in a neat and substantial manner, and bound in good style, by J. A. & U. P. James, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

The work will be completed about the first of June next.

TERMS.—The OHIO HARMONIST will be delivered to subscribers at seventy-five cents per single copy, to be paid on delivery. A reasonable discount will be made to wholesale purchasers. All orders addressed to the undersigned at Washington, Guernsey county, Ohio, or Peersville, Harrison county, Ohio, or J. A. & U. P. James, Cincinnati, accompanied with the cash, and post paid, will be promptly attended to.

By the Rev. Thomas Potter, Minister of the M. P. Church.
VOLUME I.

THE EVANGELICAL ECONOMY DEVELOPED, IN A SERIES OF DISCOURSES ON THE FACTS, INSTITUTIONS, APPLIANCES, EFFECTS, AND FINAL RESULTS OF THE CHRISTIAN SYSTEM, VIZ:

I. The dispensation of the Gospel the subject of prophetic anticipation.

II. The evangelic announcement of the Savior's nativity.

III. The divine mandate at the incarnation of the Son of God.

IV. The introduction of the Mediatorial economy the subject of rejoicing in heaven.

V. The work of grace on the day of Pentecost the model for religious revivals.

VI. The primitive Evanglisits the patterns of all succeeding preachers.

VII. The divine institution for saving the world.

VIII. The moral revolutions which the triumphs of the Gospel accomplish.

IX. The religious excitement produced by the successful preaching of the Gospel, defended.

X. The principal cause of the failure of the agencies of Christianity.

XI. The penitent sinner on earth the delight of the Angels in heaven.

XII. The final consummation of the dispensation of grace in the solemnities of the day of judgment.

The views embodied in these discourses are such as are held in common by all evangelical denominations. The author eschews all controversy. The style is didactic. Nothing sectarian has a place in these sermons, which are simply devoted to popular impression and instruction. It is proposed to put to the Press these Sermons as soon as a sufficient number of subscribers have been secured to justify their publication. If the author meet with adequate encouragement in the sale of this first Volume, it will be succeeded by a second, and so on.

[The contents of the second, third, fourth and fifth volumes are also given in the prospectus which has been furnished us, but as the first volume is to be published separately, the above will sufficiently for the present, indicate the nature and plan of the work. Ed.]

The whole of these discourses were prepared and delivered, during a not unsuccessful ministry of upwards of twenty years, partly in this country and partly in Great Britain; and are already committed to writing.

Each Volume will be sold at the moderate charge of One Dollar, to be paid for on delivery.

The Volumes will be neatly bound,—octavo size,—and printed on good paper, in a clear type. Each Volume will contain upwards of three hundred pages. Subscriptions will be received for the first Volume alone; or for the first and second; or the whole series may be subscribed for at once.

Mr LEVI PETIT is authorized to receive subscriptions for these contemplated publications; or a letter addressed to the author, Mount Vernon, Knox county, Ohio, with a request over the writer's signature, to become a subscriber, will insure the insertion of his name on the subscription list. THOMAS POTTER.

Family Worship.

"In dwellings of the Righteous
Is heard the melody"*
Of praise and prayer; an offering sweet,
Whose incense riseth high.
No skeptic hand dare raise the latch
Entranc'd by power divine;
There's nought on earth he ever heard,
So simple, so sublime.

That golden age has now arrived
Our Fathers long'd to see;
Each family altar may be rais'd,
Each home may worship thee.
No flocks nor herds are now required,
Nor first fruits of the field,
Nor needed priests at temple share
What costly offerings yield.

Nor toils, nor travel far from home,
Nor tenth of all are own'd;
But praise and prayer at e'en and morn,
With those we love around:
The family prayer, the family stand,
The family Bible's place,
Produce impressions on the young,
That age cannot erase.

Our "God is Love," and love is paid
By loving in return;
And families display their love
When family altars burn.
O, skeptic man! why ask for law?
Go own your privilege great;
'Tis love constrains, when families bow,
And worship at his feet.

His fury's promis'd to be pour'd
On every family band,
That will not call upon his name,
Tho' in a christian land:
The Patriarch's family worship'd God,
And gain'd a blessing bright;
And Joshua and his house resolv'd
To serve the Lord aright.

That maxim's true o'er every land,
"To serve God is to reign;"
Nor task, nor duty call it then,—
Your honor'd privilege claim.
Up, valiant soldier, be array'd
Put on your armor bright,
Your shield of faith, your sword of prayer,
Your song, call'd "Saint's Delight."†

Then stand, in christian courage stand,
And stem the scoffer's race;
This practical Deistic track,
This deluge of disgrace.
Else nothing do, then nothing think,
And soon you'll nothing try,
But doubt and dispute all your life,
Until the day you die. GRATIOT.

Welcome to Wisconsin.

BY MRS. SIGOURNEY.

Welcome, young Sister of the fruitful West—
Ruddy in countenance, rich in health,
And of a comely stature.

Though our brows
Are graver than thine own, and marked by care,
Or gathered wrinkles of maturity—
We give thee greeting warm. Thy smile of hope
Will make our hearthstone brighter.

Thou hast been
Not idle in thy childhood, and we hear
A good report of thee, from some we love—
Who from our own New England turned away
To find a home with thee.

And thou hast shown
Deep-rooted virtues in thy budding youth—
Justice and pity. Thou did'st not forget
In the o'erflowings of thy happiness
Those tribes of darker hue, whose fathers held
Sole lordship here—when ours in distant climes
Tested the Druid's sway—or Saxon yoke
Of heptarchy—or with Norman hordes,
Carved out a narrow islet.

Thou alone,
'Mid all the thoughtful sisterhood of States,
Gave the forgotten* forest son a part
Of thy glad liberties, and standing free
On thy green Runnimede, unawed by threats
Of steel-clad barons, with their half-drawn swords,
Did'st on thy Magna Charta write his name.
Fair Sister, thou hast been more merciful,
More just than we.

Therefore we yield thee praise,
And in the example of our youngest one,
Do read our reproof.

For we have frowned
On our red brother—till he fled afar
Into the wilderness, and left behind
Only the sighings of his mighty voice
Upon our streams and mountains. This we take
Daily upon our lips, uttering his name,
Speaking his words, but not remembering him.

When, 'mid his exiled haunts, thy favoring voice
Shall reach his lonely heart, until he lays
His hunting bow aside—and in thy halls
Stands with thy people—bid them not to scorn
The tinge upon his mournful brow, but lead
His wandering children to a brighter day.

So shall the blessings of the sad of heart,
And him that hath no helper—be a crown
Amid thy clustering locks—more beautiful
Than all the gold of earth's prosperity,
Young Sister of the West.

*Referring to the extension of the elective franchise to the Indians, as they shall become civilized—provided for in the 3d and 4th clauses of the 9th article of the Constitution of the State of Wisconsin, adopted by its Convention at Madison, December 16, 1846.

Biographical.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Thomas Stratton,

Was born some time in the year of 1757, in the county of Morris, New-Jersey. When he was about the age of eighteen, he entered the army and served his country as a soldier for three years in the revolutionary war. About this time he was visited by the awakening spirit of God. When he returned home there was a powerful revival of religion going on in the neighborhood in which his father lived among the Presbyterians. During this revival he was strongly urged by the spirit to make a full consecration of himself to God, though he deferred it for the then time-being.—He soon married, and he and his wife removed to Sussex co., New-Jersey, and at this time there was a revival of religion going on among the then novel people, called Methodists. He heard a Methodist preacher but twice until under a sermon from: If the righteous scarcely be saved, &c. The word was as a nail driven home to his heart, as in a sure place by the power of God. He resolved to devote himself to the service of the Lord; and in about three weeks salvation through faith was opened into his soul, and he enabled to rejoice in a sin pardoning God. He joined the M. E. Church with a few others, and formed the first class in that country. A few years after this he removed west of the Allegheny Mts., and settled in Washington co., Pa. There he found no one in his own neighborhood, with whom he could unite in Christian Fellowship; but soon heard of a small society, and preaching place about three miles off, he sought, and found them and united with them. He lived among, and met with them, for about six years. He then removed to Beaver co., on the north side of the Ohio river, six miles from Beavertown, on the Great Cleveland road. In the year of 1846, I saw him at a camp-meeting on the farm of old Doct. Samuel Adams, father of the late Dr. Milo Adams. This meeting was within a mile or so of Father Stratton's. Here he was with the ministers in the front of the battle against the man of sin.—He told me that the first preaching was done on this side of the river by those whom he had travelled far back over toward Washington to invite. Soon after preaching was brought over, a class was formed at his house, and he appointed leader. He told me that after he removed to this side of the river he on one occasion attended a camp-meeting on Redstone, a distance of about eighty miles from his house; I think he went on foot.—Here he met one or two preachers from Kentucky, one from Baltimore, and one or two from New York, and many people from the distance of a hundred miles and upwards. But of the many extraordinary proofs of his burning zeal for the cause of religion, I must give but few lest you and the reader be wearied, but he told me he was fully paid for the trip in witnessing and realizing the display of Divine Power. Ever since I knew him he lived a worthy example to all christians; in that he lived a life of humble love. And best of all he died in holy triumph on the 30th day of August, 1846, aged 89 years. His aged companion died the 12th day of May, just 3 months and 18 days before him. But I wish to state a few things concerning him, near the close of his life. In August, 1845, the M. E. Church held a camp-meeting within two miles of his farm. The old folks had given the entire management of the farm to the youngest son and they were taken care of by him. At this time his son's family was too sick to have a tent, and when I got my family on the ground, I went to their house for straw for the tent. I entered the and house, found the two old folks in good health, though both blind. Here my mind was awed at the sight of the venerable pair, but my soul leaped while I talked with them; their talk was sweet music to my ear, and as cordial to my spirit. I soon made arrangement to take the old man to the meeting on the next day, and did accordingly; and during his stay I led him out to preaching and prayer meeting at the altar in which he enjoyed himself well.

Monday of the meeting came on, the close to take place on Tuesday; and as he had been out three days, thought I had better take him home that evening; his company and conversation had been so charming and profitable, we concluded to improve the interval after 11 o'clock sermon and on his account collected a prayer meeting circle in the Freedom tent, composed first of all the oldest professors on the ground, and the oldest minister to lead it; it closed with an experience meeting. Father Stratton related his experience. Oh, that I could have written it in full! He employed full 30 minutes in detailing his conversion.—His unshaken confidence in God in all his christian history. He said, I have enjoyed the comforts of religion and been a member of Christ's visible Church these 62 years, and in all that time, I never regretted that I started in the christian course; for, for the most part it has been a life of joy and peace. He said, I to be sure have had some sore battles, but these when won only made my joy in Jesus more complete. Here with strong emphasis he said, Brethren, Sisters, like Paul, I have fought a good fight, &c., but when he came to the words: There is laid up for me a Crown, he burst forth in ecstacy of joy. He shouted, he leaped to an almost incredible height for five or ten minutes, and then when his aged limbs failed, with his staff he still endeavored to soar. He said, I've attended many camp meetings, but this will be my last. He said, I go home to lay this body down to sleep in Jesus, but I shall awake in the morning of the Saviour. I want to see you all there. He said, I'm blind and cannot see you now, but with these eyes I shall soon see God; by faith I now view my inheritance in Heaven; I long to possess it. Glory, Glory! Here he needed support; I held him up while he concluded his talk. He closed with these words: And now, said he, shaking my hand as I supported him with the other, I have an errand for you, and all of you, when you go to your homes: if you see my children, Grand-children, or any of their children, tell them if they ever expect to see their earthly parent, they must come to Heaven where I shall soon be. Again he broke out in shouting, Hallelujah, Hallelujah, Glory, Glory, Amen, Amen. At this moment the shouts of the people drowned his voice, of whom was our excellent Brother Milo Adams. I attempted to remove him and had scarce help to set him into the carriage, for the spirit of the Lord gave all employ in praising God for the signal out-pouring of grace among them. He shouted all the way home. I left him shouting and found the people still shouting on my return to the ground. Let the reader know that thus the promise of the Saviour was exemplified in him "If any man serve me, him will my Father honor." Yes, he was honored with peace and usefulness in life, and will stand forth in Glory a bright star of the church redeemed from the earth; and crowned with a bright diadem than ever decked the brow of earthly monarchs. Oh, that the spirit of his God may enkindle in the souls of all who read this imperfect sketch of his life a fixed determination thus to honor God in his church and share the rich patrimony Father Stratton has gone to inherit. Trial by Jury.

One of the wise provisions, in the constitution of the United States, is, that "in all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury." In the administration of even-handed justice, in free, and in mixed civil governments, trial by an impartial jury of his peers, is deemed the indefeisible right of every citizen. And in order to secure an impartial jury, the right of challenge is allowed the accused—and the same individual cannot act and decide a second time in the same case—nor any one who has pre-judged the case, or is likely to be influenced by prejudice or self-interest. These salutary precautions, are established in civil jurisprudence, to guard against that prejudice and partiality, to which all human tribunals are liable. Another wise provision, in civil jurisprudence is, that ot an appeal, to a higher tribunal, to secure the ends of justice—i. e. impartial justice.

And should not ecclesiastical jurisprudence, be equally fair, impartial, and just? Have we any guaranty, of the perpetual purity, impartiality, wisdom, or infallibility of church rulers? Sad experience, and lamentable facts prove the contrary. A writer, in a Methodist Episcopal Church paper, says "our ecclesiastical polity and discipline, is not formed upon the model of our civil institutions." This is literally, and unfortunately true—especially as it regards the trial of ministers and members, accused of crime, or any charges of immorality—and more especially local ministers or preachers. Trial by a committee; and of an appeal is, or should be, an ecclesiastical jurisprudence, what trial by jury and an appeal is in our civil institutions,—each should be impartial, to accomplish the ends of justice. It is true, the Church in Protestant countries, or under a free civil government, cannot lay fines, or inflict corporal punishment—Yet church censure, or excision, may be a serious calamity—a sore punishment—and impartial justice is vitally important.

It is also true that the rulers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, did, in 1808, pass an edict, or settle a paramount law—designed no doubt to be perpetual providing for "trial by a committee, and of an appeal." So far, at least in appearance, their "polity and discipline," was "formed upon the model of our civil institutions." But where are the regulations, and checks, to secure the faithful and impartial use of executive power? Or to ensure an impartial trial, and an impartial adjudication on an appeal? These very essential provisions are wanting. First, in the trial of members: Originally, it was "before the society of which he is a member, or a select number of them." But now, the universal practice is, before a committee, selected, chosen, or appointed by the executive officer—"in the presence of a bishop, elder, deacon, or preacher." The accused has no right to demur—to object to, or challenge any member of said committee, on the ground of having pre-judged the case—being interested in the decision, or being under the influence of prejudice or partiality.

Every well informed man knows, that an impartial trial, is, at least precarious, even under the garb of christianity. But the accused may appeal, to a higher tribunal—to a quarterly meeting conference. Well, the same judge may, for any thing that appears to the contrary, preside a second time in the same case—and "decide all questions of law"—and the same individuals, who acted and decided on the trial, may act and decide on the appeal. This is incontrovertible. And nothing but a blind, implicit faith, can encourage, an appellant to hope for an impartial decision, or impartial justice. Secondly, in the trial of local preachers, "on a charge of immorality"—the decree, or paramount law, of 1808, above referred to, settled, that "trial by a committee and of an appeal," should not be done away—unless under a well guarded proviso. But what does this avail? Episcopal decisions," have, in effect done away this privilege by deciding that local preachers, may be tried, "on a charge of immorality," by a quarterly conference, "independently of a committee!" But suppose a committee is resorted to, which may easily be avoided, the executive officer, selects or appoints his jury, or committee—and the accused has no right to demur personal enemies, or those who have prejudged the case, may be his judges, there is no remedy provided. The powers of said committee, according to an Episcopal decision, is, merely to ascertain if there be cause"—but according to rule, it is, to acquit, or find guilty and suspend. But suppose the committee to be impartial—the same judge and jury, or committee, may act and decide, in the quarterly conference, a few hours after the first decision—where personal enemies, or prejudiced persons may act and decide—this has been, and may be again, when there is a marked and doomed object.

But the local preacher may appeal to a higher judicature,—the annual conference. Well, the accused may have to travel one or two hundred miles, at his own expense. And now the same judge, or executive officer, may preside—the influence of a presiding elder, and his subordinate may be wielded against the doomed man—his chance for impartial justice, is a forlorn hope. These are not idle fancies, or exaggerated views they are based on facts, stubborn facts, of which I have had ocular demonstration. To the honor of the convention of 1830, who framed the constitution of the Methodist Protestant Church, be it spoken, that in the matter of trial and appeal, they formed the polity and discipline of that church, upon the model of our free, safe, and wise civil institutions—as also, in other respects, upon the model of apostolical practice, and primitive usage, cautiously avoiding fanatical anarchy on the one hand, and arbitrary aristocracy, on the other. They have, to use the language of that judicious and amiable local minister, H. M. Cryer, now no more, erected "an edifice of strengh and beauty." Its strength may be paralized, by injudicious hands, and its beauty despoiled by mistaken zeal, but "mutual rights," cannot be easily better defined, or better secured. L. G.

Sketches by Rev. A. M'Guire.

NO. III.

Saturday, January 25, 1829, went to Lebanon, met with Br. N. Kelly Esq. who lived near Deerfield, went home with him; 26th preached in Deerfield, and gave out another appointment, four weeks from that time, I rested at home Monday and Tuesday. Wednesday 29th, rode to Xenia, preached there at night, Br. Towler, a local preacher of Methodist Episcopal Church, having heard that I was out, and had organized two classes, had withdrawn with eleven members, in Xenia and three more were added that night. On Friday 31st, I rode to Br. Joel Dalby's Sr., and preached with liberty to a crowded house, and then read the Articles of Association, with full expectation of organizing when I came there again. February 1st, rode to Br. Higgins, rested that night; Saturday, 2nd, rode to Br. Walen's, preached there that night. Sunday, 3d, rode to Wicles, and preached with liberty, several more joined the little band. There is now just fifty in these two classes, of the first fruits of reform in the west part of the state, except Cincinnati, and one little class of fifteen which withdrew in Bellbrook, with our beloved and pious old Br. Reuben M'Daniel a local preacher of their head. Monday, went back to Br. Higgins, preached at night and formed a class of six members. Tuesday 5th, set out for home. Wednesday 6th, put up with Esq. Collet, and found his faith strong for the prosperity of our cause, but he continues in the M. Episcopal Church. Thursday 7th, got home, found my family all well. Having neglected my temporal business, whilst travelling, found it necessary to stay at home a few days.

Sunday, 25th of February, I went to Deerfield, to fill my appointment; but soon found that a plan was formed to shut me out from that place. One plan was, the sexton had orders to make no fire in the stove; another was to have class meeting in the school house close by, at the same hour I was to preach. The sexton told them he would make a fire, and did so. I waited some time for the people to come and about fifty or sixty come in, to whom I preached from; If ye love me, keep my commandments. After preaching I talked a few minutes on church government, and then warned of the danger they were in, for rejecting me if I was a true minister of Jesus Chrsts, and brought into view the blessing of God on my labors among them a few weeks back, but your presiding Elder and preacher have turned you against me; though your presiding Elder, acknowledged, after he had taken my spiritual children into the church, that Br. M'Guire had shook the bush, and he had caught the birds, about 12 members, this he said, before I had seceded.

And now passing over some days, I would just state that I have with the blessing of God attending my feeble efforts formed a circuit, and have organized several classes, and have an encouraging prospect before me. On the 2nd of March, I rode to Br. Towler's, and Br. Jonathan Flood, Sr. met me there and informed me that he had made an appointment for me at Br. Joel Dalbey's for the next night, and that he was ready to join with me as a regular fellow laborer in the cause of mutual rights. On Tuesday 3d, we rode to Br. Dalbey's, and I preached there that night, and the next day at 11 o'clock; the good Lord blessed the word, to many souls, I then proceeded to organize, and two ministers, Br. J. Flood and Br. J. Dalbey, and 18 of the old members and 3 new members came forward, and our venerable old Br. Dobbins, being present, rose and informed us that he would soon be with us, that he wanted to get a certificate before he left, and applied for it at the next Quarterly Conference, but failed though they had nothing against him. On the 5th, I rode through a storm of snow to Springfield, where Brs. Saul and Moses Henkle, having heard that I was at work, withdrew and took with them 26 members. On Friday, 6th, rode to Silas Henkle's, Pleasant Hill, and preached there that night, in a new brick meeting house, and organized a class of nine members, all from the old stock; Saturday 7th, rode to Br. Cartmell's and notice being given for preaching the next Sabbath, 8th, Br. S. Henkle met me here, and after I had preached to a large congregation, Br. Henkle proceeded to organize, and there 13 old members and 3 new ones cames forward. On Monday, 9th, I rode to Br. Newlove's, an old Methodist family from England, a class of nine members had been formed here by Br. S. Henkle, all old English Methodists, and a more lovely people I never saw. I preached to them that night in much affliction of body, having taken a severe cold, we had a comfortable time, especially in class. On Tuesday, 10th, at night, I had an appointment, in Harmony Meeting-House, and the Lord was present with us, some shouted aloud, one lady began to shout before I had closed my first prayer. Br. S. Henkle had formed a class here of 9 members, two more were added last Sabbath, and four at this meeting, three from the old church and one new member. On Wednesday 14th, I had made an appointment at Esq. Lemmons, who a few days before was a very strong Episcopal man, I was favored with divine aid, and many tears were shed and much good feeling, they requested me to leave another appointment, I did so, Br. Lemmon followed me to my horse, and when I shook hands with him, he left 50 cents in my hand, I thanked him, & told him it was the first I had received since I had started to travel under the flag of mutual rights, now better than two months. I then rode seven miles to Springfield and preached to a few in one of the upper rooms in the court house. After preaching at several other places, on Saturday 14th, set out for our first quarterly meeting to be holden at Bell Brook, and I believe it was the first Quarterly Meeting Conference held in the state. We had respectable congregations day and night, and the good Lord was with us to comfort his people. We have now organized a six weeks circuit, with upwards of 200 members and nine preachers, two of us, Br. J. Flood, and myself willing to forsake all for the sake of of immortal souls and mutual rights.

Scientific.

Usefulness of Scientific Labors.

It might be interesting to refer to the history of inventions, to show the close connection between scientific labors and the arts of life. What aid has been given to the agriculturist in the investigations made by Sir Humphrey Davy and others, of the properties of different soils! How much has been effected by the same science, within a few years, for the improvement of the process of tanning hides! The same is also true of the art of dying cloth. How without the aid of chemistry, would the products of the loom be tinged with hues, fixed and made permanent, and various as the fancies of the fair!

Every farmer knows that some soils are better adapted to the raising of certain crops than others; but how to remedy these defects, what course of cultivation should be followed, and what applications should be made to different soils, that they may be rendered fertile, it is the office of the chemist to determine. But here it may occur to some, that many important inventions and discoveries are the result of accident, or have been made by practical men, who are directly employed in conducting processes of manual labor.

It is also here to be noticed, that in those instances where accidental discoveries and inventions have been made, it is science which has perfected these inventions and tested their value, by referring them to the great principles of nature, and by applying them to the various purposes they may be made to subserve. We might here refer to that wonder of our age, the steam engine. Any man sitting by his kitchen fire might be the discoverer of the expansive power of steam; but it is science which has investigated the laws by which this mighty agent is governed, and has subjected it to human control. And then, when the power is created and ready to do our bidding, what mechanical knowledge and skill are required in its various applications! Think, for a moment, of the different directions which are given to this power, and of the different offices it is made to perform. Now it reaches down to the depths beneath, and brings up to regions of light the hidden treasures of the mine, and now, burying itself in some subterranean cell, it sends up its Herculean arm and Briarean hands and fingers of iron to do its wonders of skill and of power in the workshops above. At one time it conceals itself beneath the deck of the vessel, and the huge mass, which lies "floating many a rood," becomes instinct with life and motion; like leviathan of old, "it maketh the sea to boil like a pot, and out of its nostrils goeth smoke and sparks of fire leap out." At another time, "swifter than a post," it speeds its way over hill & valley, hurrying onward, in its rocket-like course, its train of rattling cars. But it is not only in the perfecting of inventions, and in multiplying the useful application of discovered powers, that the aid of science is felt. We might speak of its importance as it teaches men the limits of discovery and invention, telling them not only what may be done, but what may not be done. How much time and useless labor are thus saved! How many highly raised expectations are shown to be delusive!—Methodist Quarterly Review.

Chemical Miracles.

At the court of the Duke of Brunswick, Professor Beyruss promised that during dinner his coat should become red; and to the amazement of the prince and his other guests, it actually became of that colour. M. Vogel, who relates the fact, does not reveal the secret made use of by Beyruss; but he observes that by pouring limewater on the juice of beet-root, a colorless liquid is obtained; and that a piece of cloth steeped in this liquid and quickly dried becomes red in a few hours simply by contact with the air; and further that the effect is accelerated in an apartment where champaigne and other wines are being plentifully poured out. It has been proved by recent experiments, that wool dyed by orchill of a violet color, or stained blue by the acidulated sulphate of indigo, in a bath of hydro-sulphuric acid, becomes colorless, yet resumes the blue or the violet colors on exposure to the free air. Either explanation applies to the modern fact, and indicates the probability of reviving ancient prodigies; it also discovers the manner in which, amidst flaming torches and smoking incense, in the sanctuaries of polytheism, the veil concealing the sacred things may have been seen to change from a white to a blood red hue, and which spectacle was considered as the presage of frightful disasters. Blood boiling on the alters, or upon the marbles, or in the vases of the temples was also indicative of peril and calamity.—In Province, in the sixteenth century, when a consecrated phial filled with the blood of St. Magdaline, in a solid state, was placed near her pretended head, the blood became liquid and suddenly boild. The same phenomenon was exhibited in the cathedral of Avelino, with the blood of St. Lawrence; and also at Bisseglia, with that of St. Pantaleon, and of two other martyrs. In the present day, at an annual public ceremony at Naples, some of the blood of St. Januarius, collected and dried centuries ago, becomes spontaneously liquified, and rises in a boiling state to the top of the phial that encloses it. These phenomena may be produced by reddening sulphuric ether with orcannette, (onosma, Linn.) and mixing the tincture with spermaceti. This preparation, at ten degrees above the freezing point, (centigrade,) remains condensed, but melts and boils at twenty. To raise it to this temperature, it is only necessary to hold the phial which contains it in the hand for some time.—Dr. A. T. Thompson's Phylosophy of Magic.—Montreal Courier.

THE STORY OF MANY A YOUNG MAN.—We have read with deep interest the report of Rev. J. W. White, city missionary of Cincinnati, urging upon the corporation to erect a House of Correction to take the place of a county jail.

Imprisonment in jail is the punishment for the smallest offences, and boys of nine and fifteen years of age are sent to herd with rogues. Mr. White gives the following incident of one of his visits and it is to introduce this that we make reference to the subject. Speaking of one of the young men in the Penitentiary, he gives his conversation as follows:—Pitts. Gaz.

"I commenced my course by disobedience to my mother in staying out late at night. Next I visitied the theatre, and desecrated the Sabbath day. This led me into bad company. Here I began to gamble and was often stripped of my last cent. To raise my spirits, I began to drink; and while on a spree I committed this bloody crime, which will link my name with infamy—break my mother's heart—disgrace my poor sisters, and send me to my grave, with a dagger in my soul. I wish I could become stupid; but my curse is, I am obliged to think. I wish for death, and yet fear to meet my God."

Here the poor boy sank down upon his couch and gave vent to his overflowing agonies in sobs and tears. Others there are who are hardened, wretched and lost. But, for the encouragement of parents, I will say, I have never yet met but one who had been blessed with a praying mother, who would not feel and weep at the mention of her name.

MEMORIA TECHNICA:

Or, the Art of Abbreviating those Studies which give the greatest labor to the Memory; including Numbers, Historical Dates, Geography, Astronomy, Gravities, &c.; also Rules for Memorizing Technicalities, Nomenclature, Proper Names, Prose, Poetry, and Topics in general.—Embracing all the available Rules found in Mnemonic or Mnemotechny of Ancient and Modern Times. To which is added a Perpetual Almanac for Two Thousand Years of Past Time and Time to Come. Adapted to the use of Schools. By LORENZO D. JOHNSON. Second edition, revised and improved.—Boston.

PRICE—50 CENTS.

In presenting to the public the "Memoria Technica," which, in some respects, may be said to contain a new theory of instruction, the publishers beg leave to call the attention of Teachers, School Committees, and others interested in education, the peculiar merits of the work. It has been already introduced into several of our best and most popular schools in Boston and vicinity, and has also received high commendation from many of our most distinguished clergymen and other literary men who have examined it.

Notices of the Press.

'This system of Mnemotechny, differing considerably from the one introduced by Prof. Gouraud, is designed to furnish all the rules for aiding the memory without lessening mental culture, which can be made available during the course of elementary study. The illustrations may be easily comprehended by any person of ordinary mental capacity, and the application of the principle upon which the system is based must necessarily furnish an agreeable and useful exercise to the mind. It is well adapted to common school instruction, and may be made a very profitable study, if rightly pursued. Every page of the work gives evidence of a desire to present the laws of association distinctly & clearly, so as to enable the learner to establish such relations between things, events, &c., as will aid the memory. We commend the book to teachers and all interested in this important subject.'—N. Y. Teachers' Advocate.

'The art of improving the memory is surely a very important one, and whoever contributes any thing to further this end, certainly renders an important service to the public. Mr Johnson, we believe, has succeeded in bringing his system of mnemonics into such a practicable form, that will render it an essential aid to all who do not naturally have a great power of memory.'—Ch. Witness

'This is a treatise on artificial memory prepared for the use of schools. The subject is a curious one, and worthy of attention.'—Boston Recorder.

'This system of mnemonics, being the first work of the kind ever prepared for the use of schools, and being arranged and simplified that any one of ordinary capacities may easily acquire a knowledge of its principles, is certainly worthy of examination and study. It is not emphatically an aid to the memory, and as such, is well adapted to common school instruction. We heartily commend it to public notice, while we hope that Mr Johnson will receive the reward due to his industry and perseverance by seeing this work extensively introduced into our schools, public and private.'—Tem. Standard.

'The author promises to endow his pupils with an infinite faculty of memory. If he can do it without much trouble on the part of the recipients, he will do a good thing, and as far as we can judge, he seems likely to accomplish it. While his system is much more simple than any we have before examined, it contains a great deal more. Moreover, it makes the thing a matter of practical education, within the reach of all.'—Chronotypist.

'There are minds of a certain class that are wont to be interested in mnemonics, and we doubt not that such will find valuable assistance in a work of this kind.—N. E. Puritan.

'The book, although designed and adapted to the use of schools, is nevertheless worthy the attention of all persons who wish to assist or strengthen memory.'—N. E. Washingtonian.

'A very ingenious and useful book, designed to shorten the labor of those studies which require the exercise of memory, by a system of memorizing.'—Reading Gazette, Pa.

We feel no hesitation in recommending this work to the deliberate attention of teachers, and the guardians of youth. We learn that it is received into several of the schools in Boston, and used as an auxiliary help to the studies now pursued by the pupils.'—Boston Courier.

'We noticed the first edition of this book a short time since, and in addition to what we then said, will only say now, that it is prepared by one who has paid great attention to the subject, and who has been employed to teach his system by some of our most experienced teachers and wisest men.'—Ch. Register.

'We have given the work a partial examination, sufficient to become convinced that the subject is one of importance.'—Ch. Watchman.

The Memoria Technica is now studied in some of the best schools; and the system taught in it appears to be much approved by those who have made trial of it.—Evening Traveller.

The work contains a vast amount of important facts and useful information; which, aside from its value as a system of instruction, render it, as has been justly said by many who have examined it, well worth the price of the work as a mere book of reference. Published by

Letters to an Eminent Minister.

LETTER IV.

Partial Pastoral Visitation, Etc.

Sir—A minister of the Lord Jesus Christ occupies the most exalted and responsible station in this world; and as an ambassador from God, above every other individual, is laid under the most solemn and weighty obligations. His duties, diversified and numerous as they may be, and standing connected with the welfare of a large number of precious and immortal beings, and his own peace of mind, if he has been divinely commissioned for the great work of the ministry, must be kindly, faithfully, and fearlessly discharged, without partiality, the consultation of use or profit, or the esteem or disrespect of men.

"'Tis not a cause of small import,
The pastor's care demands;
But what might fill an angel's heart,
And filled the Saviour's hands.

They watch for souls, for which the Lord
Did heavenly bliss forego!
For souls, which must forever live,
In raptures, or in woe."

How strikingly sublime are some of the examples given us in the Bible of a faithful, yet meek and dignified discharge of the sacred office.—What a moral grandeur is there connected with the beautiful reproof by the Prophet Nathan, administered to the Shepherd King. Read his pathetic representations of the wrong sustained by the grossly injured Uriah, and then notice how he rises in the dignity of his office, and in the voice of the kingly transgressor, charges home the crime: "Thou art the man!" What meekness, kindness, and benevolence beamed forth in the life of the great Shepherd; and yet how dignifiedly severe in his castigation of wrongs, and wrong-doers. He fearlessly tore aside the paraphernalia of priestly office, and stripped the rich of their vestments, to expose the deep wickedness and deception of their characters. No vesture, however sacred—no office, however honorable—no calling, however esteemed—no occupation, however revered,—could prevent this great Nazarene Reformer from unfolding and bringing to light the hidden mysteries of darkness. Yet so kind and lowly that he could seat himself by the hearth of the honored household of "Martha and Mary and Lazarus," and there, amid the social relations of life, and the sweet endearments of domestic bliss, entertain the devoted and happy family with words of divine comfort, and consolation, or mild and gentle reproof.

How deeply interesting is the conduct of that minister, and how strictly in unison with his divine calling, who can thus visit the members of his flock—the charge committed to his trust.—Love him, like an angel of mercy, wending his pious way on errands of love. Then in the malefactor's cell he offers a doomed criminal pardon in the name of the Lord Jesus. Or in the lonely secret, kneeling by the straw couch of a poor forsaken child of God, an object of extreme want and suffering, he sweetly cheers her parting spirit with the promise of eternal life. Here is the lost sheep, whom he kindly reproves; here are the poor sheep that have wandered far on the bleak and barren mountains, ready to die of thirst and hunger, whom he gently leads back to the paths of righteousness and the fold of Christ; here are the lambs of his flock, whom he takes in his arms, kindly caressing and sustaining them in their young and tender years; here are the poor, the fatherless, the widow, the sorrowful, the heart-stricken, on whom a cold and cheerless world blows its chill and freezing breath; into their afflicted bosoms he kindly pours the oil of gladness, and the words of consolation and peace. He "strengthens the weak hands, confirms the feeble knees," and says to the fearful in heart, "be strong!"

This, sir, is but a brief and very feeble description of what a minister ought to be; and, thank God, notwithstanding there are so many hireling teachers in the world, what many pastors are. But let us look, if you please, at the conduct of some professed shepherds of the flock of Christ. Behold how full of pride, and arrayed in "goodly apparel and gay clothing." Look how they "lord over God's heritage," ruling their flocks with a rod of ecclesiastical tyranny; and the poor people submit to this spiritual despotism, though it occasionally makes them wince and chafe. Turn your attention to the pulpit. See how pompously the minister rises to address his audience—mark how he spreads himself; words swell in his lips, grow big for utterance:" he blusters, raves,—rants about the church—our church—and with a wide sweep of invective eloquence endeavors to overwhelm every other orthodox denomination. He would compel, provided he had the power, every individual to adopt his own opinions, and should they see proper to adopt their own views in preference to his, he will thunder forth anathemies, and hurl destruction at their presumptive heads. Glad would he be to persuade them that the priests should rule the people, and that the people should say, "Amen!" Or see him, to use a nautical phrase, on the other tack. How plausible his theory, how specious his arguments; and yet so finely attenuated, gossamer-like that the truth may be discovered by a little careful examination. His government is not now intolerant, neither is it aristocratic; on the contrary, the people's rights are esteemed and respected. And thus he "trails" his gilded hook, which is seized by some unsuspecting and uninvestigating individual, who soon realizes that "all is not gold that glitters." At the "tremulous motion" of the ecclesiastical rod he endeavors to make his escape; but the greater his efforts, the firmer the fisherman grasps his rod and draws the line; and only by the exercise of desperate strength is he enabled to break the ecclesiastical hook and line, and make his escape into safer and happier regions. But our minister is a fortunate man: he can draw consolation from two opposite extremes of action. So long as the ecclesiastical line remained unbroken, it held an excellent fish! but when broken, the excellent fish becomes a worthless scrub—a poor, shabby fellow!! "I have known," says Doctor Thomas Dick, "individuals of respectable character and attainments, who, from conscientious motives, had forsaken the denomination to which they formerly belonged, have, merely on this account, been treated with scorn and neglect, been banished from the intimacies of social and friendly intercourse, and been regarded nearly in the same light as a Turk or an infidel; and that, too, by men who pretended to liberality, and to literary accomplishments."

Another picture, if you please, sir. With what importance that minister urges his way. How pompous his carriage, how aristocratic his air, how light his step. You are almost inclined to believe that his feet disdain to tread on common soil. How beautifully he flourishes his cane; how exact the "fit" of his coat and pantaloons, cut in the latest style—and they ought to fit well, for his tailor says he is one of his most fastidious customers, the hardest to please! He approaches the house of one of his wealthy members, and being about noon, he draws from his pocket a superb watch, to observe, of course, the hour of the day.—Brother S., a poor member of his charge, meets him on the side-walk, and bows familiarly. But his bow is met with a vacant stare, and an "I-don't-know-you-sir," expression.

Look again. See him meet Brother C. the wealthy merchant. O, what a benign countenance now! what a bland smile illuminates his features! what a cordial shaking of hands! "Hope you're well, sir?" "hope your family's well, sir?"—"you look rather pale, sir!" "bless me! are you sick, sir?" escapes in rapid succession from his enraptured lips. What do you think of it, sir? Is it not an abomination in the sight of God—an outrage on Christianity, and true politeness? Well may the prophet exclaim: "Wo to the shepherds! the shepherds feed not the flock!"

I heard the tailor of that brother say that he had no less than four or five coats in his wardrobe, nearly new, that had been laid aside, because they did not "fit" to suit his very refined taste for the fashionable. And if you will pardon a digression, sir, I will state here that I have heard several tailors remark, that Preachers generally were the most fastidious people about the "cut of their clothes."

Concluded next week.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Br. Bassett: My other communications of late have been of a character to animate the soul of the Christian, and to decry the hollow, and baseless doctrine of Infidelity. One of our late day Philosophers had the effrontry to say to me lately that, the chastisement of the Almighty is not promptly executed in these days upon those who deny his existence or the authenticity of the Bible. Now you will discover that he, and I are at issue. I contend that the word of the Lord by Malachi 4 ch. 1st verse, is fulfilled to the letter in this the day of Christ, and I'm going to prove it from known facts, within the present century; and living testimony to some of the most important might be brought to bear upon it. In 1805–6 or 7, there was a man in our neighborhood, who with his youthful companion enjoyed the religion of the Saviour: He an humble, devout and profitable leader of one of the first Methodist classes ever raised on this side of the Ohio river; for a time he ran well, and though he was exceedingly poor when he came out, the labor of his hand prospered; he grew rich. But ah! he grew proud, lost his religion; and by his bad example, the class was scattered—and it is to be feared most of them were devoured by the wolf of Hell. As a hiding place for his guilty, condemned spirit, he sought Infidel associations and was soon found among Atheistical contemners of God, and his holy book. He strove and succeeded in winning his wife's mind to his ruinous principles. In 1811, one of his daughters was snatched from earth by death. Some time after, his oldest daughter with his full consent was married to a confirmed Atheist, soon after his oldest son deserted home and it is to be feared that he died without hope in Christ. A few years rolled on, and the oldest daughter and her husband both died, resting upon the soul palsying principles in which they lived—no God—no hereafter. Their children without exception, imbibed the principles inculcated. But to the original family. The second daughter married an irreligious young man, and after a few years moved to Michigan, where she died. His second son married a vain, wicked young woman and removed also to Michigan and he too soon died; but how he died I know not, but alas! from the tenor of his life I fear for him. The youngest son lived an irreligious life up to the age of 22 or 3 and then died some where about Zanesville among his relations, but how I know not, I think it was in 1830 or 31. The old man died as he lived giving no admonition to his family to flee the wrath to come. But as is customary the old lady, and the now only surviving member of his family, invited our worthy brother Zachariah Ragan to attend the funeral, and by him I think was put up the first vocal prayer ever offered to God in the house in which he died. Br. R. improved the occasion in a warm, solemn, pathetic and sublime address to the mourners and all present. I hope the seed then sown by him may produce fruit for the first resurrection. In '33 or 4 the old lady died, but in what state of mind I do not know; but I exceedingly fear. There is but one of the family living, and in a conversation with her on the subject of religion sometime ago I found as to experimental godliness, active faith in Christ, she had but vague, or faint notions. Oh that Christ may be a quickening spirit to the saving of her soul alive. Now I contend if the judgement of God is not promptly executed in that they are all lost, they are with one exception cut off from the earth, prematurely. And I firmly believe that, not a root of him remains in the spiritual vineyard of the Lord on the face of the earth. Oh awful God; shall thy retributive justice be meeted out upon this wicked man and his family as upon Achan of old, Josh. 7th ch. 19–26, and as Eli, 1st Samuel 2nd, ch. 27–33rd verses? Oh that the reader may reflect, and profit by the above warning. I cannot forbear to mention the epitaph engraved on his tomb stone by a drunken sculptor and read at first to me with perfect indifference by him, while under the baleful influence of whiskey, thus:

"Reader, behold as you pass by,
As you are now, so once was I;
As I am now so you must be,—
Prepare for death, and follow me."

MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCE.

LETTER FROM MR. COAN, JULY 23, 1846.

State of the Church—Obstacles—Benevolence.

My recent tours have been very pleasant. The goodness of the Lord is boundless towards this people; and we can say with the heart, that "his mercy endureth forever." New cases of defection in the church have been very rare for some time past, and peace and harmony prevail. Many of the leading Christians at the out-stations are active and efficient in the work of the Lord, and the Spirit rains blessings on many parts of the field, spreading a verdant loveliness where all was once barrenness and desolation. Every year brings increasing evidence that Christ has a people here, purchased with his own blood, and called by his Spirit out of darkness into light. Every year also develops the character of the seed which fell by the way-side, on stony places, and among thorns. Hundreds who once practiced all iniquity with greediness, have led, since their conversion in the great out-pouring of the Spirit, quiet, peaceable and unimpeachable lives; and they are still my joy and my crown. "The Lord has done great things for us."

But the flock is sorely tried. The devil still "goes about as a roaring lion;" or he exhibits himself in the form of an enchanting serpent, or of "an angel of light." The rapid increase of ships, seamen and foreign residents, (more than one hundred and twenty vessels having visited Hilo during the twelve months past,) greatly enhances the temptations of the people; for while it may be said to the praise of not few foreign visiters that their conduct is upright and honorable, yet it is painfully true of multitudes that they do what they can to break down the Sabbath, to overturn morality and good order, and to introduce gambling, intemperance and impurity, and thus to beguile, pollute and ruin our youth. My heaviest trials and most painful apprehensions now arise from this quarter. As our rulers find that their foreign relations, and the control of aggressive foreigners, costs more treasure and time and apprehensive anxiety than all their other duties combined; so it is getting to be with us pastors in relation to the guidance of our flocks in spiritual things. Oh, what need there is of a mighty work of the Lord among seamen!

The people in all parts of this field are doing something to sustain and improve their numerous houses of worship, in the way of rebuilding, repairing, furnishing seats, mats, plain pulpits, communion furniture, &c. They also contribute for benevolent objects, in labor, cloth, tapas, fish, lumber, produce, cash, &c., from four to six hundred dollars annually. Much of their labor and produce avail little or nothing, however, because of their distance from market. Still, I encourage them to continue these efforts, for the sake of the good it does them, by reminding them of their obligations, and by cultivating and maturing habits of active benevolence. A small part of their gifts is used by the pastor; a larger part goes to the support of Mrs. Coan's female boarding school; another portion is used to sustain native helpers; and still another is distributed among the poor, &c. Fifty dollars contributed at the station in money, during the past year, has been given to the Hawaiian Bible Society. I have not yet urged the people to support me, as most of them are extremely poor, and as there are many objects of benevolence constantly before them. Perhaps the thing will come along at the proper time; but I do not wish to press it just now.

Congregations—Native Assistants—Schools.

We have a good congregation at the station, ranging from five hundred to two thousand, according to weather and other circumstaces. The immediate and tangible cause of so great a variation are, as you know, the great rains, and the swollen rivers of Hilo. In pleasant weather our congregation is full and quite uniform. The proportion of church going people is, I think, as great in Hilo and Puna as in any part of the Islands, and perhaps as in any part of the world. Our worshipping assemblies on the Sabbath are twenty-five in number: and at conference and week-day meetings, they are double that number.

My native helpers are still of great service to me. Indeed I could not sustain the church and the congregations without them. Many of them are steadfast in the work of the Lord, and are growing in knowledge and grace; though they are still too deficient in knowledge and discretion, as well as patience and stability of character, to render it safe to invest them with all the responsibilities of pastors, and to leave them without supervision and control. It is my plan to throw responsibility upon them just as fast as they are able to bear it; and to watch with deep interest the use made of the trust committed to them. Being found faithful in the exercise of a little power, they are invested with more; according to a principle recognized in the Bible, and approved by experience and good sense. "He that is faithful in the least is faithful also in much."

The Sabbath schools under Mr. Coan's supervision are kept up much as heretofore. The one at the station is conducted by him personally, and it appears to be large and prosperous, embracing from four to five hundred children.

The common schools throughout this field are doing as well as could be expected; perhaps they were never in a more healthy state. All the children of a suitable age are enrolled, and nearly all attend school, with more or less regularity. The advanced children are passing out of the schools to assume the responsibilities of manhood; and the younger ones are coming in to fill their places; so that the number is kept good, and a great number are annually taught to read, write, &c. We have more than fifty schools in all, with more than twenty-five hundred scholars. All these, we trust, will have received a plain common school education before they shall have left the schools and their places have been filled by another generation. Our teachers have not been well paid, but they have not "struck." They have received something from the government, and something also from parents and pupils. Yet some of them have seen days of hunger and of want, but none of them have forsaken their work for this cause.

The annexed table presents the statistics of the church under Mr. Coan's care from May 1st, 1844, to May 1st, 1846, when the last annual meeting was held.

Mr. Coan has recently taken the census of Hilo and Puna. He finds the population of the former to be 6,473, of the latter 3,856, showing a decrease in five years of 719. The whole of this decrease is in Puna, and it is the joint effect of mortality and removal. Hilo has suffered no dimimution, not because the births equal the deaths, but because the influx of persons from other places has made good the deficiency.

Col. John Riddle.

A visit, a few days since, to Col. John Riddle, on the Hamilton road, beyond our northwestern suburbs, has made to me the discovery, in his person, of that mysterious and ubiquitous individual, the oldest inhabitant. Col. R. is such, as regards Cincinnati, in probably a double sense, being almost eighty-six years of age, and having resided here more than the last fifty-six years of his life.

Colonel Riddle, as was the case of most of the orignial settlers of Cincinnati, is a native of New Jersey, where he was born, December 14th, 1761. He entered the revolutionary service in April, '78, at Elizabethtown, in that State, being called out on a tour of duty for six weeks. At the expiration of this engagement, he again obeyed the call of his country in June ensuing, being the period when the British retired from Philadelphia, and passed through New Jersey to Sandy Hook. His narrative from this point in his history, I will give in his own words.

[Here omitting incidents of the revolution, we take the following account of his settlement at Cincinnati, and subsequent incidents. Ed. W. R.]

Peace being again made in 1782, I returned home, following the business of blacksmithing until 1793, when I concluded to go to the West, and sold out in the spring of that year, and about the close of October, 1790, landed at what is now Cincinnati; nearly the entire scite of the present city being in woods. I resumed my business here, and being the only blacksmith in the place, found plenty of work. Houses, or rather cabins, were scarce, as scarce then as they are now for new-comers, and I had to board and lodge in the same house with Captain Robert Benham, on Front, east of Dr. Sellman's, the same house which was pulled down only a few days since. Some months after I bought out Scott Traverse. He owned the lot on which Springer & Whiteman's, and Shoenbergers' fine warehouses are now built, on which he had put up a block-house. For his improvements and one half of the lot I gave him twenty-five pounds, or sixty-six dollars sixty-seven cents. At that period, poor as the building was it was considered of more value than the lot. He laughed at me afterwards for not insisting on the whole lot, which he said he would have given me in for the same price, if I had insisted on it.

I sold the lot afterwards to Samuel Stitt, for twelve hundred dollars. He has since leased it on a perpetual ground rent for the same value in money; that is, he gets as a rent the same sum every year which it cost him as purchase money from me.

In the spring of 1791, Wm. Harris, who was my wife's father, went in company with me to clear ground for a corn field. It comprehended in its bounds the ground where now stands Byington's Rolling Mill, on Plum street, south of the corporation line. We had a small dog with us. One day, the 21st of May, we had been to work as usual, and had sat down to rest at the foot of a large tree, when, hearing a slight rustling through the spice-wood bushes, I told Harris there were Indians at hand. He laughed at the idea. I hissed the dog on, who bounded into the bushes, barking at a great rate, and returned in a short time with his tail and ears down and manifesting other symptoms of fear. We then sprung up and made a circuit through the bushes so as to get between the Indians, if there were such there, and the town. In this way we had just regained the path, several rods below where we were, when we heard them crossing it near the spot we had left. We hurried into Cincinnati as fast as possible, and found soon after that Benjamin Van Cleve had been shot at, and Joseph Cutter, who was at work with him, clearing an out-lot, captured and carried off by the Indians. Cutter was never more heard of. The lot they were working in, cornered with mine, near a spot in the Miami Canal, which is crossed by a high bridge opposite Mason street. Pursuit was made by the citizens on the run, after the Indians, until dusk, when it was given up. The next day it was discovered that they had encamped two miles farther out. The trace was followed for some hours, but finally given up. Van Cleve returned in about ten days to his clearing; with two others, when the Indians again pursued them. The two strangers escaped, but Van Cleve who had passed them in the race and had gained nearly a quarter of a mile on them was intercepted at a fallen tree top by an Indian, who sprung on him from behind the ambuscade. Van Cleve was seen to throw the savage, and the Indian to plunge a knife twice or thrice into the side of his antagonist, but perceiving the approach of the whites hastily stript off the scalp and made his escape to his party in the rear. When the two fugitives got up, Van Cleve was entirely lifeless.

The same day a party from the garrison, consisting of Sergeant Hahn, a corporal, and a young man who lived in Colrain, started to Dunlap's station on the Miami. They were engaged driving a cow out to that post, and had imprudently fastened a bell to her neck. On his way the Sergeant called on me and paid me three dollars on account of a blacksmithing bill he owed for some time. I said, "You had better pay me more: the Indians will get the rest." "Never fear," was his careless reply. In the course of two hours afterwards he had a bullet put through him, his scalp taken, and the residue of his money carried off.

At a later date I was put in command of the militia assembled at Columbia and Cincinnati to arrest Burr and his associates. The boat with Mrs. Blennerhassett on board landed at Columbia. Several young men were in company, of whom I recollect now only william Robinson, jr., Morgan Neville, and one of the Wilkins', all of Pittsburg. I detained the boat for examination, and instituted a rigid scrutiny; in the course of which I lighted on several tierces which sounded hollow on being struck. I suspected they contained powder, and enquired the contents, young Wilkins promptly answered "whisky." I had my own opinion, but deferred further examintion until daylight, as the darkness in the boat at the late hour it then was required lights, and I was afraid to use a candle among combustibles. I said, therefore they would bd overhauled at Cincinnati, and left the boat in charge of Matthew Nimmo, with strict orders not to let her, on any account, pass Cincinnati, until I got down to that place in the morning. When I reached Cincinnati early next day, I found the boat gone, Nimmo alleging that Col. Stanley and himself did not think it worth while to detain the party, as the Col. had vouched to him that they were of the first families in Pittsburgh. Mrs. B. was a very pretty woman, just the very one to persuade these men out of their duty. No doubt the wine and brandy on board did their share. I had stationed a guard on the boat, but Nimmo had taken the responsibility of letting the boat go, to my great mortification and displeasure."

Col. Riddle has resided on the same spot for the last 54 years, has sold off small portions of his farm as building lots, some at as high a rate as one thousand dollars per acre, and if he lives a few years longer will doubtless behold streets all around him, and ground selling by the foot front, at ten times the price per foot which it cost him by the acre! Such is Cincinnati and its environs.

The Colonel is a man of great bodily vigor for an octogenarian, and his mental faculties are yet unimpaired. He is the last cotemporary of Symmes, Denman, Ludlow, McMillen, Williams, and others, the early settlers of Cincinnati.

"Is the Common use of Tobacco sinful?"

NO. II.

Brother Bird:—My second argument to establish the affirmative of this question is: It involves an unnecessary expense. Our benevolent Creator has constituted us with certain natural wants; the proper supply of which promotes the highest degree of physical enjoyment.—These are food, drink, clothing and shelter, and it is impossible for us to subsist without their supply. As God is the author of these, it is altogether lawful for an individual to spend his labor and substance in supplying them: but he has no right to create artificial wants, and then spend his substance in their gratification. Nature will yield to circumstances to a very considerable extent, and by a vigorous and persevering war upon her powers and privileges, artificial wants, such as the desire for tobacca, are created.—The author of our being has thus organized us in order to secure our comfort under all circumstances in which we may be necessarily placed; and now, for us to make needless draws upon this principle, (which has been given us in mercy,) in creating unnatural wants is surely provoking to God.

That the use of tobacco, in any of its forms, adds nothing to the happiness of him that uses it is proven from the experience of hundreds who have abandoned it entirely. They even tell us that they enjoy themselves incomparably better, both physically and mentally, since they have become free from its influence. This being true, the use of tobacco involves a worse than useless expense—the gratification of any desire that is essential to our nature as human beings, is not unnecessary; but the gratification of desire not essential to our nature, is unnecessary and therefore sinful.

Again, if we have gold and silver, much or little, that we have come honestly into the possession of, we as certainly received it from God as though he had given it to us in a check from Heaven, and he gave it for a specific purpose, and that specific purpose is our happiness, and the happiness of our fellow beings. Out of the money or means that God gives us, we have a right to supply all our own natural wants in the first place, and then we are bound to appropriate the remainder to the welfare of others. We are not the exclusive owners of the means in our hands—it all belongs to the Lord, and we are his stewards, and he will assuredly call us to an account for the use we make of his goods.—And I imagine I hear him inquire of the tobacco consumer, "could you not have laid my money out to a better purpose than for tobacco?" Where is the man who uses the article who could not plead guilty? If the money could be spent more to the glory of God, then it is a sin to spend it in that way. But one says, "I know it is a bad practice, and if I had not gotten into the habit, I never would use it, but I have been so long accustomed to it I can't quit it now." Suppose a man should make the same excuse for lying, "I know it is a bad practice, but I have been so long accustomed to it I can't quit it now." The length of time a man has been sinning against God, is no reason why he should continue to do so, but a strong reason why he should quit immediately. Another says, "all I spend for tobacco does not amount to much." How much do you spend yearly? We will suppose that tobacco consumers spend one dollar each annually, and I think this a reasonable calculation. Now let us see how much the members of our church spend annually for tobacco. There are about one hundred thousand members. I will suppose that one-third of them use it: this calculation shows that the Cumberland Presbyterian church alone, spends the astonishing sum of thirty-three thousand three hundred and thirty-three dollars and thirty-three and one-third cents annually!! What a sum would this make in ten years! And what a sum for a christian people to waste—a waste worse than if it had been thrown into the sea. Well might we be accused to our Lord of having wasted his goods.—And well might he say, "ye have robbed me, even this whole people." Whilst we are thus acting, millions are perishing for the bread of life, and we are not able to send the gospel to them! If all the members of the christian church would wash their hands and their mouths from this sin, and contribute the same amount annually to the cause of Christ, that they have been in the habit of sacrificing to this tobacco-god, they might in the course of ten years send the bible, school teachers, and missionaries to all the destitute portions of this globe. Perhaps one is ready to say, "if we had the means we have not the men." I answer there are hundreds of men in the churches who are longing to go and preach Christ to dying sinners, if they had the literary qualfications; but they have not the necessary education, neither have they means to get it—hundreds more are trying to preach who are not half qualfied from a want of means, and hundreds more who are qualified and who went forth and preached successfully for a time, have been starved from the field and driven to some secular employment for a subsistence, and yet hundreds of others, who are not preaching half as much nor half as good as they would do if they had competent support. If all these were qualified and well sustained, and then multitudes of others go into the work, that would do it if they were properly encouraged, I know not how soon the wilderness would blossom as the rose. But Zion mourns, and heathens perish while God's stewards are wasting millions of his money in sacrificing at the shrine of tobacco. There are many congregations in our church that can only support a pastor half his time, when if they would quit tobacco, and add the amount, they have heretofore paid for it, to their subscriptions, they could sustain him all the time and be none the worse off, but a great deal better. We need not think of sending the gospel to the heathens successfully until we purify ourselves from our own idols—we are acting too much the heathen at home. And, alas! we, ministers, countenance and encourage these enormous sins by our wretched and miserable examples. It is no marvel that tobacco worshiping preachers should be starved from the gospel field—as long as they indulge their depraved appetites they may expect their people to do the same. Let us pray God to purify the church and especially the "sons of Levi" from the stain and sin of tobacco.

JAS. H. D. HENDERSON.

Infatuation of Gaming.

A Mr. Potter, in the reign of Queen Anne, possessed one of the best estates in the county of Northumberland; the fee of which, in less than twelve months, he lost at hazzard.

The last night of his career, when he had just perfected the wicked work, and was just stepping down stairs to throw himself into his carriage, which waited at the door of a well-known house, he suddenly went back into the room where his friends were assembled, and insisted that the person he had been playing with, should give him one chance of recovery, or fight with him; his rational proposition was this: that his carriage, the trinkets and loose money in his pockets, his town house, plate and furniture, should be valued in a lump, at a certain sum, and be thrown for at a single cast; no persuasion could prevail on him to depart from his purpose; he threw and lost. He conducted the winner to the door, told his coachman that was his master, and heroically marched forth, without house, home, or any creditable source of support.

He retired to an obscure lodging in a cheap part of the town, subsisting partially on charity, sometimes acting as the substitute of a marker at a billiard table, and occasionally as helper at a livery stable.

In this miserable condition, with nakedness and famine staring him in the face, exposed to the taunts and insults of those whom he had once supported, he was recognized by an old friend, who gave him ten guineas to purchase necessaries.

He expended five in procuring decent apparel, with the remaining five, he repaired to a common gaming house, and increased them to fifty; he then adjourned to White's, sat down with his former associates, and won twenty thousand pounds. Returning next night, he lost it all, and after existing many years in abject and sordid penury, died a ragged beggar, at a penny lodging-house in St. Giles.

Mohammedan Drunkards.—The following punishment of drunkenness was lately inflicted by the populace of Constantinople. An unfortunate Mussulman, who under the influence of wine, had lost the perpendicular, was tied upon a lame mule, with his head, upon which was placed a round European hat, towards the tail of the animal, and behind was tied a dog, back to back. After having paraded him through the streets stopping at every fountain to sprinkle him with mud and water, he was taken by the populace to the banks of the Bosphorus, and plunged into the water with his innocent companions. The hair on the back of the dog was cut in the form of a cross, and the head of the Mussulman was shaved with the same razor. He was subsequently plunged into the Bosphorus, and his purification was considered complete.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Evansville, Circuit, May 6, 1847.

Bro. Bassett: Having to write on business, permit to say to our worthy President, Brother Brown, that we still enjoy peace and a share of prosperity on Evansville Circuit. Our third quarterly meeting has just closed, which was held at the White Oak meeting house, Barbour Co., Va. The meeting lasted three days, the fruit of which I trust will yet be seen in days to come.—Congregations were good considering the rain that fell on Saturday night and Sabbath, and the opposition through which M. Protestants have ever had to wind their way, at this appointment. (For truly White Oak is one of those hard places.) Our highly esteemed Brother John Clark, was with us, and with his usual, if not more than usual zeal, and in his familiar and pointed manner of preaching labored faithfully for the promotion of our Redeemer's cause. May the Lord abundantly reward him in this as well as the world to come.

There is truly a kind hearted people on this circuit, and in this (White Oak) neighborhood in which I have resided for near two years, we have a small society of unshaken Protestants, among whom the heralds of free grace and mutual rights may always find a home. May the Lord keep them faithful, and finally house them with all the redeemed in heaven.

Yours, A. J. WAREN.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

From the President of Muskingum Conference.

Wellsburg Brook Co. Va. May 18, 1847.

Br. Bassett: Please insert in the 'Recorder,' the following list of appointments.

2nd	"	"	Burton	"
3rd	"	"	Farmington	"
4th	"	"	Vienna	"
5th	"	"	Youngstown	St.

Superintendents of the foregoing fields of labor will do me much favor by giving me prompt notice of the place of my meeting on each charge.

Sickness hindered me so long, that I shall not be able to visit each circuit, much less devote a Sunday to each; Brs. Jack and Bowman, will therefore please study the convenience of all concerned, in fixing upon the place of my meeting for their respective charges.

Through the mercy of God, I was enabled to meet all the appointments as they stood published in my last list: i. e. Otsego, Lancaster, Zanesville, Newark, Delaware, Frederick, Licking, Mt. Zion, Coshocton, and Pleasant Hill. On each of these, I met something to encourage me, and very little of a discouraging nature upon any of them. While upon the Zanesville circuit, I was under the influence of chill and fever, so that I was not able to preach but twice; kind friends, who ministered to me, in my affliction, at Brownsville, as also, upon other circuits, are gratefully remembered. The severest attack I had, in said tour was while upon the Coshocton circuit, but am glad to have it to say that upon leaving said circuit chill and fever left me, and I have not since heard of it, and hope I never may. Probably the kind wishes of Brs. Ferguson, Case and Hamilton detained it. I would much regret to learn that it is found about the person of either of these kind brethren.

I was at Steubenville upon last Sunday, where I had the pleasure of meeting and hearing Br. Reeves of Pittsburgh St. who was aiding Br. Andrew at his quarterly meeting.

I am now at Wellsburg, waiting for a boat for Portsmouth, and in pretty good health, for which blessing (of health) I feel thankful to the parent of all mercies. In great haste,

GEO. CLANCY.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Kalida Circuit, May 13, 1847.

Bro. Bassett: I would inform my brethren through the Recorder, that we are still trying to live on this Circuit. And although we cannot boast of numbers, like some of our brethren can, yet our Circuit seems on the advance, and we have received 16 or 17 members, and have organized one new class. O, may the good Lord revive us more abundantly! Our third quarterly meeting will be held on the 12th and 13th of June, at Brother Dewees's, on Taway creek.—We respectfully invite Brothers Besse, L. Ensminger, and G. M. Hunt. Come over, brethren, and help us, and let us pray for more religion, and more unity in the church, and that all agitating questions may be so disposed of as not to destroy christian feeling nor the prosperity of the church of Christ. Yours.

J. L. BORTON.

ONONDAGA DISTRICT.

Vanburen, Onondaga, N. Y., May 11, '47.

Dear Brother: The interest of Zion upon Lysander Circuit is rising. My beloved Brother I. H. Hogan's preaching is attended with the power of God. Truly he is one of the sons of thunder. Of all the various occupations in which man can be engaged, there is none of so much interest to him as the work of saving souls.—May God bless him and make him a polished shaft of his quiver in the church and an honor to the world. I am travelling as the colleague of Brother Hogan. Several souls have been happily converted to God. Sinners are enquiring for the old paths, which is the good way. The Saints of God are shouting aloud for joy. We trust in God's name we shall soon see a glorious harvest. Our watchword is, onward; our motto, holiness to the Lord, and heaven our desired home. Hallelujah to God in Christ forever.—Amen. Yours, HAMILTON BROWN.

NORTH ILLINOIS DISTRICT.

Jacksongrove, Ill., May 12, 1847.

Bro. Bassett: I was sent by our President, to what is called the Mason-Mission, some time in February. I found one small class, consisting of about ten or twelve members—some alive. (spiritually,) and some dead; some steadfast,—others, in their hearts turning back into Egypt: but I find as our principles are better understood, they are better received. I have commenced to preach, at Morris, the County seat of Grundy co.: a place devoted to wickedness, and having no regular preaching except Catholic. They seem to manifest an increasing interest. I have also explored the country, north-east, and find an industrious, and intelligent people, but mostly ignorant of us as a church, with the exceptions of now and then one, who has left our societies in the east, some of whom have left their religion also; others united with other societies, and a few still waiting for the M. P's. to come along, and all of them and many others wishing for regular preaching by our ministers. We only need an efficient and godly ministry, to prosper here.—But we have obstacles to overcome, which will cost much self-denying labor. In the first place, those that favor us, are mostly poor men, that came to the West to find a home, and in buying land, and improving it, are often involved: and through exposure on the road, and bad houses here, and a change of climate and water; frequently get sick, lose their time, and a large doctor's bill accrues, which makes them unable to assist the preacher much. And again they are so scattering, he must necessarily travel over a large territory, and be absent a great deal from his family, which together with other causes, well-known to itinerants, operate against us.—The effect appears to be, that a man will travel a few years, and through inability perhaps, in both person and property, locate at the very time when he begins to have experience and influence.—Then the field will again be filled by the young and inexperienced like myself. Who can find out a remedy? I do feel that this is an important point, and it is important that right principles be spread through this prosperous country. Will not some of our Brethren that are able to stand hardships and willing to live a self-denying life for the sake of the Gospel and its Founder come over and help us? The fields are already white unto the harvest. Let us pray, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, to send forth more laborers.

Yours in Christ,

S. DILLEY.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO:

THURSDAY MORNING, MAY 27, 1847.

Our Receipts this week, are less than they have been any week of the present volume. Heretofore, they have been, for the most part encouraging.

We are still very grateful to those agents and subscribers who have been prompt to remember us. And we should be very glad just now to hear from others who have been holding back. We stand in need of all that is due us, for the paper, for pamphlets, or for books.

To Correspondents.—Our worthy friend G. S. W. will oblige the printer by not crowding his lines so close together. The writer who sends us an article against Millerism, is informed that its publication is declined because of the abusive expressions he uses towards Mr. Miller and his adherents. Correspondents can use kind words, but when they would condescend to words or epithets abusive of any one, we trust they will seek some other vehicle than the Western Recorder.

A Jubilee.—Just as our paper was going to press, we received a private letter from an old friend, one of the most aged ministers of the Ohio Conference, from which we give the extract below. It is too good to be kept back another week. He thus writes after a successful experiment of nearly 10 months. The testimony is worth much, and we trust will have influence with many. Read it—Read it.

"I will now close by requesting you to set my name on your anti-tobacco pledge. I do not mean that you are to publish my name, on the subject. I have made use of the filthy poisonous weed, for forty-nine years, and I consider, that from the first day of last August, I am in the year of Jubilee, the fiftieth year, a year of release from a troublesome filthy practice, and although I was advised by a physician, to use it for my health, and believe it was, a good medicine for a while, but finally an injury; for my health is better, now than it was before, & I am, perhaps eight or ten pounds, heavier. You may give this if you see proper without my name, in your paper, let no one say they cannot quit tobacco.

Yours as ever."

Rev. A. M'Caine.—We have ever held in high respect this venerable man, though differing from him in sentiment essentially, upon some points. And it has ever been our pleasure to honor his gray hairs. We have published without note, or comment, or abridgement the controversy between him and Rev. Dr. Reese, on the General Conf. resolution. We have not, that we know of, interfered directly or impliedly with the points of controversy between those brethren. We have held that they were competent, each to manage his own cause. And were they disposed to pursue the subject further, our columns would be at their service. We have however received from Br. M'Caine, for publication, a short article, in which he says: "Nor need I trouble you or the public, with any further reasons for my rejecting his (Dr. R's.) nostrums, as my former reasons are well understood by an intelligent community." He then gives his reason why he "shall hold no (further) controversy with him," (Dr. Reese.) But in doing this, he thinks necessary to use terms of such extraordinary mildness, we are pained to say, that we cannot consistently publish his article, short though it be. Our old friend will therefore excuse us, as we have perhaps given sufficiently above the substance of what he intended. And he is assured, that we could have declined an article with less reluctance, coming from almost any other source.

Grave of Benjamin Abbot.—A writer in the Christian Advocate and Journal, giving an account of the recent session of the New Jersey Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at Salem, New Jersey, speaks of visiting in that place, the graves of two fathers of the Methodist Connection, Benjamin Abbot and Thomas Ware. He says:

"For some time it was not known where father Abbot was buried. Mr. Garrettson, anxious to have a tomb-stone erected over his remains, sent a committee of three, consisting of Noah Levings, Manning Force, and some other brother, to ascertain the last earthly resting place of the remains of Abbot. They found it difficult to ascertain the precise spot where he was buried, until they met with an old colored man who was acquainted with him, and knew when and where his body was laid in the grave. The way he recollected was most singular. He considered him such a holy man, that he used to go and kneel, and pray there, supposing that Heaven would hear and answer him sooner if his prayer was offered near the grave of so good a man. This he continued to do until he went there to pray, on a certain occasion, when he heard a voice, saying "Why seek ye the living among the dead?" All this made such a powerful impression upon him that he could not forget the place where the remains of the venerable Abbot were sleeping, untilt he 'Lord himself shall descend with a shout, and the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God.'"

That Weed.—As we wish our paper to be as thoroughly and extensively useful as possible, we cannot refrain from giving some attention to one of the most needful and important reforms of the present day; i. e., the Anti-tobacco movement.—Our indulgent readers will therefore have patience with us for re-publishing a short series of articles from the Cumberland Presbyterian, and some other matters we may have upon the same subject. It is high time that a check was put to the great evil referred to. And first of all, Christians should attend to the 'cleansing of the sanctuary.' The filthy practice should at once be removed from the house of God. We have just seen a statement in the Cincinnati Protestant, from which it appears that on the convening of the Presbyterian General Assembly in that city last week, some difficulty was experienced in procuring the use of a church for holding the sessions of the Assembly. The Trustees of the Second Church, it is stated, manifested considerable reluctance in consenting to have their house occupied by that body, from a fear that it would get besmeared with tobacco spittle! It is stated also that a distinguished physician of the city, offered to entertain four members during the session, provided that number could be found who did not use tobacco! How painful that the most respectable ecclesiastical bodies, composed, too, perhaps chiefly (half, at least,) of gospel ministers, should suffer such a reproach. But it is by no means General Assemblies alone, nor the Presbyterian denomination in particular that are implicated. The evil lies, in no less degree, at the door of those of other orders. Methodist Conferences could compete, we fear, with any General Assembly in this strange disregard for decorum in the house of God. We are glad, however, that a reform movement finds favor in several of the Western Conferences of the Methodist Protestant Church. And we have just met with a resolution adopted by the New York Annual Conference, M. P. C., at its recent session, which pleases us much. It is as follows:

"Resolved, That we recommend that the Ministers of this Annual Conference refrain from the use of tobacco in all its forms; especially when in the house of worship."

Keep the ball moving.

Sermons by Rev. Thomas Potter.—We directed attention last week, to the Prospectus of Br. Potter, for publishing a series of Volumes of Sermons. It will be seen in our advertising columns. The Author desires us to say that ministers are requested to obtain subscribers, and will receive a copy gratis for every five subscribers secured by them. It is due to him, in this enterprise, that we add what he has not requested us to say, that the Author is a scholar as well as preacher, and that we are satisfied that the sermons, if published, will be found instructive as well as useful. And as his method of discussion is interesting, and as he avoids controversial topics, we doubt not that the sermons, if published, will be read.

By the way, we have perused with pleasure and profit, a Funeral Sermon by Brother Potter, on the death of Elijah Ball, Jr., intended perhaps as a sample. A copy is to be sent gratis by the author to all the preachers, whose address has been published in our paper. The sermon (a pamphlet.) is for sale at 12½ cents per copy. The same allowance to ministers as on the proposed volumes.

☞ The Western Christian Advocate announces the death, on the 4th instant, at Madison, Ia., of James H. Cowden, formerly post-master of that place. He was in the 49th year of his age, and for eight years past, a faithful member of the M. E. Church.

Lucifer Matches—Sad Warning.—A little daughter of Rev. Mr. Boynton, minister of the Sixth Street Congregational Church in Cincinnati, was experimenting with matches a few mornings ago. She set fire to her clothing, and was so dreadfully burnt, (says the Cincinnati Protestant) that she died a day or two after. The child was but twenty months old. This shocking circumstance should be an effectual warning to parents, to house keepers, store keepers, shop keepers, and office keepers. Lucifer matches are a great convenience, but they are not safe in the care of many grown persons, much less in the hands of children.

Returned.—We learn that the U. S. Sloop of War, Jamestown, which went out with a cargo of provisions for Ireland, and was greeted there with such demonstrations of joy and gratitude, has safely returned. She left Cork, April 22d, and arrived at Boston on the 15th instant, having had in every respect a prosperous trip.

The Season North.—The Editor of the True Wesleyan informs us in his last paper that he has just returned from a tour in Northern N. York and Vermont, in attending the session of the Champlain Conference. He states that the season in the north is very backward. On the 1st of May, the snow was two feet deep in the woods in the vicinity of Lake Champlain. He says that when he left Weybridge, Vt., on the 13th instant, most of the higher mountains were covered with snow, and appeared as white as though it were midwinter. The snow was however then fast melting away.

Fatal Accident.—The last number of the Methodist Protestant, reports the death of Richard A. Newman, at Hillsborough, Caroline county, Md. He was killed by a horse falling upon him. He was a zealous member of the M. P. Church.

☞ By the latest Mexican intelligence, it appears that Cassius M. Clay, Borland and Gaines, are still in close confinement in the city of Mexico. This is singular, since so many Mexicans have been released on parole.

The Discussion on Gambling.—We learn by the Saturday Courier, that the debate between Messrs Green and Freeman in Philadelphia, closed on Saturday week. The result must have been adverse to the vice, seeing Mr. Freeman at the conclusion, announced that on Wednesday evening he would deliver a lecture in which he would offer arguments against the vice of gaming.

Godey's Lady's Book.—The June number is just received, finely embellished as usual. The engravings are, a rich view of Girard College for Orphans, at Philadelphia. Portrait of Stephen Girard, and a lithographed statue of the same gentleman, Costumes of Mexican Ladies, Model Cottages, Original Music, and Illustrations of Ladies' Work. A very interesting biographical sketch of Girard, is the leading article of this number. We design copying it, for the entertainment of our readers. The "Book" has now completed its thirty-fourth volume. L. A. Godey, Publisher, Philadelphia.

The Reprints.—By politeness of the same publisher we have a copy of each of his Reprints for May, Blackwood's Ladies' Magazine, and the London World of Fashion. These can both be had for $1,50. Or any subscriber for the Lady's Book, paying in advance $3, can receive also a copy of either of the Reprints.

Columbian Magazine.—The number for June, of this publication, has reached us in good time, and completes the seventh volume. The engravings of the Columbian, would be 'hard to beat.' One in this number is a fine mezzotint, representing a Missionary amongst a group of Indians. Another is a beautiful view of the Narrows, from Staten Island. We see that amongst other talented writers, Fanny Forrester, though gone to Burmah, still writes for the Columbian. She has a beautiful poem, of some length, in the June number, respecting Peter's denial of his Lord. Messrs Ormsby and Hackett, N. York, are publishers of the Columbian Magazine. $3, per year.

Illustrated Monthly Sun, (N. Y.) for July. We have received from the publishers this great pictorial in advance for the Independence holiday. It contains forty-six engravings. Price, single copy, only 12½ cents. Ten copies for $1. M. Y. Beach & Sons, publishers, N. Y.—The "Illustrated," is subject to newspaper postage only.

The Anglo Saxon, the Phonotypic newspaper, of which we have heretofore spoken, has been removed from Boston to New York. The publishers, Messrs. Andrews and Boyle, have permanently established themselves in the Sun Buildings, and seem to be greatly encouraged in their enterprise. They desire all orders, subscriptions, and exchanges to be addressed accordingly.

Reception of the Jamestown.

Very interesting and lengthy accounts are published, of the reception of the Relief ship, Jamestown, on its arrival at Cork, Ire., with a cargo of provisions. The gratitude and joy expressed, could hardly be exceiled. We copy the following extracts:

"At 8 o'clock, Dr. Parke, surgeon of the vessel, landed at Cove, bearing despatches for the Lord Lieutenant, and Mr. Labouchere, where he delivered at the consultate, with directions to have them forwarded as speedily as possible. On the intimation of the vessel's arriving, being notified to Rear Admiral Sir H. Pigott, he despatched an officer to ascertain if any immediate assistance was required; and at half past one o'clock on Monday, her Majesty's steamer, "Avenger," went to tow her in. Her arrival called forth the liveliest sensations of joy and gratitude, and thousands flocked to see the noble ship.

A meeting of the Cork District Railway Committee was held on the 14th, when a requisition was promptly prepared, calling on the Mayor to summon a meeting of the citizens to devise the best means of welcoming and acknowledging the gift. "The bells of Shandon," and of the Cathedral were joyfully rung, and the Cove was splendidly illuminated on the evening of the 14th.

A deputation of the gentry of Cork, headed by Dr. Millet, J. P. visited the ship on the 12th, and presented Capt. Forbes with an address, to which he replied in suitable and touching terms. After some conversation the deputation withdrew, having previously invited Capt. Forbes and officers to a public dinner on the 15th inst., at Cove, which the gallant gentleman kindly accepted. The dinner was a very splendid affair, and attented by the most influential classes in and arcund Cove. Captain Forbes was the hero of the day, and acquitted himself in an admirable manner. On the 16th, a public meeting was held at the County Court House, Cork, for the purpose of returning thanks to Capt. Forbes and his patriotic crew for the sympathy they had shown towards the suffering population of Ireland,"

The Slave's Idea of Freedom.—The following eloquent passage is taken from a speech delivered in the Assembly of Virginia, by James Mc Dowell, the present Governor of that State:

"You may place the slave where you please; you may dry up to your utmost the fountains of his feeling, the springs of his thought—you may yoke him to your labor as an ox which liveth only to work, and worketh only to live: you may put him under any process, which, without destroying his value as a slave, will debase and crush him as a rational being—you may do this, and the idea that he was born to be free will survive it all. It is allied to his hope of immortality; it is the etherial part of his nature, which oppression cannot reach; it is a torch lit up in his soul by the hand of Deity, and never meant to be extinguished by the hand of man."

Death of Sir Walter Scott.—Died of dysentery, at the Cape of Good Hope, on his way home from Madras, Lieutenant Colonel Sir Walter Scott, Bart. of Abbotsford, eldest son of the author of "Waverley." Sir Walter was born in 1801, and was a lieutenant colonel in the 15th Huzzars. The baronetcy is extinct, but the Abbotsford property passes to Walter Scott Lockhart, a cornet in the 16th Lancers, the only son of the editor of the Quarterly Review, and the only grandson of the author of "Waverly." Sir Walter was married in 1825 to a Miss Jobson, of Lochere, Fife, who still survives.

Relief Item.—The brig Lima, Capt. Higgins, cleared at N. Orleans on the 9th inst. for Cork, with a relief cargo valued at $14,000. This is the second vessel despatched by the N. Orleans committee, exclusive of $15,000 remitted to our minister at London for the same object.

The three young China-men recently brought to this country from China by the Rev. Samuel R. Brown, are now at Monson Academy, Massachusetts, under the care of its talented principal, the Rev. O'Connell is sinking daily, the accounts which came to hand through the medium of the French papers show that his earthly career is drawing to a close.

The weather has of late undergone a favorable change, vegetation is making rapid progress. The accounts of the wheat and oat crops, are highly encouraging and even in regard to potatoes very favorable accounts are received.

FRANCE.

The news of Gen. Taylor's victories was received with much satisfaction. Great distress continues to exist where bread is exceedingly dear, and it is feared that during the month of May and June provisions of all kinds will be dearer than they have hitherto been. Vegetation is very backward owing to the cold during the last fortnight.

The bill relative to the establishment of regular steamers between Havre and New York, has received the Kings assent, and is now the law of the land.

Mr. Bancroft, the American Minister in England, had been on a visit to Paris. On Sunday, 14th ult., he was received by King Louis Philippe. Mr. Ingersoll, the U. S. A most diabolical plot to murder the Pope has been discovered. It was first found out by the French embassador. He revealed the name of the conspirators to the Pope. Their intention was to assassinate him while giving audience to one of them, who was appointed to kill him. A Capuchin priest presented himself for the audience of the Pope. His holiness requested his name. This he gave, but before being admitted, the Pope looked over the list of conspirators and found the name of the Capuchin. Then he immediately summoned Carbines, who on the Capuchin's entrance seized him, and on searching him found he had a brace of loaded pistols and a poisoned dagger about his person. The Capuchin was conveyed to prison. Many arrests took place. The plot is no doubt a concoction.

"There's Nae Strife Here."

A FACT.

In one of Scotland's northern towns, a family were seated round the breakfast table, waiting for "the father," and wondering why he was later than usual. At length he appeared; his step was heavy, and his brow cloudy. Having asked the blessing, he sat resting his head on his hand, wrapped in melancholy thought.

This unhappy looking man was one of the elders in a neighboring chapel: he possessed much energy and zeal, and it was hoped real piety; but alas! he was governed by a naturally bad temper, and too often forgot the words of the wise man—"He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city;" and in consequence of his unrestrained temper, the meetings for the chapel business were the constant scenes of anger and noisy strife.

The venerable minister being a true disciple of the Prince of Peace, deeply lamented his elder's unchristian spirit. On the previous day a meeting had been held, which was even more contentious than usual; for the elder had been particularly angry, and quarrelsome.

The good minister's heart sunk within him while he sat amidst this strife of tongues, and most thankful was he that evening to retire to a friend's house some miles from town, for the peace and quiet of the country is soothing to a wounded spirit.

It was on the following morning, that the elder came down to breakfast in so melancholy a mood. His wife, after looking anxiously at him for some minutes, said, "are you ill, my dear?"

"No."

"Then what has happened to make you look so sad?" He slowly raised himself up, and looking earnestly at her said, "I have had a most extraordinary dream."

The look of anxiety vanished from his wife's face as she said, with a smile, "Why you always laugh at my dreams." "Yes, but mine was so remarkable. I dreamt I was at the bottom of a steep hill, and when I looked up, I saw the gate of heaven at the top; it was bright and glorious, and many saints and angels stood there. Just as I reached the top of the hill, who should come out to meet me but our aged minister! and he held out his hand, crying, 'Come awa, Jond, come awa, there's nae strife here.' And now I cannot help thinking of the grief, my contentious spirit has given to the dear old man."

The husband and wife sat for some time in mournful silence, which was broken by the entrance of a servant, with a letter. The elder hastily read it, whilst an expression of the deepest grief overspread his face; then dropping it from his hand, he covered his face, as if to hide from those around him the bitter anguish of his soul.

His wife took up the letter which was from the minister's host—its contents were as follows:

"My dear ———, we had the great pleasure yesterday of receiving our dear minister, little thinking it would be the last time we should welcome him to what he called his peaceful retreat.

"When we sat talking together in the evening, he spoke with much grief of the chapel meeting. 'Indeed, he added, I am so tired of all this strife and turmoil, that I wish my dear Lord would take me home.'

"In the morning, as he did not come down to breakfast, I ran up and knocked at his door, but receiving no answer, I went down stairs again, thinking a longer rest than usual would do him good.

"After returning to his door once or twice, and hearing no sound, I went in. He was in bed, and apparently asleep. I spoke to him, but received no answer. Yet it was long, very long, ere we believed it to be the sleep of death; for a heavenly smile rested on his placid face, and his snowy locks lay unruffled on the pillow; but he slept in Jesus; for his dear Lord had taken him home."

* * * * * *

The elder never recovered this shock. He sorrowed for his friend, but still more for his sin. He gradually sunk, and in three weeks was laid by the side of his aged minister.

"O then the glory and the bliss,
When all that pained or seemed amiss
Shall melt with earth and sin away—
When saints beneath their Saviour's eye—
Filled with each other's company,
Shall spend in love the eternal day."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Steam Engines in Cincinnati.—There are one hundred and thirty-three Steam Engines in operation within the corporate limits of Cincinnati, and sixty-nine outside those limits, at no greater distance than five minutes walk. Total 202. These are divided among twenty five foundries and machine-shops, twenty planeing machines and saw mills, fourteen breweries, and seven rolling mills and iron works, five distilleries, four white lead factories, four bedstead and bureau factories, three cotton factories, two each, brick-yards, bakeries, wool-carding machines, printing presses, printing ink factories, type factories, flour mills, spice and drug mills, and lard oil factories, one each, chemical works, bagging factory, boiler yard, gun factory, carding machine shop, snuff factory, dyeing establishment, soda water and putty factory, scale factory, comb factory, flaxseed oil mill, turner and locksmith. Many of our important establishments are moved by water-power, and many more are literally manufactories, worked by the hand.

The list here given presents a proud array of manufacturing industry. I propose, in a few weeks, to remodel this table, so as to exhibit the aggregate of our manufacturing industry in all branches.—Cist's Advertiser.

Awful Explosion.

Disaster to the New Hampshire.

We are under obligations to our friend Briggs of the Yorktown, for further particulars in relation to the blowing up of the New Hampshire. This horrible accident occurred about 4 o'clock on Thursday morning week, 60 miles below Little Rock, killing sixteen persons. Among these were Capt. Allen's brother George, 1st Clerk; Mr. Couples, the 2nd Clerk; one cabin and one deck passenger. The remainder were of the crew.—The body of George Allen was found about 150 yards from the boat. The second Clerk was not seen after the explosion. One of the pilots was thrown into the river, but saved. The details are most horrible. Had the boat been filled with powder, she could not have been more effectually torn to pieces. She was literally shivered into fragments, not a portion of her being left but a remnant of the ladies' cabin. In the whole history of steamboat explosions, we have not heard of one that could compare with this in its destruction to the boat. Many of the killed appeared to have been torn to shreds, and on the tops of the trees, next morning, could be seen fragments of clothing, which a few hours before enclosed living, breathing forms, thus showing that some cases the bodies must have been thrown higher than the tree tops. Scattered around, lay the bodies and mutilated trunks of the unfortunate victims. The boilers were torn into pieces not larger than the hand, and the only wonder is, that a man is left to say he was on board when the explosion took place. What pen can picture the scene, the awful terrors of the explosion! A huge thing of life, as it would seem, and full of life, is there—a sudden burst—and a sinking wreck, the lacerated fragments of human bodies, the fleeing cloud of steam, alone speak of what was.—Cin. Com.

Bad Accident.—On the night of the 10th inst. the young men of Shelbyville, Tenn., undertook to fire a salute in honor of Gen. Scott's late victory. A premature explosion unfortunately took place, which blew off the hand and one arm of Mr. Turrentine, formerly editor of the Shelbyville Whig, shattered both arms of Mr. John Sutton, and blew off the thumb of Dr. Scott who had charge of the vent. Sutton's arms were amputated, and a similar operation performed on Turrentine, who survived only 20 hours, having received some internal injuries. Mr. T. had served in Mexico, but was discharged on account of sickness.—Cin. Com.

Liberality of a Sultan.—A letter from Constantinople mentions an act of liberality on the part of the Sultan which does him great credit. Upon hearing of the sufferings of the Irish, the Sultan caused to be handed to the Hon. Mr. Wellesley £1,000, to be disposed of by him in the best way towards their alleviation.—Cincinnati Com.

Death of Hon. Jesse Speight.—We learn from the Vicksburg Sentinel of the 6th inst., that the Hon. Jesse Speight, died at his residence in Lowndes County, Miss., a few days previous. Mr. S. was much esteemed wherever he was known, and had filled numerous important offices both in Mississippi and North Carolina.—He was many years Senator in Congress.

A Sad Case.—A London paper says:—A distressing event connected with the loss of the Tweed, occurred at Southampton last week. A wife of one of the crew of that ill-fated vessel, the mother of six children, dropped down dead on being told abruptly by a neighbor that the Tweed was lost and that all hands had perished.—What renders the circumstance more affecting is, that the husband arrived safely at Southampton in the Avon packet, being one of the persons whose lives were so providentially saved.—Bicknell's Reporter.

Sixty Three Lives Lost.—A Castine, Maine, correspondent of the Boston Courier writes that a town from St. Peters, Miq, via Halifax, which stated that on the 20th ult. the French brig Clarissa was lost, at the entrance of the harbor of St Peters, and sixty three lives lost. The bodies were all washed on shore and buried on the island.—Bicknell's Reporter.

Accident During a Baptism.—The Utica Gazette contains the following account of an accident of a serious character, which occurred at that place, during the ceremonial of baptism in the Mohawk. "A portion of the foot path of the bridge, at the foot of Genessee street, gave way precipitating some thirty or forty persons on the stone abutments of the bridge and into the river some 15 or 20 feet below. Mr. W. G. Smith druggist, and proprietor of the City Garden, was so crushed and wounded that he died in the course of the afternoon." The Gazette adds:

"A number of others were severely injured, but none, it is supposed fatally. Miss Palmer, sister to Mr. Lucius Palmer, and Miss Sheldon, daughter of Mr. Ebenezer Sheldon, had each a leg broken, Mrs. M. M. Jones was severely injured in the shoulder, and Miss Taylor was considerably injured. Ira Chase, Esq. was also much injured, but not dangerously."

In addition to the above, we believe there is a ne from Schenectady to Saratoga, a distance of me thirty miles. It is now less than two years nce the first telegraph was put in operation over rious parts of the country, and nearly 5000 iles in process of construction, which will probly all be completed in less than another year.

There is nothing which shows the enterprise d business character of our countrymen more an the progress of this invention. The idea as scarcely conceived before it was carried into fect and the benefits realized. While other naons are merely talking about it, or sporting with e invention as a plaything, the people of the ited States have proved its usefulness, by apying it to practical purposes, and expediting the erations of business in a manner which transnds the wildest dreams which the people of the st century entertained respecting the facility of mmunication.

The great practical utility of the magnetic telraph has been so conclusively demonstrated ere it has been in operation, that it will soon the medium of communication through all rts of our extended country. England, France d Germany have opened their eyes to its useness, and even Turkey is considering the proiety of establishing the system in that country Moslems and of Mosques, and for this purpose e Sultan has sent to New Haven for the 'workg apparatus and a description of the invention d its mode of construction. Thus the Yankee nd seems destined not only to civilize and operly republicanize the barbarous and degente races in America, but also to revolutionize e whole of Europe by its inventions. Legal Opinion—Fugitives.

Gov. Shunk recently laid before the Attorney eneral of the State, for his opinion of the law in e case, the facts in relation to the application by e Governor of Maryland to the Governor of s State under the 4th article of the Constitution the United States, and the Act of Congress of e 13th February, 1793, requesting the appreension and delivery as fugitives from justice, of ck Mack and Ellen Lochman, slaves for life, o stand indicted under a law of Maryland, of crime of running away and escaping from t State into the State of Pennsylvania, against will and consent of their masters and owners, h a view to escape from the servitude of their d masters or owners.

The Attorney General, after due consideration, ives at the conclusion that fugitives from serce or labor, are not embraced, and cannot be manded under that clause of the Constitution ich provides for delivering up fugitives from tice. That the rightful remedy of the owner nder that clause of the Constitution and the t of Congress of 1793—which provide for delering up persons held to service or labor, and t no act of State Legislation can evade, alter, idge or enlarge the provisions and remedies tained in the Constitution and laws of the ited States relating to this subject. This opinn the Governer says, seems to him to be susned by the history of the Federal government, d the exposition of that part of the Constitution under consideration, made cotemporaneously h its adoption, as well as by the current of our icial decisions, especially by that of the Sume Court of the United States, in the case of gg versus the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, orted in 16 Peters', page 539. The Gover, therefore, declined issuing the warrant for arrest.—Philadelphia Dollar Newspaper.

City News.

SUICIDE.—A very melancholy case of deliberate suicide occurred yesterday forenoon, and under very singular circumstances. A young woman named Richardson, Bell Hanger, Third street, just above the St. Charles Hotel, and aged about nineteen years, threw herself from the upper side of the Monongahela Bridge, between the third and fourth piers from the city side. The distance is about 35 feet, and the depth of water only about two feet at that spot. It appears she came direct from her father's house to the Bridge, attracting no particular attention by her demeanor, and when half way over the Bridge, cooly took off her shoes and placed them aside, then took off her bonnet and tied it up to one of the iron cables by the ribbons. This done she climbed on the railing and threw herself over. About the time she was falling, she was discovered by a gentleman who shouted and attracted attention on the wharf so soon, that the splash was noticed by various persons. Five yawls were instantly manned, and in a very few minutes she was taken out of the water. The right side of her face was much discoloured, but life was hardly extinct when the boat reached the wharf. Drs. Gazzam, Speer, and others were immediately in attendance; but the vital spark had fled.

The Coroner rendered a verdict according to the facts. The cause of this extraordinary act are not known. She was an amiable girl, of irreproachable character. Insanity was not the cause. She had been in ill-health, and it is believed was laboring under a morbid state of mind. A statement is made to us in connection with this case, which we do not feel at liberty to suppress. She had been reading a novel on Monday night containing a tale in its general outline a good deal like the part she acted. It was one of a young girl who had taken laudanum ineffectually, and then had thrown herself from a Bridge, &c. The name of the Novel our informant did not learn. —it was found in her bed yesterday morning.—Pittsburgh Gazette.

FIRE IN ALLEGHENY CITY.—On Monday afternoon a fire broke out in the steam Planing Machine Shop, on Sandusky street, and in a short time totally consumed the building and all its contents, and also a considerable amount of Lumber in and around it. The fire was accidental. The establishment was comparatively new, and owned by Messrs. John Morrison, Thos. McCombs and Robt. M. Reed. The loss is some $5000 or more. We hear it was insured.

The Cabinet and Furniture shop of Messrs. Riddle & Woodward, in the third story, is a total loss, with all its contents. A stiff breeze prevailed at the time, but as the building stood alone, no other damage was done.

Rev. Mr. Maffit's Irish Lecture.—Mr. R. H. Kerr, informs us that the proceeds of the Lecture is $166, which will be applied to pay freights on the produce that our humane citizens have so freely contributed.

LONDON THIEVES.—The "swell mob" of London perpetrate robberies with singular ingenuity and address, and appear never to be at fault.—A lady alighted at a bank, ascended the steps, entered the vestibule, presented a check to the paying teller, received a very large amount of bank notes, which she deposited in her purse, and returned to her carriage. Just as she had taken her seat, a gentleman came down the steps of the bank, without a hat, wearing spectacles, and having a pen behind his ear, and said—"Madam, we have forgotten to take the numbers of those notes; will you allow me to take them off?"—She gave him the notes, and he ascended the steps and entered the building. The lady having waited some time, finally returned to the bank, and soon ascertained that no such person had been authorized to ask for the notes.

ROBBERY.—A gentleman from Rising Sun, Ia., was robbed in this city yesterday morning while washing himself at one of the Hotels, of $1300! He had taken off his coat to wash; his pocket book fell out. When he missed it and returned no trace of it could be found.—Cincinnati Commercial.

POWER OF COLD WATER.—The Water-Cure Establishment of Priessnitz at Grafenberg, was visited last year by 1,022 patients. Of these 555 were Germans, (246 Austrians, 236 Prussians, 75 Hamburghers,) 165 Russians and Poles, 127 Englishmen, 65 Hungarians, 26 Danes, 21 Americans, and 63 inhabitants of other countries. There were also present 14 physicians, part of them as patients, and part as students of the Cure.

A GOOD CHARITY.—The Louisiana Legislature has appropriated $20,000 to the N. O. Charity Hospital. This is done for the benefit of the sick soldiers arriving from Mexico, and the increased number of emigrants.

EXPORT OF BREAD STUFFS.—The total export of Breadstuffs from the United States, from the 1st of September, 1846, to 1st of May, 1847, had been

Of Flour,	barrels	4,248,766
Of Corn Meal,	"	529,747
Of Wheat,	bushels	2,045,432
Of Corn,	"	11,009,441

Allowing five bushels of wheat to a barrel of flour and the same quantity to a barrel of corn meal, the result would give—Total export of flour and wheat equal to 23,289,262 bushels wheat. Of corn meal and corn equal to 14,026,435 bushels of corn.

The Mayor of Allegheny city offers a reward of $200 for the appprehension of the murderer or murderers of Boolmeyer. The citizens of New Lisbon, Ohio, where he was doing business, also offer a reward of $100.

The War with Mexico.

The Killed, Wounded, &c.—A careful estimate of the killed & wounded in Mexico, in one year, from among our troops, has been estimated at 3,010, besides 2,500 who have died of the climate, and to this should be added for those who have contracted diseases in Mexico, which will produce certain death at home. In the Gulf of Mexico we have lost two vessels of war and fifty transports, and in the prosecution of the war have expended fifty millions of dollars. When we count up the Glory let it be balanced by the loss of life, the misfortune of wounds and disease, the expenditure of money, and above all the sad moral example of a war of conquest carried on by a powerful Republic against a weaker and comparatively defenceless nation.—Pittsburgh Gazette.

MELANCHOLY.—A poor woman at Southampton, the wife of one of the crew, the mother of six children, and then in a delicate position, dropped down dead on being told abruptly by a neighbor that the "Tweed" was lost, and that all hands had perished. What renders the circumstance the more affecting is, that the husband arrived safely at Southampton in the "Avon" packet shortly after. It will be remembered that this royal mail steamer, was lost in the Gulf of Mexico.

Increase of Population.

The Home Missionary thus sums up the growth of the Western States:

Ohio welcomed the first permanent settlers in 1758; now is occupied by 1,732,000 people.

Michigan, to which the attention of emigrants was turned twelve or fourteen years ago, now has 300,000 people.

Indiana, admitted into the Union in 1816, has received a population of more than half a million since 1830, and now numbers more than 900,000 inhabitants.

Illinois was organized a separate territory in 1810, and entered the Union as a State in 1818. From that date, its population trebled every ten years till the last census, and in the last five years has risen from 476,000 to 700,000.

Missouri, which in 1810, had only 20,800 people, has now 600,000, having increased fifty per cent. in five years.

Iowa was scarcely heard of at the East ten years ago; it is but fourteen years since the only white inhabitants, north of the Missouri line, were a few Indian traders. More than one hundred thousand now make that beautiful land their home—sixty thousand of whom have gone in during the last four years.

Wisconsin was organized ten years ago; the marshals have just taken the census, and, from present appearances, the population will vary but little from one hundred and fifty thousand, being an increase of one hundred thousand in 5 years. One portion of the territory, 33 miles by 30, which ten years ago was an unbroken wilderness, now numbers thirty thousand inhabitants: and the emigration to that portion of the West is greater than ever.

The seven new States and Territories above enumerated—to say nothing of the other western and south-western States and Texas have increased since the last adjustment of the ratio more than a million and a half.—Watchman of the Valley.

Slavery in Virginia.

We have heard not a little of the mildness of Virginia slavery, the kindness of Virginia masters, and their abhorrence of the cruel practice of sundering families by slave sales. Randolph, it is reported, once chased a slave-dealer from his plantation, with a pointed pistol at his back, for offering to buy one of his servants. Now all this would constitute a pretty fair pro-slavery argument, if none of these Virginians were mercenary and depraved, none of them ever got in debt, and none of them died. But it so happens that the people of Virginia, as well as New England, have some reference to profit and loss, in the disposition of their property—slave-property not excepted. This principle decides whether a slave is to be sold or retained. Besides, thousands and scores of thousands, every year, pass under the auctioneer's hammer, in consequence of the death and of the insolvency of their masters. Men may abhor and deplore the cruelty of this practice as much as they please; it results, inevitably, from the legal recognition of man as a chattel. The slave trade, with all its atrocities, grows out of this principle. The Richmond Enquirer says, "it is a melancholy fact that negroes have become the only reliable staple of the tobacco-growing sections of Virginia,—the only reliable means of liquidating debts, foreign and domestic. They are sold here by hundreds, under the hammer of the auctioneer. The domestic cannot compete with the south-western demand for them," where the profits of their labor are from thirty to forty fold greater.

Reader, can you blame us for denouncing such a system, and for attempting, by our influence, to rescue the sufferers from its cruelties? Wat. of the Valley.

COST OF THE WAR.—The following estimate shows that we have paid a terrible price for our success in Mexico. We have lost, including some of the ablest spirits of the country—

Killed & wounded around Monterey	500
At Matamoras,	500
At Buena Vista,	800
Taylor's incidental skirmishes,	200
Operations in New Mexico,	200
In California,	250
At Vera Cruz,	50
Commodore Conner at Alvarado,	10
Lieutenant Hunter, "	00
Scott at Sierra Gorda	500
Total killed and wounded,	3,010
Died of the climate,	2,500
Grand total,	5,510

We have killed and wounded 10,000 Mexicans and occupied 800,000 square miles of their territory, equal to fifteen of our States. Glorious!

LABOR.—The more we accomplish the more we have to accomplish. All things are full of labor, and therefore the more we acquire, the more care and the more toil to secure our acquisitions. Good men can never retire from their works of benevolence. Their fortune is never made. I never heard of an apostle, prophet, or public benefactor, retiring from their respective fields of labor. Moses, and Paul, and Peter, died with their harness on. So did Luther, and Calvin, and Wesley, and a thousand others as deserving, though not so well known to fame. We are inured to labor. It was first a duty. It is now a pleasure. Still there is such a thing as over-working man and beast, mind and body. The mainspring of a watch needs repose, and is the better for it. The muscles of an elephant and the wings of a swift bird are at length fatigued. Heaven gives rest to the earth because it needs it; and winter is more pregnant with blessings to the soil than summer with its flowers and fruits. But in the war for truth and against error, there is no discharge.—A. CAMPBELL.

INSCRIPTION ON THE TOMB OF NAPOLEON.—The following record of events in the life of the Emperor is to be inscribed on his tomb at the Invalides:

"Born on the 15th of August 1769; captain of a squadron of artillery at seige of Toulon, in 1793, at the age of 24; commander of artillery, in Italy, 1794, at 25; general-in-chief of the army of Italy, in 1796, at 27; general-in-chief of the expedition of Egypt, in 1798, at 29; first counsel, in 1799, at 30; consul for life after the battle of Marengo, in 1800, at 31; Emperor of the French, in 1803, at 34; abdicted the throne after the battle of Waterloo, June 18, 1815, at 46; died in exile at St. Helena, May 5, 1821, at 52."

PRAISEWORTHY.—Mr. G. W. Arnold, baker, has distributed one hundred loaves of bread among the sick and destitute Irish immigrants near Canton. A committee of 25 has been appointed from the Hibernian Society to collect food, clothing and money for these refugees from famine.—Balt. Sun, May 15th.

LIGHTNING.—During a severe thunder storm at Charleston, S. C., last week, a Mr. Arthur Lynch, and a girl slave belonging to Jas. H. Maywood, Esq., were killed by lightning.

ARGUMENT AGAINST THE DEATH PENALTY.—On the authority of Sir Fitzroy Kelly, it is stated that, since the year 1800, no fewer than fourteen persons have been executed whose innocence has since been fully established.

Jackson county, in this State, is getting to be a famous place for slander suits, and, to secure themselves against any such annoyances, the Editor, Foreman and Devil of the county paper, the 'Standard,' publish a card, retracting any and every thing that they have ever published, which could be tortured into slander. This is an excellent plan to avoid trouble: a still better one is, to avoid personalities altogether.—Zanesville Courier.

REVOLUTIONARY SOLDIERS.—The last winter carried off many of the veterans. Major Watson died lately in Wisconsin, aged 100 years 3 months and 16 days. He enlisted in Col. Van Schaick's regiment, in the New York line, the second year of the war, and was in active service to the close of it.

GERMAN COLONY.—The advance guard of a colony of German emigrants, 40 in number, landed at Manitouwoc, Wis. T., on the 7th inst. The main body, consisting of about 6000, are on their way, the whole colony will occupy a county. The Union will soon have to let a tuck out of its waistbands.

IMPORTANT DECISION.—In the Supreme Court, at Rochester, N. Y., the following case was lately tried: Ely shipped flour on a canal boat for New York; Hays, the Master, sold and disposed of a considerable quantity of the cargo on his way to Albany, representing to purchasers that it belonged to him, received the proceeds and fled. Ehle and Brown each purchased of him. Ely brought suit against them for the value. The judge decided that Hays was a common carrier; that he was thus a servant to Ely, in whom the constructive possession still remained, and that purchasers took the flour at their own risk. So Ely had a verdict.

Casualties.

A horse, attached to a small wagon, from the country, loaded with wool, becoming frightened, started from about opposite Whitaker's Drug Store yesterday, and running around into 5th street, upset the vehicle, and a boy who was in was much cut and bruised. The animal took a fancy to plunge in among the tailors at our neighbor Rogers' shop, but was scared from the door and finally stopped a little farther down the street. The wagon was completely wrecked.

On Tuesday night, 11th inst., two men were drowned below the dam near the mouth of the Muskingum. They had gone out in the night to remove a dead animal which had lodged on the dam, and it is supposed that their skiff had escaped from them, and that they attempted to reach the shore by walking on the edge of the dam, over which about eight inches of water was passing, and slipped off. The skiff was found below the dam, perfectly dry, and their bodies were recovered on Sunday last, seven miles below the mouth.

In Marion, on the 4th inst., Mr. W. H. Wallace lost his right hand by the premature discharge of a cannon, which he was loading.

Mr. J. Roach, a citizen of Adams township, Washington county, was killed on Wednesday the 12th inst., by the fall of a burning tree in the field where he was at work. A horse and one or two oxen were killed at the same time.—Zanesville Courier.

TEMPERANCE.—At the recent anniversary meeting of the American Temperance Union, Rev. John Marsh, Chairman of the Executive Committee, said that 70,000 American seamen had signed the pledge—that 500 distilleries had been closed in Sweden—that there were 1,200,000 members of Temperance Societies in Germany, and 2,000,000 in England, Scotland and Wales.

SWEARING IN HEBREW.—Not long ago, as I was on my way from Newark to Jersey City, in the cars, I observed a young lady sitting opposite to me, who seemed very much annoyed by the conversation of a young naval official, which was intermingled with oaths. She at length (having sat as long as she could without reproving him) said, "Sir, can you converse in the Hebrew tongue?" He replied "that he could;" expecting, no doubt, to hold some conversation with her in that dialect. She then politely told him, that, if he wished to swear any more, he would greatly oblige herself, and probably the rest of the passengers, if he would do it in that language. The young man was silent during the remainder of the passage.—Gleaner.

Ministers' Department.

Building Ships while hearing Sermons.

It is said of a gentleman who once went to hear Whitefield, and on the way home met his own minister, and received from him a gentle reproof for his wandering and itching ear, that the parishioner replied. "Sir, when I hear you, I am planting trees all the time; but during the whole of Mr. Whitefield's sermon, I never found time to plant one." There was a ship-builder, too, who usually built a ship from stem to stern during a common sermon, but under Whitefield he could not lay a plank.

Now we are afraid there is a good deal of tree-planting, and ship building, and stock-selling, and bargain-driving, and pleasure-planning, to say nothing of sleep-courting under many of our sermons in these times. And whose is the fault?—There was never an age when common places could be so little tolerated in the pulpit as now. The people will not mind them, and will not hear them, but will go to thinking of something else, and generally it will be of the world. If we want to keep tree-planting and ship-building out of the Sabbath, we must keep green trees of truth growing and yielding fruit in the pulpit, and we must ourselves keep on the stocks noble ships, which men will love to come and see launched of a Sabbath day; ships planked not from the wreck of Paradise* on the shores of idolatrous Greece, but from these trees of the Lord's planting in the sacred Scriptures, full of sap as the cedars of Lebanon. We must give religious meanings to the forms of nature, and to all the passing phenomena and occurrences of time, and we must be pouring weighty and pungent truth upon the laden ears of the worlding, if we would keep the thoughts of his business and pleasures out of the sanctuary of God.—N. Y. Evangelist.

*Coleridge's idea of Plato—a plank from the wreck of Paradise cast upon the shores of idolatrous Greece.

CHOOSING A MINISTER.—The people in one of the out parishes in Virginia wrote to Dr. Rice who was then at the head of the Theological Seminary in Prince Edward, for a minister. They said they wanted a man of first rate talents, for they had run down considerable, and needed building up. They wanted one who could write well, for some of the young people were very nice about that matter. They wanted one who could visit a good deal, for their former minister had neglected that, and they wanted to bring it up.—They wanted a man of very gentlemanly deportment, for some thought a great deal of that. And so they went on describing a perfect minister. The last thing they mentioned was, they gave their minister three hundred and fifty dollars; but if the Doctor would send them such a man as they described, they would raise another fifty dollars, making it four hundred dollars. The Doctor sat down and wrote a reply, telling them they had better forthwith make out a call for old Dr. Dwight in heaven; for he did not know of any one in this world who answered this description. And, as Dr. Dwight had been living so long on spiritual food, he might not need so much for the body, and possibly might live on four hundred dollars.

Sabbath Breaking.

Then, as to the desecration of the Sabbath day. The zeal which claps in prison a poor "Come-outer" for esteeming all days alike, and which runs a tilt at steam cars, and lays a taboo upon Sunday mail bags, may or may not be according to knowledge. We venture no opinion in respect to it, but would simply suggest, with the deference befitting one of the laity, that its attention might be very profitably turned to some recent transactions of our Christian army and navy, engaged in opening the way for the introduction of the Gospel into Mexico. If our Almanac does not deceive us, our navy spent a Sabbath at Tabasco some months ago, and performed 'services' of an impressive but somewhat equivocal kind, sending messengers of peace and good will among the poor, benighted Catholics, in the shape of red hot balls and shells. More recently, Gen. Scott has "kept the Sabbath" on the heights of Cerro Gordo, storming batteries, blowing whole squadrons into eternity, impaling men on bayonets, and tearing off their limbs with cannon shot. We should like to know what General Assemblies and Conferences think of this way of spending holy time. The occasions referred to were doubtless solemn enough to satisfy a Puritan tythingman—as much so, in short, as dying groans and ghastly corpses could make them. But, apart from this, we cannot see that the storming of forts, and slaughter of women and children on their own hearths, or while kneeling in their places of worship, is a more appropriate Sunday business than the running of the United States mail or the delving of a Seventh-Day Baptist in his potato field. We respectfully refer the whole matter to the Tennessee Methodists, who have made Captain Walker, of the Texas Rangers, and the leading heroes of Monterey, life members of their Missionary Society; and to the Western Home Missionary Society of Baltimore, of which Gen. Taylor has just been made a life member; and to the Old and New School Presbyterians Assemblies—subject, as a matter of course, to the final action of the Evangelical Alliance. J. G. W.

MEMORIA TECHNICA:

Or, the Art of Abbreviating those Studies which give the greatest labor to the Memory; including Numbers, Historical Dates, Geography, Astronomy, Gravities, &c.; also Rules for Memorizing Technicalities, Nomenclatures, Proper Names, Prose, Poetry, and Topics in general.—Embracing all the available Rules found in Mnemonics, or Mnemotechny of Ancient and Modern Times. To which is added a Perpetual Almanac for Two Thousand Years of Past Time and Time to Come. Adapted to the use of Schools. By LORENZO D. JOHNSON. Second edition, revised and improved.—Boston.

PRICE—50 CENTS.

In presenting to the public the "Memoria Technica," which, in some respects, may be said to contain a new theory of instruction, the publishers beg leave to call the attention of Teachers, School Committees, and others interested in education, the peculiar merits of the work. It has been already introduced into several of our best and most popular schools in Boston and vicinity, and has also received high commendation from many of our most distinguished clergymen and other literary men who have examined it.

Notices of the Press.

'This system of Mnemotechny, differing considerably from the one introduced by Prof. Gouraud, is designed to furnish all the rules for aiding the memory without lessening mental culture, which can be made available during a course of elementary study. The illustrations may be easily comprehended by any person of ordinary mental capacity, and the application of the principle upon which the system is based must necessarily furnish an agreeable and useful exercise to the mind. It is well adapted to common school instruction, and may be made a very profitable study, if rightly pursued. Every page of the work gives evidence of a desire to present the laws of association distinctly & clearly, so as to enable the learner to establish such relations between things, events, &c., as will aid the memory. We commend the book to teachers and all interested in this important subject.'—N. Y. Teachers' Advocate.

'The art of improving the memory is surely a very important one, and whoever contributes any thing to further this end, certainly renders an important service to the public. Mr Johnson, we believe, has succeeded in bringing his system of mnemonics into such a practicable form, as will render it an essential aid to all who do not naturally have a great power of memory.'—Ch. Witness

'This is a treatise on artificial memory prepared for the use of schools. The subject is a curious one, and worthy of attention.'—Boston Recorder.

'This system of mnemonics, being the first work of the kind ever prepared for the use of schools, and being so arranged and simplified that any one of ordinary capacities may easily acquire a knowledge of its principles, is certainly worthy of examination and study. It is most emphatically an aid to the memory, and as such, is well adapted to common school instruction. We heartily commend it to public notice, while we hope that Mr. Johnson will receive the reward due to his industry and perseverance by seeing this work extensively introduced into our schools, public and private.'—Tenn. Standard.

'The author promises to endow his pupils with an infinite faculty of memory. If he can do it without too much trouble on the part of the recipients, he will do a good thing, and as far as we can judge, he seems likely to accomplish it. While his system is much more simple than any we have before examined, it contains a great deal more. Moreover, it makes the thing a matter of practical education, within the reach of all.'—Chronotype.

'There are minds of a certain class that are wont to be interested in mnemonics, and we doubt not that such may find valuable assistance in a work of this kind.—N. E. Puritan.

'The book, although designed and adapted to the use of schools, is nevertheless worthy the attention of all persons who wish to assist or strengthen memory.'—N. E. Washingtonian.

'A very ingenious and useful book, designed to shorten the labor of those studies which require the exercise of the memory, by a system of memorizing.'—Reading Gazette, Pa.

We feel no hesitation in recommending this work to the deliberate attention of teachers, and the guardians of youth. We learn that it is received into several of the schools in Boston, and used as an auxiliary help to the studies now pursued by the pupils.'—Boston Courier.

'We noticed the first edition of this book a short time since, and in addition to what we then said, will only say now, that it is prepared by one who has paid great attention to the subject, and who has been employed to teach his system by some of our most experienced teachers and wisest men.'—Ch. Register.

'We have given the work a partial examination, sufficient to become convinced that the subject is one of importance.'—Ch. Watchman.

The Memoria Technica is now studied in some of our best schools; and the system taught in it appears to be much approved by those who have made trial of it.'—Evening Traveller.

The work contains a vast amount of important facts and useful information; which, aside from its value as a system of instruction, render it, as has been justly said by many who have examined it, well worth the price of the work as a mere book of reference. Published by
GOULD, KENDALL & LINCOLN,

☞We expect to have a supply of the above work forwarded to us for sale, in Putnam, at 50 cents per [illegible] when we find there is demand for them.

POETRY.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Death.

Death is not to die. 'tis not a sleep, nor rest,
Nor yet a gift that calms the troubled breast;
'Tis not the end of present joy or pain,—
The change shall be a loss or endless gain.
'Tis not that calm, insensible, inactive still,
In which we're dead to every joy or ill;
Nor there, can motives fail to prompt the mind,
Or mind to act, or acting, fail to find.

Death's but dissolution,—for 'tis not to die
To see the spirit from its covert fly;
Nor when the frame sinks back to native earth,
From which thro' natural laws new life shall burst.
Living, moving, acting, substance is the same;
It may dissolve, but never can be slain.
To-day it may appear in human shape,—
To-morrow, may of other forms partake.

It may be found in every element of earth,—
It shall in every kingdom have new birth,—
It may be past, through all the vast machines of time,
Be found in every substance, age, and clime;
But what of this? the power that bore away
And spread its parcels, (as an Ocean's spray,)
Shall all the melted fragments yet restore,
And rear the fabric, perfect, as before.

Death, in itself, has no appalling fears—
The rogue may tremble as his end he nears,—
'Tis man that arms this formidable foe,
And gives it terors we should never know.
Death to the wise is but a kind relief,—
To fools, a source of an approaching grief,
That brings but night of dismal gloom,
To pave the passage to the tomb.

Could we but learn our business here,
And practice truth with godly fear,—
On Heaven for all our wants depend,
Then death would prove a welcome friend;
A messenger of power and might,
To wing the spirit for its flight
To worlds beyond the tempest's roar,
Where anguish, pain, and death's no more.

Ode to Simplicity.

Simplicity, thou favorite child
Of heavenly nature, meek and mild,
Sweet guard of playful youth;
Thy modesty is thy defence,
Thy bashful silence eloquence,
Thy eloquence is truth.

Then who could ever injure thee?
Nature's sweet babe, simplicity,
So sweet, so chaste, so mild.
The worst of wretches, who have not
Thy parent nature long forgot,
Could never hurt the child.

The following thoughts were found in a book belonging to a lady in Morgantown, Va. From her character and sufferings doubtless they express the feelings of her heart. S. M.

Though fickle fortune has deceived me,
And promised fair, but ill performed;
Of many a joy and hope bereaved me,
I have a heart supports me still;
Whatever ills misfortune brings
Though for a time, I mourn so deeply;
On him above, the king of kings
My hope of blessings rests securely,
My heart by woe is rendered firmer,
And though it now assails my mind,
At Heaven's decree I scorn to murmur,
For God is righteous, just and kind.

Slavery vs. the Church.

Br. BASSETT: I see in the last* number of your valuable Recorder, a letter from brother J. Paris of North Carolina, headed, ABOLITION VS. THE CHURCH. Now as this brother from the land of the sunny South, has appeared in your columns as an opponent of the "folly and fanaticism of the Abolitionists" in the North, and of course an advocate for continuing in the church, the speculating in the purchase of our Saviour's blood. I as an humble member in the same church with him would beg leave to venture a few thoughts for my brother's consideration.

First, he says that "God has not declared it (Slavery) to be sin in the revelation of his gospel." This God himself positively contradicts. For in summing up "the sins that reached unto heaven," he expressly means the trading in slaves and souls of men as one of the most enormous. But we shall notice the royal law of the ALMIGHTY. The first commandment is "Thou shall love (or worship the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength and with all thy mind." But the slaveholder braves the law of Jehovah, seizes the throne of the Almighty, and demands the body, strength and soul of the slave himself. All his labor, his time, his body, his life, with all he has and all he is, says the Master is mine. Hence the slave has nothing to give to God. His heart, his mind, his strength, his soul, all belong to the slaveholder. Although God says "all souls are mine." Yet the slaveholder in the church gives God the lie, and declares that the slave, soul and body is his, he therefore robs God of his just right and buys and sells the soul as an article of trade for gain. Yet brother Paris says 'tis right. But Jehovah in the 18th of Revelations has pronounced a curse against those that trade in souls. But God says, thou shalt worship the Lord &c. But slaveholders combined have said by law thou shall not worship the Lord, &c. For if any slaves, &c., shall meet in any schoolhouse, meeting house, &c., after the going down of the sun, or before the rising of the same for the purpose of mental instruction or religious worship, they shall be deemed an unlawful assembly, and any person or persons may disperse them inflicting not more than twenty lashes for each and every offence. Therefore slavery has made it an offence to worship God. Yet brother Paris says this is all right among christians and that the church and ministers of the gospel should let it alone.

The second commandment forbids the worshipping of God by images by any other way not appointed by his word. But the slave owner makes himself an idol to the slave so that the slave can have no power to worship God but through this great idol, his master. No power to use God's word, no power to practice God's ordinances, no power to command his children or his household to worship God, but in and through and by the sovereign will of his master. The ancient heathens offered human sacrifices to their Gods but it did not affect the future happiness of the victims, but the slave owner sacrifices both the temporal and eternal happiness, of the slaves, therefore his crime is much worse than that of the heathen. The means by which slave holders sacrifice the eternal interest of the slaves is the keeping them in a state of brutish ignorance so as to be incapable of attaining to salvation in the ordinary way. God may and in many instances does save sinners without reading, yet the tendency of slaveholding is to prevent their salvation, slaves then can worship no God, adore no Saviour, nor obey one command of heaven, but at the pleasure of their master, yet Br. Paris says the abolitionists are all fools for trying to get this bloody and corrupted canker out of the church.

The third commandment is "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain, for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain."

This commandment forbids the abuse or unnecessary use of God's name in any way whatever, and lays a positive obligation upon all to use the name of God in a right and solemn manner as in religious worship, religious conversation, or in making oath before a court of justice. But slave holding forbids all this and forces the slave to brake this command of God in all its bearings. But is it not taking the name of God in vain in the strongest sense, for us to call upon him to bless and prosper us as a church while we the members are speculating in the purchase of our Saviour's blood. Trafficking in the souls and bodies of of our brothers and sisters in the church, selling widows and orphans for gain, parting husbands and wives for gold and silver, hoarding the image of God to market with our cattle and swine and after degrading our neighbors below the meanest of the brute creation to plunge them into an ocean of human bondage and agony that has even caused the unfeeling Turk to turn away and weep. I ask is it not worse than in vain to ask Jehovah to bless us in these deeds of hell? No says Br. Paris, this is all right—slavery is a holy institution and ought to be let alone in the church.

The fourth commandment is "remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

The profound ignorance in which the slaves are held, occasions a continual breach of the Sabbath day, for none that are ignorant of God's word and economy of grace can keep the Sabbath holy to the Lord. And again the slaves are in many instances forced to labor all the week without being allowed time to prepare their food and raiment for the coming week until the Sabbath day; others are employed in stables, kitchens, or at domestic labor on that holy day and the constant round of visiting practiced among slaveholders on the Sabbath day, keep great numbers of the slaves employed from morning to evening in serving them; so that slavery as practiced even by the church is one continued breach of the Sabbath day. Yet brother Paris says 'tis all right and as an holy institution it ought not to be touched.

"Honor thy father and thy mother that thy days may be long in the earth."

This fifth commandment of high heaven is made a perfect nullity even by the church members themselves, for the relations of father and mother or husband and wife are but slightly known among slaves, and if it is, they are torn assunder at the will and beck of the christian master. Slaveholders therefore destroy the command of God by destroying the revelation of parents and children so that children cannot obey their parents, nor parents rear their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. For slavery destroys the marriage contract, separates husbands and wives forever, and drives them and their children into the soul market where the purchase of our dying Saviour's tears and blood is turned into chattels and debased beneath the reptiles on which we tread. Such is the slavery the abolitionists oppose. Yet Br. Paris asks the church to let it alone.

The sixth commandment is, "Thou shalt not kill."

Slavery is founded on violence and robbery both in its origin and continuance, to which if the slave would not submit he would be liable to suffer death. Therefore slavery is founded upon and exists by murder. And should the slaves attempt to free themselves which every candid mind will grant would be morally right, according to slave laws death would be their portion, so that murder is the foundation and support of slavery. Yet were these enslaved in Algiers, Tunis or Tripoli, and should there make an attempt to gain their liberty, their judges here would pronounce it a heroic virtue, while for attempting the same in this christian land, they would put them all to death. There are also more than fifty crimes laid down in the slave code for the commission of which the slave may be lawfully killed, destroying at one fell sweep the great command of Jehovah "Thou shalt not kill." But there can be no murder compared, be it ever so dreadful, to that of slavery. For a common act of murder takes away the life only, but does not effect the soul. But the slaveholder ruins both soul and body both for time and eternity by rendering the slave useless for time and unfit for heaven. Yet brother Paris sneers at the law of Jehovah and abuses like dogs that portion of the church who oppose slavery and murder.

"Thou shalt not commit adultery" is the seventh command of Jehovah, and one too that is desecrated and broken by all the dark and bloody laws of southern slavery. Multitudes of slave owners not only impiously violate this command themselves, but they also encourage others to carry on the dreadful practice. For notwithstanding the "odor and color" at which brother Paris sneers as though reflecting upon the Almighty for placing them upon the colored race, nearly one 4th of the slaves are illegitimate and adulterated beings. And hundreds of thousands now stand forth as living witnesses of the dark and damning practices of Amalgamation and adultery, caused by slavery the sacred institution of the south. The priceless innocence of mothers, wives and daughters, is made subservient to the brutal lusts and fiendish passions of their inhuman masters and owners while the church from under the burning word of God says let it alone, we have no right to legislate upon it. And brother Paris whose ears are perhaps regaled with the groans and cries of human misery, sends forth his voice to the free christians of the north, and declares that slavery with all its laws of adultery, is no sin in the church.

The eighth commandment is "Thou shalt not steal."

But slavery is a direct violation of this high and holy command of Almighty God. For all slaves are stolen property. Their fathers and mothers were stolen from Africa by the slave traders and sold into perpetual bondage; hence all their posterity at the present day are owned by no other right than that founded upon theft and robbery. And Deity has expressly declared that "he that stealeth a man and selleth him or if he be found in his hand shall surely be put to death." And are there not nearly three millions of stolen men, women and children found in the hands of slaveholders in this land of boasted freedom at the present day? They are robbed of their wages—they are robbed of their relatives and friends—they are robbed of their liberty, and they are robbed of their God. Hence slavery is the most downright theft and robbery that ever blanched the cheek of hell. Yet brother Paris says we must say nothing about it or we will disturb the church.

"Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor" is the ninth commandment. This commandment requires the promoting of truth between man and man. But slaveholding prevents the slaves from bearing testimony before any court in their own defence or in the cause of any other person to either clear the innocent or condemn the guilty. Therefore one sixth of this great nation is crushed and debased to a level with the brute creation without the right of a redress for their terrible wrong. Their masters, overseers &c., bear false witness against them, for their rights as human beings, against them for their wages, against them for their virtue and chastity, against them for their liberty, against them for their right to read the bible, and to worship God. And for all this the slave is not allowed to speak nor testify to his or her grievous wrongs. Yet brother Paris says, the church of the living God has no right to say this flagrant violation of Jehovah's law is an evil.

The tenth commandment is "Thou shalt not covet."

Slaveholders not only covet, but they sacrance all their neighbor's interest to themselves, which is a direct violation of the tenth commandment, and of the highest aggravation, and like a sweeping flood they take all property, liberty, privileges both temporal and spiritual, and lastly they take the person both soul and body, and consign him or her to bondage and wretchedness during their natural life. Yet brother Paris seems to think all that oppose slavery, that is all abotitionists are fools, and that the church has no right to say that Covetousness, Falschood, Theft, Adultery, & Murder, are evils as combined in the system of slavery. And although the communication of brother Paris was a poor, imbecile production, abusive of a portion of the members of the General Conference, yet we feel for him as a brother, and pray God to convert his soul from error that he may live in heaven. An Important Question.

Are any of the Protestant denominations of the United States verging towards Catholicism?

MR. EDITOR:—SIR; In attempting an answer to this query, I shall confine myself in this No. 1, to the acts and doings of the most prominent branches of the Methodist family. This is an age of enquiry, and improvement, and whilst liberal principles in the general characterise the doings both of Church and State, great care should be used, that we do not, either by precept, or example, sanction the corruptions of the (falsely so called) mother church; she is the mother of harlots, and under the dominion and control of the man of sin; she practices customs and usages, that are not only anti-scriptural but in their nature and tendency, actually wicked. Amongst those customs and usages we enumerate the power assumed by priests to grant absolultion, the worshiping and adoration of images and relics, and also the invocation of saints, grounded upon no warrant of the word of God. We also disapprove of the Romish doctrine of purgatory, and the five popish sacraments, to wit: confirmation, penance, orders, matrimony, and extreme unction, as also the denying the cup to the laity, with many other things we shall not here enumerate. I have before me the disciplines of the Methodist Episcopal, the Methodist Protestant, the Wesleyans, and having heretofore been of the opinion that each of these branches of the Methodist Church, were protestant in every sense of the word, I turned my attention to the testimony borne in each of the disciplines against the corruptions and errors of popery, I find in the articles of Religion of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Methodist Protestant Churches, the plainly, openly, and candidly renounced, all the above stated usages and doctrines of the Catholic Church, and speak of them as things vainly invented, and thus stand out before the world, in bold relief as the champions of the doctrines, for which the Martyrs bled and died, and so far, are entitled to the love and respect of the entire Protestant community. I refer your readers to their articles of Religion, headed "of purgatory," "of the sacraments," "of the Lord's Supper," and "of both kinds." Methodist Episcopal discipline, pages 14 and 15, and Methodist Protestant discipline, pages 84, and 86. So far as these open renunciations are concerned I felt myself perfectly satisfied, that the framers of these articles were truly protestant, it is true these articles were framed by the Protestants in the early ages of the Reformation, and have been taken from the articles of Religion of the Protestant Episcopal Church, but those who adopted them and incorporated them into the their Articles of Faith proved themselves Protestant, equally as much so, as did the original framers.

On turning over the pages of the Wesleyan discipline, I was utterly astonished, to find their Articles of Religion, so reduced and abridged as to omit every sentence, that is found in the other disciplines, condemnatory of the corruptions of the Romish Church, the entire article "of purgatory," is omitted, the entire article of both kinds," two thirds of the article 'of the Sacraments,' or the whole that relates to the 5 popish Sacraments, and so much of the article 'of the Lord's Supper,' as relates to transubstantiation or the real presence, and so much of it, as relates to the spiritual receiving of the Supper of the Lord, are all stricken off the articles that are embodied in the Wesleyan creed. What can this mean? It looks a little toward popery, it seems to shrink at an open and public disavowal of the corruptions of the Church of Rome, and yet at the time of the organization of the Wesleyans, and the forming of their book of discipline, there were greater efforts making for the spread of popery, and popish principles in these United States, than had ever heretofore been made, the tide of Catholic emigration had set in both of priests and people. Austria with her gold, was aiding in the erection of Cathedrals, Churches, Colleges, Convents and Nunneries, the late Pope had pronounced the whole Catholic Church of America, under the care and protection of the Virgin Mary; Bishops had become bold in arguing the infallibility of the Pope and Church, they dared to intermeddle with our great political elections, they interfered with our common school system, and endeavored to impose the reading of Catholic Bibles on the children of Protestant parents, they interfered in the operations of the great Bible Society, and had a large amount of Protestant copies of the Bible committed to the flames, they were sending their priests by hundreds to the great valley of the Mississippi, they were to cross the Rocky Mountains, enter Oregon, go up to California, and to stop nothing short of the shores of the great Pacific, and thus to spread over this Continent, from the beaches of both Oceans, to the frozen regions of the North, even down to the sunny climes of the South, carrying with them all the dogmas of Catholicism, all the corruptions that flow from that fountain of iniquity, all the base principles that kindled up the fires of Smithfield, that made the streets of Paris to flow down with Protestant blood, that has immersed thousands in the dens of the inquisition, that has denied the lamp of life to the common people, and that has placed the Pope in the chair of St. Peter, and declared him infallible. These are only a few of the evils that follow in the march of Catholicism, it is antagonistical to the Government of our Country, it is anti-democratic, it is an absolute sovereignty, erected within the government of these States, to which the priests swear allegiance, and yet with all this, and much more, passing before the eyes of the Protestant world, behold a sect struggling into existence, seceding from a branch of the great Protestant family, forming a book of discipline, and adopting articles of Religion; contrary to any former precedent, she stands palsied, and amidst the growing numbers of Catholics all around her, she seems to say by her temerity and want of action, we hold out to you a flag of truce, and if we cannot bid you God speed, we will adopt nothing at least in our Articles of Religion, that will have a tendency to induce our community to believe, that any of your principles are absurd, erroneous, or heterodox; hence at one dash, they sweep all that relates to the errors of Romanism out of their creed and discipline. It is vain, Mr. Editor—to say, this is the fruits of Christian Charity, we are to be bold to oppose evil; look at the eight woes pronounced by the Saviour upon evil deeds, and evil doers. Protestants and Catholics have no fellowship with each other, so far as these errors are concerned, they are the grand lighting up torches that have martyred thousands, Catholicism is to day what it ever was it is only restrained in this land by the arm of civil power, and the glorious Constitution of our Union; let it once get the ascendency and woe to the Protestant sects, yes even that sect that has cringed at its feet, and failed to give its testimony against the most corrupt system that ever disgraced the world, I say woe to them; for against Protestantism it has waged a war of extermination. On examination of the little thing called the Discipline of the Wesleyan Methodist Connexion of America I find many things to which I object, I object to the elementary principles being there, without proper credit, I object to the rule on the buying or selling of men, women, or children, being palmed upon the world, as one of John and Charles Wesley's rules, the rule may be a good one, but ought not to be incorporated with the rules of the venerable founders of Methodism, let it stand upon its own merits and not call in the name of Wesley to prop it up.—I object to the declaration, that this Wesleyan discipline is believed to be the best extant; is it so because of its borrowed, or ill gotten principles, or is it so because it winks at Catholicism, or is it so because of its close communion, or is it so because of its (so called) Wesleyan rule? Now Sir, it is a discipline, amongst disciplines, and the world will judge of its super excellent qualities. I object to its squinting towards the Catholics. I object to its diminutive and abridged Articles of Religion, I object to it because it has no constitution appended to it, I object to the whole concern, as being an unnecessary secession, all this is submitted very respectfully, to the consideration of the timid, and time serving friends of the Catholic community. PAUL PRY.

Miscellaneous.

From a London Paper.

The Discoveries of 1846.

We apprehend that there can be no doubt that the year 1846 will be memorable to the end of time for the remarkable extensions, or new applications, of human knowledge, which will come before future historians as rendering illustrious its narrow limits. Most evident is it, that we are now living in the days predicted by the Hebrew Prophet—when "many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased."

1. Foremost among these may be placed the use of ether, inhaled for facilitating surgical operations. Like all other appliances of this kind, it meets with failures, and even with fatal results in a few cases. But for one fatal result and five failures we have five hundred instances of vast benefit, in many of which, beyond all doubt, lives have been saved which would otherwise have been lost. Without describing it as infallible, or in all cases safe or to be relied on, there can be no doubt that this discovery has conferred vast benefits on mankind.

2. The substitution of a new explosive material—the gun-cotton—in place of gunpowder, is another remarkable event. The extent of its utility is not yet ascertained. Whether it will be largely adopted in warfare is still a point on which no decided opinion has been formed. But of its great utility in all blasting and mining operations, not the slightest doubt can exist. It is both cheaper and more powerful than gunpowder; and the absence of smoke gives it a decided advantage. There can remain no question, that in all works of this description, the new agent will rapidly supersede the old one.

3. The third discovery of 1846 is perhaps even of greater importance than either of the former. We allude to the lately patented process for smelting copper by means of electricity. The effect of this change will be quite prodigious. It produces, in less than two days, what the old process required three weeks to effect. And the saving of fuel is so vast, that in Swansea alone the smelters estimate their annual saving in coals at no less than five hundred thousand pounds.—Hence it is clear that the price of copper must be so enormously reduced as to bring it into use for a variety of purposes from which its cost at present excludes it.

The facility and cheapness of the process, too, will enable the ore to be largely smelted on the spot. The Cornish mine proprietors are anxiously expecting the moment when they can bring the ore which lay in the mine yesterday, into a state to be sent to market to-morrow; and this at the very mouth of the mine. In Australia, also, the operation of this discovery will be of the utmost importance. Ten thousand tons of copper ore were sent from Australia to England last year to be smelted at Swansea; and the result was only 1600 tons of copper. But Australia in future will smelt her own copper, by a 36-hours' process; saving all this useless freight of the 3400 tons of refuse; and saving also the cost of the old and expensive process. In a very few years Australia will send to market more copper than is now produced by all the rest of the world. But if our future penny-pieces are to bear any proportion to the reduced cost and value of the metal, they must be made of the size of dinner plates.

A Good Story.

The following excellent story is told of Mr. Sheaf, a grocer in Portsmouth, New Hampshire:

It appears that a man had purchased a quantity of wool from him, which had been weighed and paid for, and Mr. S. had gone to the desk to get change for a note. Happening to turn his head while there, he saw, in a glass that hung so as to reflect the shop, a stout arm reach up and take from the shelf a heavy white oak cheese. Instead of appearing suddenly and rebuking the man for his theft, as another would, thereby losing his custom forever, the crafty old gentleman gave the thief his change, as if nothing had happened, and then under pretence of lifting the bag to his horse for him took hold of it; on doing so, it appeared heavier than he appeared to expect, upon which he exclaimed:

'Why, bless me, I must have reckoned the weight wrong.'

'O, no,' said the other, 'you may be sure you have not, for I counted them with you.'

'Well, well, we don't dispute about the matter—it is easily tried,' said Mr. S., putting the bag into the scale again. 'There!' said he, 'I told you so—I knew I was right—made a mistake of nearly twenty pounds, however, if you don't want the whole, you needn't have it—I'll take a part of it out.'

'No, no,' said the other, staying the hands of Mr. S. on their way to the bag, 'I rather guess I'll take the whole!'

And he did, paying for his rascality by receiving skim milk cheese, or trap rock, at the price of wool.

NEITHER THIS NOR THAT.—A gentleman who had been active in aiding a missionary collection, was met the following day by one of different habits, who chided him with the folly of which he deemed him guilty, in giving to such an object, and in such profusion. It was folly, he said, to be sending heaps of money abroad, to be spent no one knew how, while there were so many unemployed, starving poor at home.—'I will give £— to the poor of ———, if you will give an equal sum,' said the Christian friend. 'I did not mean that,' replied the objector; 'but,' continued he, 'if you must go from home, why so far? Think of the miserable poor of Ireland.' 'I will give £— to the poor of Ireland, if you will do the same.' 'I do not mean that either,' was the reply. No, it is neither this nor that which this class of objectors exactly mean; but simply to veil their covetousness by blaming the proceedings of liberal men, whom, if they did not condemn, they must, for very shame, in some degree imitate.

RELIGION AND POLITICS.—A Christian has no right, any where or under any circumstances, to be any thing else than a Christian. He must ask about a political as well as about any other act, the question, Is it right or wrong? and by the answer to that question must he be guided. It is just as wicked to lie about politics as to lie about merchandise. It is just as immoral to act without reverence to the law of God at a caucus, as any where else. To prefer our own interests or the interests of a party, to that of our country, is treason against that country, and sin against God.—And it matters not whether that treason be perpetrated with ballot or bayonet, at caucus or in the field. And still more, no man can more surely be putting an end to his religion. That man may yet find himself in eternity without his religion, and it may not be there quite so easy as it is on earth to resume it. "There is no shuffling." —Wayland.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

OHIO HARMONIST.

The HARMONIST will contain a choice selection of about 150 pages of Psalm and Hymn tunes, compiled with much care from the best authors in the United States, to which is added a supplement of Temperance songs, designed for the use of congregations, singing schools, temperance meetings, and musical associations.

It will be arranged in three parts,—parts first and third contain the seven syllables in the patent notes; the seven sounds being represented by SEVEN DIFFERENT CHARACTERS, to wit:—do, ru, mi, fa, sul, la, si.

Part second contains the four syllables in the old patent notes.

It will also contain the rudiments of music on a plain and concise plan.

The object of the publishers in getting up this work, is to assist the public in singing the do, ru, mi system with much ease and accuracy, without being compelled to go through a long and tedious study of the round note system.

It also contains a Hindoo piece, accompanied with both the Hindoo and English languages.

The entire work will be executed on good paper and in a neat and substantial manner, and bound in good style, by J. A. & U. P. James, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

The work will be completed about the first of June next.

TERMS.—The OHIO HARMONIST will be delivered to subscribers at seventy-five cents per single copy, to be paid on delivery. A reasonable discount will be made to wholesale purchasers. All orders addressed to the undersigned at Washington, Guernsey county, Ohio, or Deersville, Harrison county, Ohio, or J. A. & U. P. James, Cincinnati, accompanied with the cash, and post paid, will be promptly attended to.

PROSPECTUS

FOR PUBLISHING A SERIES OF VOLUMES OF SERMONS,

By the Rev. Thomas Potter, Minister of the M. P. Church.

VOLUME I.

THE EVANGELICAL ECONOMY DEVELOPED, IN A SERIES OF DISCOURSES ON THE FACTS, INSTITUTIONS, APPLIANCES, EFFECTS, AND FINAL RESULTS OF THE CHRISTIAN SYSTEM, VIZ:

I. The dispensation of the Gospel the subject of prophetic anticipation.
II. The evangelic announcement of the Savior's nativity.
III. The divine mandate at the incarnation of the Son of God.
IV. The introduction of the Mediatorial economy the subject of rejoicing in heaven.
V. The work of grace on the day of Pentecost the model for religious revivals.
VI. The primitive Evanglisits the patterns of all succeeding preachers.
VII. The divine institution for saving the world.
VIII. The moral revolutions which the triumphs of the Gospel accomplish.
IX. The religious excitement produced by the successful preaching of the Gospel, defended.
X. The principal cause of the failure of the agencies of Christianity.
XI. The penitent sinner on earth the delight of the Angels in heaven.
XII. The final consummation of the dispensation of grace in the solemnities of the day of judgment.

The views embodied in these discourses are such as are held in common by all evangelical denominations. The author eschews all controversy. The style is didactic. Nothing sectarian has a place in these sermons, which are simply devoted to popular impression and instruction. It is proposed to put to the Press these Sermons as soon as a sufficient number of subscribers have been secured to justify their publication. If the author meet with adequate encouragement in the sale of this first Volume, it will be succeeded by a second, and so on.

[The contents of the second, third, fourth and fifth volumes are also given in the prospectus which has been furnished us, but as the first volume is to be published separately, the above will sufficiently for the present, indicate the nature and plan of the work. ED.]

The whole of these discourses were prepared and delivered during a not unsuccessful ministry of upwards of twenty years, partly in this country and partly in Great Britain; and are already committed to writing.

Each Volume will be sold at the moderate charge of One Dollar, to be paid for on delivery.

The Volumes will be neatly bound,—octavo size,—and printed on good paper, in a clear type. Each Volume will contain upwards of three hundred pages. Subscriptions will be received for the first Volume alone; or for the first and second; or the whole series may be subscribed for at once.

MR. LEVI PETIT is authorized to receive subscriptions for these contemplated publications; or a letter addressed to the author, Mount Vernon, Knox county, Ohio, with a request over the writer's signature, to become a subscriber, will insure the insertion of his name on the subscribtion list. [May 20.] THOMAS POTTER.

Letters to an Eminent Minister.

LETTER IV.

Partial Pastoral Visitation, Etc.

[Concluded.]

But let us now, sir, turn our attention more especially to pastoral visitation. Pastoral Visitation—and I here use the term in its generally received acceptation—has become, to a remarkable extent, obsolete, in the estimation of many professed ministers. There was a time in the history of the church, when it was esteemed one of the great means of a minister's success, and productive of great good will and unanimity of feeling among his flock. And if we look for the great secret of success that now attends the labors of many of our preachers, and the coldness and spiritual dearth that follow in the wake of the administration of others, we shall find the former kind in their disposition, and faithful in pastoral visitation; while the latter are reserved, dignified, and scarcely ever found crossing the threshold of the homes of their members.

And what are the arguments advanced by the latter to sanction their dereliction in this great duty? They will tell you that it is too great a tax on their most precious time—it infringes upon their pulpit duties—requiring six days' labor to prepare for the exercises of the Sabbath day.—They forget, however, that they are called to this work—that it is a duty religiously enjoined upon them. What is a true minister's object, but to do good? And if he can do good by pastoral visitation—and he can perform a great amount of good—why object to it? why not enter upon it with all his heart? There is too much preaching, of the kind. The people are preached spiritually to death. Pray more, visit more, and greater good will result. Look at the early pioneers of the cross, especially of Methodism—and they were certainly not behind their modern successors in christian graces and usefulness:—they could prepare for the services of the sanctuary, preaching six or a dozen sermons in a week, occasionally, and yet be frequent in out door labors. But alas! a change has come over the age; and some of our modern ministers and people, have discovered that our fathers were but poorly qualified for the emergencies and wants of their times; and if they should now be called from their repose in the grave to administer in sacred things, they would be found totally unqualified to stand up before this polite, refined, and intelligent generation—loud in their pretensions to nicety—great sticklers for fine preaching and systematic discourses—but, alas! wofully deficient in christian graces and sterling piety.

There are, however, (mirabile dictu) certain professed ministers who are deeply engaged in pastoral visitation. They visit frequently, and stay visit long; not parsimonious or niggardly with their time. They are the most laborious and industrious men in this line, their hands generally itching to get hold of the "knocker," or "bell pull," of some respectable or fashionable dwelling. And now let us call up, for illustration, our quondam minister whom we left on his way to the house of his wealthy member. See with what dignity he ascends the steps; how delicately he touches the "knocker,"—("knockers," however, my dear sir, are as obsolete now in the fashionable world, as pastoral visitation is among the poor!)—or nervously "pulls the bell!" While waiting for admission, see what graceful lines he traces on the door-step, with his silver-tipped cane—how complacently he takes a survey of his dignified ministerial figure, throws his cloak back on his right shoulder, smooths down his "beautiful dickey" and satin vest, places his right black kid glove in his left hand, ready for a cordial shake; or in polite parlance, a pressure according to the interest felt in the welfare of the occupants of the dwelling, and vice versa. The door opens and he is ushered in to "splendid apartments" by Dick, the boot black, or Sukey, the waiting maid. This, to you, sir, may be an extravagant picture; but I will assure you, I draw from life, and have the original in my mind's eye.

These are the dwellings that receive such minister's visits, and these the inmates to receive them: the honorable—the rich—the chosen few; while the great mass of their brethren, are left without the visitations of their pastor, their servant, who lives upon their generosity, and is clothed by their liberality. Shall I not say it—and yet say it to the shame of my brethren, that the time has unfortunately come, when many Methodist and other ministers visit the homes of the rich merely to banquet on the luxuries of life, and to realize their own temporal ease and comfort; neglecting the humbler abodes and repast of their poorer brethren. At such places their calls are not "like angel's visits—few and far between!" nor the lack of time, nor the importance of pulpit preparation are sufficiently important to prevent an early and frequent call or late attendance. Lack of time, indeed! yes, to visit the abodes of the poor; but time sufficient to pay court to the wealthy and honorable. What a pity, that such ministers forget the lessons of the Great Teacher, and the meek and benevolent example of Him who was pre-eminently the Friend of the Poor! They can deliver formal lessons of charity from the pulpit by the quantity; but to carry and retail it in the humble abodes of the poor, requires more grace than, it is to be feared, they are in possession of. What does the Apostle James say of such conduct:—"If ye have respect to persons ye commit sin; and are convinced of the law as transgressors."—(James II: 9.) The neglect of, or a partial and exclusive pastoral visitation, has been the cause of many heart burnings and jealous feelings among brethren, placed the church in some of her severest trials, and rent her bosom with many a bitter pang.

In conclusion, sir, I earnestly request you to search your Bible, and turn and read the thirty-fourth chapter of Ezekiel. Happy will be that minister who comes not under any one specification of wrong pleaded against the false shepherds!

I remain, Rev. sir, yours, &c., ANON.

REMINISCENCES

OF THE FIRST SETTLEMENT OF OHIO.

NO. X.

Friend Bassett: I had purposed in my mind, to relieve you from any further details, of the suffering of our early settlers by the Indian war, but having recently had a conversation with Mr. Wm. Dana, of Washington county, one of the early inhabitants of the upper Stockade in Belpre, from whom I learned many facts, in regard to the attack on Mr. Armstrong's family, at the head of the Island, called Blanerhassetts, which I have mentioned, and finding I had been in error as to Mr. Armstrong's being killed, and also that I was mistaken as to the place where Ned Henderson died, whom I have mentioned as one of our early spies, and the pioneer in voyages to New Orleans, I have concluded to make this correction and add some additional particulars of these events; and a little new matter.

The season before Henderson made his second, and last trip to New Orleans; the first vessel for sea was built at the point, in Marietta, by a company. The master builder, was Captain Jonathan Devol, and she was called the St. Clair, after the first Governor of the territory. Commodore Abraham Whipple, one of the revolutionary patriots, and as I have said, an early settler, was selected to navigate her. The enterprize was new, and daring, but was characteristic of the enterprize of New England men, and the energy of those who had conducted us through the Revolution; and, had then led the early settlement of this "far of West" as it was at that day. Mr. Wm. Dana was one of the crew of that vessel, a brig of about 100 tons. When she reached New Orleans, Henderson took passage on, entered as a hand. The vessel put into the Havanah and the consequence was that most of the crew, and passengers, had the black vomit, or yellow fever, before she reached Philadelphia the port of her destination. And, Henderson was very active in taking care of the sick, and navigating the vessel. He only I believe remained well until they reached the quarantine ground below Philadelphia. There he was taken sick much as the rest had been. There had been one death on board during the passage, and Henderson had assisted in making an inventory of his effects; amongst which was a paper of medicine, which they took to be salts; when Henderson become sick, he requested Dana to get this for him, which he took; when he had taken it Mr. D. offered him some water to rinse his mouth, which he refused saying I have taken something that tastes sweet, and if I do not get rid of it soon, it will kill me. He then ran on deck and swallowed a large quantity of fat from the vessel they had boiled their meat in. This as he intended vomited him; still his disease increased;—he was sent to the hospital at the quarantine ground, and died the next day: whether of the disease, or in consequence of the medicine, Mr. D. thinks doubtful: thus fell one of our best men. (I have before mentioned New York as the place of his death.)

Mr. Dana was well acquainted with Mr. Armstrong, who had lived in Belpre before he built the mill on the Virginia side of the Island opposite the Stockade; and was one of the party who went over to the house, about sunrise, after the attack. Captain Haver of this place has heard one of Mr. Armstrongs sons, who was taken prisoner, relate the circumstances. From these I gather the following:

The river hill, rose almost from the bank, where the cabin was built. Turkeys were plenty, and Mr. A. had frequently killed them on the hill. As day began to dawn, he heared turkeys, as he supposed on the hill. In order to secure a shot before they left the roost, he went out. He had a dog with him: either from the dog, or some other circumstance, he became alarmed, and retreated to the house and barring the door; the Indians pursued, and endeavored to get it open, but failing on the first attempt, they took a rail to effect their purpose; while they were endeavoring to gain entrance, Mr. A. snaped his gun, in an attempt to shoot, but it did not go off: he then ascended to the loft, & removed some of the roof, and escaped through it, on the backside, while the Indians were breaking down the door. The alarm was given to the Stockade in upper Belpre, and a party went over. They found Mr. A. and the two eldest sons who had been in the mill. Mrs. Armstrong they found dead on the outside of the cabin, she appeared as if she had attempted to escape from the roof, as her husband had; she was a heavy woman, and had probably broken her leg in the fall, as it was found to be broken. Two children were dead, and a little girl still alive, but insensible, though when disturbed she would say "what's that?" Mrs. A. and two children were scalped; one child about two years of age was not. Two sons that were in the cabin were taken prisoners, and carried to their towns, where they remained until the close of the war, when their elder brothers brought them from the Indian country. The sons still live in or near Columbus.

Soon after the war, a family of Indians came past the residence of our fellow citizen, Levi Chapman, then living on Duck Creek, amongst whom was a man and his wife. They went to Marietta, where the husband one day, was in a drinking frolic with a man by the name of Scott. Scott was what we termed a back-woods-man, that is one raised on the frontier, where they had been familiar with Indian warfare; and loving a frolic would drink with any body. In the evening Scott and the Indian walked out. In the morning the Indian was missing, and Scott was lame and had his foot bound up: nothing could be heard of the Indian for some days, when his body was found in the middle of the Ohio, below the point of the Island, with a wound in the head as from a tommahawk, and a rope in which it appeared a stone had been put to sink the body. Scott was arrested and tried for the murder, but was acquitted. He afterwards confessed to some persons that he did kill the Indian;. and related the circumstances. It seems that the Indian in retaliation for some taunts of Scott, stated that he had at a certain place, killed and scalped a white man, and mimicked the contortions of his victims face while he was scalping him &c. Scott said he recognized in the relation of the Indian the circumstances of the killing of his father (or some near relative) and from that moment determined to kill him. In the evening he asked the Indian to walk with him:—they went up a street not much frequented, divirging a little from the river; while the Indian was walking before, Scott said to him "I am going to kill you." "Kill me!" said the Indian as he suddenly turned upon Scott and drew his knife; Scott struck him with his tommahawk and as the Indian fell forward with his knife in a striking posture it entered the foot of Scott. Surprised at the effects of his own blow, Scott knew not what to do, but finally carried him to the canoe and having attached a stone to the body paddled out into the river and hove the body in. The woman seemed inconsolable when she returned past the houses on Duck Creek. The women of that settlement tried to console her but her husband "was not," and she refused to be comforted. War has slain its thousands, of the primitive inhabitants of our State, but whiskey its ten thousands. Much as the passions of our people have been excited by the barbarous method of warfare practiced by the savage, do we not owe them much, in the way of reparation of the wrongs they have suffered at the hand of our countrymen.

Mr. Editor, I would here take leave of you, and your readers, upon this subject, thanking you for the patience with which you have borne with the prolixity of these numbers, but like some others, I still desire another word. I have heard so much romance in regard to one who came to Marietta soon after the close of the war, and the events with which he was connected subsequently, that I feel a desire to make one or possibly two communications in regard to Harman Blane rhassett, and the Burr excitement, if you will give me room at some future day. HORACE NYE.

Putnam, May 27, 1847.

The Telegraph.—The American Messenger relates the following of the inventor of the Telegraph: "He had occasion to leave the city to attend a meeting of the Directors of the Western line, at Utica, at a time when he was anxiously expecting intelligence from a daughter, who had sailed for a foreign port. At Albany no despatch was received. At Utica, with a heart burdened with anxiety, he went to the office of the Telegraph, communicated with New York, and received the almost instantaneous reply that the 'Cayuga had arrived at ——, in twelve days, all well.' He handed the despatch to the Board, with the remark, that, 'If his invention had been instrumental of affording relief but to one anxious father's heart, similarly circumstanced, it would be a sufficient reward for all his thought and toil in perfecting his Telegraph.'"

How to choose a Wife.—"A place for every thing, and every thing in its place," said the patriarch to his daughter. "Select a wife, my son, who will never step over a broomstick." The son was obedient to the lesson. "Now," said he pleasantly, on a gay May day, to one of his companions, "I appoint that broomstick to choose me a wife. The young lady who will not step over it shall have the offer of my hand." They passed from the splendid saloon to the grove; some stumbled over the broomstick, and others jumped it. At length a young lady stooped, and put it in its place. The promise was fulfilled.—She became the wife of an educated and wealthy young man, and he the husband of a prudent, industrious and lovely wife. He brought a fortune to her, and she knew how to save one. It was not easy to decide which was under the greatest obligations. Both were rich, and each enriched the other.

THE ANNIVERSARIES.

[The Anniversaries of the principal Benevolent Societies were recently held in New York. The proceedings occupy a large space in the columns of some eastern Journals. We take the following condensed statement from the Sabbath Recorder, a Seventh Day Baptist paper published in New York. Ed. W. R.]

The American Seaman's Friend Society held its 19th Anniversary at the Tabernacle on Monday evening, at which the Annual Report was read, and several speeches were made. The receipts of the society during the year were $17,515, while the disbursements were $17,908, not including local expenditures, nor a legacy lately received of $2,400. The Sailor's Home, under the care of this Society, has accommodated 4,319 sailor boarders within the year, and 18,256 within the last five years.

The Foreign Evangelical Society held a public meeting on Tuesday evening. The object of this Society is to disseminate the Gospel, according to the tenets of the Reformed Protestant churches, throughout the world. To advance this object, preachers and colporteurs are employed in different countries, particularly the Catholic countries of Europe. Dr. Baird, the Corresponding Secretary of the Society, has journeyed some 18,000 miles in his recent tour through Europe, for the purpose of learning the actual condition and wants of Protestantism, and the best way to promote its vitality.

The American and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society held its Anniversary Meeting in the Tabernacle on Tuesday afternoon. Arthur Tappan presided, and Lewis Tappan read the Annual Report. The receipts of the past year have amounted to $12,535, and the expenditures to $8,127. In consequence of the ill health of the Corresponding Secretary, Rev. A. A. Phelps, it has been found impossible to carry out all the plans devised at the last annual meeting. Mr. Phelps has recently returned from a visit to the West Indies, but in feeble health. The war with Mexico was spoken of in the Report with abhorrence, and a strong belief was expressed in conclusion, that the day is hastening when this country will be free to all. Remarks to appropriate resolutions were made by S. P. Andrews, Esq., of Boston, Rev. H. H. Garnett, of Troy, Rev. Joshua Leavitt, Rev. W. W. Patton, and Rev. S. R. Ward.

A Public Breakfast of this Society was attended on Wednesday morning in the large room under the Tabernacle. About five hundred persons, many of them people of color, were present. After disposing of the creature comforts, speeches were made by Messrs. Colver, Leavitt, Snodgrass, Davis, and Houston.

The American Female Moral Reform Society held its Annual Meeting on Tuesday evening. This Society has been in existence thirteen years; has several hundred auxiliaries; a periodical, averaging in issue of 11,000 or 12,000 semi-monthly; has published 10,000 volumes of the "Walks of Usefulness," and more than a million pages of Tracts. It has now in contemplation the erection of a "House of Industry and Home for the Friendless," whose design shall be to furnish a temporary home and employment for destitute and deserving women, till they can be provided for respectably and safely; also for friendless, homeless children, till places can be procured for them by adoption or otherwise. One hundred and eight life-members have been added to the Society during the year, making in all 806.

The American Home Missionary Society's 21st Anniversary was held on Wednesday evening. The Annual Report states that owing to severe pecuniary embarrassment during a large portion of the year, the Executive Committee have been hindered from undertaking most of the enlargement that was proposed a year ago. They have however appointed thirty-two new missionaries in the Western States. The receipts have been $116,170. The Society has had in its service, the past year, 972 ministers of the Gospel, in 26 different States and Territories, including two who are about to proceed to Oregon. The number of congregations supplied, in whole or in part, is 1,470. A change having been made in the time of closing the missionary year, the returns for this year cover only eleven months. In this period, the missionaries have performed an aggregate of 713 years' labor.

The American Tract Society held its 22d Anniversary at the Tabernacle on Wednesday morning, at which the various reports were read, and several addresses delivered. The result of the past year's labors may be summed up as follows:—

New publications 48, in five languages, making the whole number 1,252, of which 212 are volumes. In foreign lands 98 new publications have been sanctioned; making a total of 2169, including 172 volumes. The circulation has been greater, by nearly 30,000,000 of pages, than during the previous year; amonting to 515,975 volumes, 5,841,580 publications, or 153,575,624 pages. Total in 22 years, 3,375,624 volumes, 39,693,713 publications, 1,823,272,025. The gratuitous distribution by foreign missionaries, and chaplains to the army and navy, seamen and boatmen, Sunday schools, literary and humane institutions, home missionaries, colporteurs, etc. in 1,234 distinct grants, amounts to 31,096,748 pages. Issued to life-members and directors, 4,828,460 pages. Total, 35,926,208; in value nearly $24,000. The American Messenger has had an average monthly circulation of 60,000. The receipts for 11½ months, to April 1, exceed those of any previous year by $6,214, amounting to $160,131—of which for publications, $92,360, in donations, $67,770. The sum of $20,742 is due for paper previous to September 18. The Society's house has been rebuilt, for greater security, economy, and efficiency, by a loan secured on the premises, without drawing any thing from the charitable contributions.

The American Bible Society held its 31st Anniversary at the Tabernacle on Thursday morning. The Treasurer's Report stated that the receipts for the year had been $205,058, being $7,760 more than the previous year. The Managers' Report stated, that during the year 110 Auxiliary Societies had been recognized in nineteen different States and Territories: 649 persons had been made Life Members and Life Directors; and 671,500 Bibles and Testaments, in English, German, and French, had been printed, most of which had been circulated. Ten thousand dollars had been appropriated to aid in the circulation of a new version of the Scriptures about to be issued in China, and about the same sum to aid in publishing the Hebrew-Spanish, Hebrew-German, and modern American Scriptures in the Levant. $18,000 had been appropriated to assist in publishing Bibles at foreign missionary stations.

The American Temperance Union held its Anniversary on Thursday evening. The report gave a brief account of the World's Temperance Convention, and alluded to the progress of the temperance cause in this country. There is no liquor sold on any of the railroads running out of Boston, and one of the roads has resolved not to carry any intoxicating liquors. Among seamen, and in the army and navy, abstinence has increased. In Sweden and Germany, great progress has been made, and in the former kingdom 500 distilleries have been closed. In India, there is much prosperous temperance action. The report acknowledges donations of $1,522. After the reading of the report, addresses were delivered by Mr. Scudder, Rev. Mr. Todd, Rev. Mr. Ludlow, and Dr. Hewitt.

The American Society for Meliorating the Condition of the Jews held an anniversary meeting on Thursday evening. The Treasurer's Report showed that the receipts had been $6690, while the expenses had been about the same. This Society does not design to organize distinct churches of converted Jews, but leaves the convert free to unite with that religious society which may have been instrumental in his conversion, or where his inclinations may lead him. Six of this class have been brought under the influence of the Gospel the past year, and received into the communion of the church.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions celebrated their anniversary on Friday morning. The Report stated that more than 500 persons were connected with the mission operations of this Board. Their number has been considerably increased within the year, and twenty new missionaries are ready to go forth before next winter. But the receipts have fallen off. The expenses of the Board are about three hundred thousand dollars a year, and the hope to raise that sum during the year to come. The missions are generally in a prosperous condition, particularly among the Nestorians, in the Sandwich Islands, and in China.

American and Foreign Sabbath Union.—A sermon was preached before this Society on Sunday evening, by Pres. Hopkins of Williams College. His text was Isaiah 58: 13, 14. The design of the sermon was "to show, on Scripture grounds, the religious and moral duty of keeping holy the Sabbath; that the prosperity or adversity of the Jews was much connected with pure Sabbath-keeping; that the command of God to keep the Sabbath is still in force, and that its observance is essential to the preservation of our free institutions, the danger to which is not from without, but from corruptions within, working under the forms of liberty."

The Evangelical Alliance.—This body held another meeting on Tuesday last week. The subject of slavery was brought up soon after the opening of the meeting. But after debating it most of the forenoon, they passed a vote the effect of which was to secure an indefinite postponement of all farther action. In the afternoon they succeeded in electing officers, and made Hon. Chief Justice Hornblower, President. They also determined that Romans 15: 7 should be adopted as the motto of the Alliance—"Wherefore receive ye one another, as Christ also received us, for the glory of God." On a motion to publish the names of Members of the Conference, Dr. Cox said his only objection was, that there were so few of them. He was ashamed of such a paucity, and was sorry to see that there was so little Christian feeling. There were many eminent clergymen in New York and Brooklyn who stood aloof, and exhibited no interest in the Alliance. Without determining to publish, the Alliance adjourned to meet next year. The New York Tribune, in closing a report of the meeting, says: "We must not omit to add, that during the whole of the appointment of officers, and the subsequent proceedings, a good degree of hilarity prevailed in the Conference, and several first rate clerical jokes were perpetrated with perfect success."

MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCE.

From the Missionary Herald.

Madura.

Under date of September 29th, Mr. Muzzy wrote as follows: "A delegate from a new village is now before me, pleading for Christian instruction. He says that the people of his village are willing to sign the usual paper in order to put themselves under our care. Four villages are now on the point of coming to us."

This mission has addressed a letter to the Prudential Committee, dated October 27th, setting forth the claims of the wide and promising field in which the Providence of God has placed them. "Including Poothacortta in this district," they say "there are upwards of 1,500,000 inhabitants; a number greater by 77,449 than is contained in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Hampshire and Vermont." "Nor does this include the many large towns and the abundant population just without our southern and northern borders, which will, in all probability, be reached only by laborers from this mission." "There seems to be a tacit understanding that the Madura district is committed to the care of the American Board; so that it appears to be quite certain that if it does not supply these thousands and hundreds of thousands with the bread of life, they must suffer the fearful consequences of not being supplied." After presenting these general considerations, and saying that this whole region is accessible and whitening for an abundant harvest, the letter contains a particular description of thirty-four places, which ought to be occupied with the least possible delay. But where are the men? The increase of missionary feeling in some of our theological seminaries is very animating; still the wants of the different missions are far from being adequately supplied. And it is with sentiments of the deepest sorrow that the Committee are obliged to say, that their efforts to procure a physician for Madura have thus far proved unavailing. The lives of our brethren and sisters are put in jeopardy; and some, there is reason to fear, have already fallen, in consequence of this lack of medical skill.

Mr. Muzzy wrote again, November 4, "The people in most of the congregations already under our care are evidently making progress in the knowledge of God; and some are wishing to be admitted to the church. We hope soon to be able to gratify this desire."

Letters from Messrs. Cherry and Muzzy, dated December 4, announce the death of Mrs. Muzzy, on the day previous. She has suffered much from ill health during the ten years of her missionary life; but God has nevertheless enabled her to do something in his service. At the time of her death there was unusual attention to the subject of religion in the boarding school under her care; and some, it is hoped, have recently passed from death unto life. So greatly did the natives mourn her loss, that many went from Tirupoovanum and Tirumungalum to Madura to see her remains. The funeral was attended by six or eight hundred persons.

Canton.—A letter has been received from this mission, dated September 1, from which it appears that our brethren are carrying forward their operations much as heretofore. The whole number of patients admitted to the hospital since it was opened, eleven years ago, is 22,626; of whom 2,084 were received during the first eight months of 1846. About 8,400 volumes of Chinese books, chiefly portions of the New Testament, have been distributed from the hospital.—Divine service in Chinese has been regularly held at this place, except for a few weeks during the annual repairs, the congregations varying from fifteen to one hundred. Leang Afa has rendered almost constant assistance to Messrs. Bridgman and Parker, in sustaining this service.

Messrs. Johnson and Peet arrived at Whampoa from Bangkok on the 30th of October, and took up their temporary abode in Canton on the 2d of November. Mr. Johnson has since gone to Fu-Chau-Fu, for the purpose of ascertaining its advantages as a missionary residence. There is no Protestant missionary in that city.

Mr. Bridgeman writes, November 23, "In regard to the members of my Bible class who have desired baptism and wished to be formed into a church, I am anxious to have their desires fulfilled, as soon as the mission shall give its consent. They have all been constant in their attendance, except the oldest. For attempting to lease to me a site of ground on which to build, he has been held in duress by one of the Chinese magistrates for the last ten days."

Choctaws.—A letter from M. C. C. Copeland, dated at Norwalk, February 3, describes the improvement made by the Choctaws, since he went to reside among them, as great. "It is perceptible," he says, "in every thing; and in nothing more than in the interest that is manifested in schools. Great efforts are made by the leading men to establish schools, and a strong desire is manifested by the people to avail themselves of the benefits of the schools. The applicants for admission to the boarding schools would fill twice as many." Five persons were admitted to the church at Wheelock at the communion immediately preceding the date of this letter.

Sioux.—Mr. Wriggs writes from Lac Qui Parle, December 29, stating that the attendance on his Dakota service had been "somewhat encouraging." The school at that station had also been "pretty well attended." At the date of his letter, however, most of the Indians were absent in pursuit of buffaloes.

Doct. Williamson makes the following statements, under date of February 2, respecting the Indians at Kapoja, his new station: "Last autumn the chief and a number of his young men went to their agent and touched a writing, promising to abstain entirely from intoxicating drinks for seven moons; and he and several others have thus far strictly kept their pledge. I think he is disposed to favor our operations, from the belief that it will increase his own importance, and improve the temporal condition of his people. The others who ask for schools, are probably influenced in the same way, and while we pray that they may be affected by better motives, we must be thankful if even through ambition or avarice a door is opened for preaching the gospel among them. The chief thinks that each of the seven villages which receive annuities, will soon ask for teachers. Our school has averaged, for the last six days, fifteen scholars, the whole number who have attended being twenty-three. Most of them are making good progress."

New York Indians.—Within the last few weeks there has been unusual attention to the preaching of the gospel at both the Cattaraugus stations. Several have been admitted to the church, and others are candidates for the same privilege.

From the Colonization Herald.

Liberia.

Extent.—Liberia extends from Digby at the mouth of the Poor River, on the north-west, to Cavally River on the south-east, between 4 deg. 20 min, and 6 deg. 40 min. north latitude, and 7. deg. 30 min. and 11 deg. west long. from Greenwich.

The length of coast between Digby and the Cavally River is about three hundred miles. Inwards, the territory of Liberia extends from 20 to 30 miles. The right of possession and jurisdiction over the greater part of this line has been purchased by the American and the Maryland Colonization Societies.

Population.—The inhabitants of Liberia, emigrants from the United States and their children, number three thousand two hundred; of whom, seven hundred occupy the Maryland Colony at Cape Palmas.

To these, may be added, about five hundred natives, civilized and admitted to the privileges of the polls and the rights of citizenship in general.

The natives, residing on land owned by the colony, and directly amenable to its laws, are estimated at from 10,000 to 15,000.

The population of the allied tribes in the interior, who are bound by treaty to abstain from the slave trade and some other barbarous practices, is not known: it has been estimated at from 60,000 to 120,000.

Towns and Settlements.*—Monrovia on the south side of Cape Mesurado, near the north-western boundary of Liberia, is the Capitol and chief place of trade. Population 1000.

The other ports, not counting those in the Maryland Colony, are, Marshall on the Junk River, Edina on the St. John's River, Bassa Cove, and Greenville on the Sinoe River.

The more inland towns and their adjoining settlements are Caldwell, New Georgia, Millsburg, and Bexley.

Productions of the Soil.—Coffee, sugar cane, rice, cotton, indigo, Indian corn, potatoes, yams, cassada, bananas, arrow root and groundnuts may be produced in any quantity. Fruits are various and abundant. These are all grown in Liberia.

Exports.—The chief exports are camwood, palm oil and ivory, to the amount of $123,690 in two years, ending Sept. 1843, according to official returns. These are brought from the interior.

Imports.—The imports for the two years, as above, amounted to $157,830.

Rerigious Aspect.—Churches 23: Communicants, 15000; of whom 500 are natives and recaptured Africans.

Education.—Schools, 16; Scholars, 560; of whom, are native Africans.

*The statistics of the Maryland Colony at Cape Palmas, are not given in the following statement.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Wilmington, Ohio, May 24, 1847.

Bro. Bassett: I have just returned from our Quarterly Meeting for Port William Circuit, held at Paintersville, in the adjoining county, and being a lay member, and quite a poor and barren one at that, I am not as well qualified to speak of the prosperity of Zion in general, and of our branch of Christ's church in particular, as it is perhaps my privilege and duty to be. Permit me however, to say, that the cause is steadily and permanently on the advance on Port William Circuit, and that the meeting at Paintersville, although not characterized by any unusual excitement while I remained, was what you Old Methodists would call a "good meeting." Christians seemed melted down and assimilated together in love, and I do think that the faithful, laborious and well directed efforts of Brother Rose must be blessed. I received the last number of the Recorder very opportunely on Friday evening, containing the letter of our good old father Jonathan Flood: at the close of the Quarterly Conference I read that part of the old pioneer's letter which detailed his destitution on the morning after his house and goods were burned, which with the gratitude and thankfulness to God for sparing the lives of his family, expressed in the same paragraph brought tears from our eyes, and without remark one brother after another laid on the table, in quite a small Quarterly Conference, Eleven Dollars, for his relief. Brother Rose will forward. Such acts of duty, do me more good, than twenty arguments upon ten resolutions, embracing all the abstract principles, of all popular moral reforms of the day. The tree is known by its fruit.

Yours, truly,
ALANSON JONES.

Paintersville, Ohio, May 24, 1847.

Bro. Bassett: I will just say that our circuit is in a healthy condition, though we are rather cold in religion. The resolutions of our friends seem as good as they ever did; but we have had no large revivals this year; yet we are encouraged by occasional accessions to almost all our classes. We have dedicated one meeting house since conference, and another is under way.

Brother White was with us at two protracted meetings, and labored successfully. Our friends were much edified under his ministry. Our prayer is that he may be restored to permanent health again.

Our Conference Missionary Father McGuire, has had one meeting on the circuit.

Our third Quarterly meeting has just closed.—This was a precious meeting. We had an unusually large and solemn communion—a very spiritual lovefeast on Monday morning, and all things passed off well. Brother Warrington was with us and rendered acceptable service.

We are still praying for a greater revival.—May God answer our prayers.

Yours, &c.,
REUBEN ROSE, Sup't.

P. S.—The 33d number of the Western Recorder under date of the 20th, reached Wilmington the night before our meeting began. Our good Brother Jones brought the paper directly to Quarterly Conference, and after the other business was over, read a part of Brother Flood's letter which told of his destitute condition. He laid down the paper and said, Brethren, shall we see one of our old pioneers in distress and not assist him? No speech was called for. It was Brother Flood in need. Over ten dollars was paid in immediately. I have taken up some private collections; I think I can raise fifteen dollars to send by the next mail. Brother Flood has our warmest sympathy.—May God grant that his last days may yet be prosperous. R. R.

Mt. Blanchard Circuit, May 25, 1847.

Bro. Bassett: I improve a few leisure moments to inform the church and all whom it may concern, of what the Lord is doing for us on this circuit. We held our third Quarterly meeting on Eagle Creek, commencing on the 1st inst. We had Brother Borton in attendance, who labored faithfully with us, and a Brother Parke whom we made a preacher on the occasion. You may think that we are doing first rate business here in the woods, but we trust that God had commenced the work, and we are co-workers with him. We sanctioned it; but what was better than all, the Lord was with us, and fed the church with the hidden manna of his love. Glory to God! There were some four or five who professed that God for Christ's sake had pardoned their sins, and three united with us in church fellowship. May the Lord bless, and keep them faithful until death, in short the people thought that we had a very good meeting for these days of declension.

Our Presidential meeting commenced on the 15th instant, at Mt. Blanchard, and continued five days. Our President was with us, who labored to the satisfaction of the community generally. Yes, Brother Young handled the sword of the spirit pointed with truth, with a masterly hand, which appeared to have the desired effect. Twelve joined the church, and fifteen or more professed justifying grace. Blessed be God for it. What is something singular in this little revival is, that twelve ladies should join the church at one meeting and all single except one. However it has been said that women rule the world. Whether this is, or not the case, we will not now pretend to say. But one thing we hope, that those dear sisters with all others will so conduct themselves that by their good works, and holy conversation, they will influence and stimulate the other sex to embark in so great and glorious a cause, as that of saving their immortal souls and obtaining crowns of glory at God's right hand.—O, that the blood stained banner of our Redeemer was more fully unfurled to the breeze, that we might see thousands flocking to his standard, before it is eternally too late.

ALDEN BESSE, Sup't.

Too Late.

Some men are always too late, and therefore, accomplish through life nothing worth naming. If they promise to meet you at such an hour; they are never present till thirty minutes after.—No matter how important the business is either to yourself or to him, he is just as tardy. If he takes a passage in a steamboat, he arrives just as the boat has left the wharf, and the car has started a few moments before he arrives. His dinner has been waiting for him so long that the cook is out of patience, and half the time is obliged to set the table again. This course, the character we have described always pursues. He is never in season—at church, at a place of business; at his meals or in his bed. Persons of such habits we cannot but despise. Much rather would we have a man too early to see us, and always ready—even if he should carry out his principle to the extent of the good deacon, who in following to the tomb the remains of a husband and father, hinted to the bereaved widow, that, at a proper time, he should be happy to marry her. The deacon was just in season; for scarcely had the relatives and friends retired to the house, before the parson made the same proposition to the widow. "You are too late," said she, "the deacon spoke to me at the grave." Scores have lost opportunities of making fortunes; receiving favors, and obtaining husbands and wives, by being a few minutes too late. Always speak in season and be ready at the appointed hour. We would not give a fig for a man who is not punctual to his engagements, and who never makes up his mind to a certain course till the time is lost. Those who back; hesitate and tremble—who are never on hand for a journey, a trade, a sweetheart, or any thing else, poor sloths, and are ill calculated to get a living in this stirring world.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO:

THURSDAY MORNING, JUNE 3, 1847.

General Assembly.—The session of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, (New School) adjourned from 1846, commenced in the second Presbyterian Church, Cincinnati, on Thursday, May 20. We have the proceedings in the Watchman of the Valley. An interesting preparatory prayer meeting was held on Thursday morning, conducted by Rev. Dr. Cox, the Moderator for last year, who also called the Assembly to order. Fifty members were found to be present on the first day.

A question soon arose as to the constitutionality of an adjourned session. Dr. Cox stated he had obtained the opinion of Chancellor Kent, that "an adjourned meeting had power to do all things which it had in the beginning, as well if months intervened, as if hours." A committee was appointed on the constitutionality of the adjourned session.

On Friday, a communication was read from the Trustees of the second Church, deprecating the use of tobacco by the members, as it would much injure the building. The Moderator enforced attention to the matter. A majority of the Committee reported in favor of the constitutionality of the session. Most of the speakers were in favor of undertaking no new business, but only to dispose of what had been left unfinished. A report was presented of Committee of Correspondence with Committee of the Cumberland Pres. church, on the subject of a union between the two bodies. After some discussion the report was recommitted, to be reported to next Gen. Assembly.

On Saturday, an interlocutory meeting was held, respecting Home Missions, in which all evangelical professors of religion were permitted to participate.

On Monday, 23d, the subject of Home Missions was again discussed. The condition and wants of the West were presented, and a number of members recommended the introduction of a system of itinerancy. It was determined that the next session of the Assembly be held at Philadelphia. In the afternoon, an interesting report of a committee was submitted on the subject of Home Missions. It recommends already formed congregations to strive as much as possible to enlarge their bounds; and that in selecting young men to educate, Germans should be chosen for supplying German people. It recommends that each Presbytery survey its own territories, and call on the Home Missionary Society for one or two Missionaries, to go about to build up new churches. Considerable discussion was had upon the subject of itinerancy, and the report was adopted. A committee was appointed to prepare and present a more extended plan at next General Assembly. Rev. T. A. Mills, of Cincinnati, is Chairman.

On Tuesday an interlocutory meeting was held respecting the Evangelical Alliance, in which Drs. Cox and Beecher were principal speakers.

We have not seen the proceedings of Wednesday, but learn that the Assembly adjourned at noon on that day.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, (Old School,) has been for some time in session at Richmond, Va. We have seen little of the proceedings as yet, but learn by the Baltimore Sun, that the case of Mr. M'Queen, who rightfully or wrongfully married his deceased wife's sister, was again under discussion in the Assembly. Some difficulty it is said also occurred on the reception and reading of letters from Scotch and Irish churches, having reference to the abolition of slavery. We are told however that this was at length amicably and happily disposed of.

Since the above was in type, we have seen in the Presbyterian of the West, an account of the organization of the Assembly. It is stated that there were 153 members present at the commencement. Dr. J. H. Thornwell, of South Carolina, was elected Moderator.

Cumberland Presbyterian Church.—The General Assembly of this denomination convened at Lebanon, Ohio, on the 18th ult. A correspondent of the Watchman of the Valley states that about 90 members were in attendance. Rev. Mr. Hunter, of Kentucky, was chosen Moderator. The same writer gives, by authority, the following statistics of the C. P. Church: 17 Synods, 68 Presbyteries, 800 congregations, over 100,000 communicants, 650 ministers, 200 licentiates, 5 religious newspapers, 15 institutions of learning.—This denomination is zealous in the cause of Missions, Sabbath Schools, and other benevolent operations, and as might be expected, their general condition is prosperous.

The New York Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, lately held in the city of New York, appointed thirteen delegates to attend the General Conference at Pittsburgh, in May, 1848. Some action was taken in reference to the case of J. N. Maffit. Rev. Mr. Green, of the Centenary Church in Brooklyn, was censured and suspended for one year, as "guilty of maladminstration and imprudence," for admitting and recognizing Mr. Maffit as a minister, whilst under censure.

Since the above was in type, we see it stated in the Baltimore Sun that the members of the Centenary Church, have organized independently, and given Rev. J. C. Green, their former pastor, a call, which he has accepted. So then it seems, that the Maffit affair has produced one schism.

Same Man.—Referring lately to the appointment of O. M. Mitchel, by the Governor, to be Adjutant General of Ohio Militia, entertaining some doubts, we enquired of the Editor of the Cincinnati Commercial whether it could be Professer Mitchel, Director of the Cincinnati Observatory, who had received the appointment. For we were surprised that a man should be taken from so important a point in the field of science, to a place in the military field. To our enquiry, the Editor of the Commercial responds in the words following:

"He is not "anybody else," but has simply dropped a civil for a military title, without losing his civil manners and habits. Gen. Mitchell is a graduate of West Point, and eminently qualified for the post to which he has been appointed."

☞ The Cincinnati Commercial announces the death of Robert Gilbreath, an old citizen of Clermont county, Ohio, for 33 years past residing near the town of Neville. By honest industry he had acquired wealth, and gave much for charitable purposes. He was a native of Scotland, a Christian and a philanthropist, esteemed by all, and died in his 69th year.

The Annual Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, commenced its session at St. Paul's Church, Baltimore, on Wednesday, 26th ult. Bishop Whitingham presides.

Speedy Travelling.—The Presbyterian General Assembly at Cincinnati, adjourned at noon on Wednesday of last week. At 2 o'clock, same day, Rev. Mr. Kingsbury of this place, who was in attendance, left the city for home. He reached Springfield by the railway at a little after sunsetting—spent two hours there. He then took stage for Zanesville—reached Columbus latter part of the night, and was there detained about four hours. Starting again on Thursday morning he reached home at about 3, P. M., same day. The distance from Cincinnati to Springfield by railroad is 84 miles, and from Springfield to Zanesville by the National Road is 97 miles, in all 181 miles. The time spent on the way was 25 hours. Deducting however, 6 hours for stoppages, the journey was performed in 19 hours. We know that this would not seem remarkable speed, to those who are accustomed to travelling over continuous rail road routes at the East. But it is better speed than has ever heretofore been effected between this place and the Queen City. And yet, the trip will be performed in considerably less time, when arrangements now in prospective shall have been accomplished. Success to internal improvements.

Liberality.—The Baltimore Sun states that the Irish Relief Committee of New York received a letter from Messrs Corcoran and Riggs, Washington City, dated May 23d, enclosing the sum of five thousand dollars, to be appropriated for purchasing food "for distribution, in the way to effect the greatest good to the greatest number of the suffering poor." It is always a blessed thing when the rich, have an understanding of their stewardship. Such are not likely to lack in this life, nor that which is to come.

Refreshing Showers.—Our place and the surrounding country have been lately visited with fine showers of rain, imparting vigor and thrift to vegetation, and cheer to the hearts of the cultivators of the soil.

The War.—All are anxiously inquisitive to know, what is the prospect of peace. We would that we could solve this question, but conflicting reports are doubtful and unsatisfactory. It seems that a large proportion of the troops both under General Scott and General Taylor, are now homeward bound, by the expiration of their term of service. On this account, General Scott will not proceed to the city of Mexico, until he is reenforced. Santa Anna is professedly determined to continue the war to the last gasp. He sent a letter to Congress from Orizaba, stating that he now has 7000 men, that the number is rapidly increasing, and that all are burning to encounter the Americans again. The Baltimore Sun has received intelligence that several northern States of the Mexican confederacy threaten separation; also that C. M. Clay, Borland, Gaines, and Rogers, have their liberty in the city of Mexico, and are now respectfully treated.

The Baltimore Sun thinks that the last news from Mexico, will in a great measure put an end to the hopes that were previously entertained of a speedy peace.

Smoke Consumed!—The Pittsburgh Gazette gives an account of a patent in England, for preventing the Smoke of Furnaces. It is successfully used at Manchester, England. Persons there have been fined at court, for not consuming the smoke, of their steam engine furnaces. We are not yet favored with a discription of the apparatus, which must be a wonderful contrivance, but are assured that the means are not costly for effecting an almost entire combustion of smoke, thus preventing a great nuisance in the vicinity of furnaces. and especially in manufacturing cities. The contrivance also effects a great saving of fuel. Mr. Charles Wye Williams, is the inventer and author of the patent. The account is taken from the London Mechanic's Magazine.

The editor of the Pittsburgh Gazette adds:

We think no citizen of Pittsburgh will deny the force of an article like the above, nor its application at this time and place. Old Vulcan has his Penetralia just here at the head waters of the Ohio, and night and day from the mouths of a hundred caverns he vomits forth fire and smoke, smoke and fire, dust and ashes, ashes and dust, until one breathes an atmosphere more like what one may fancy Beelzebub's kitchen to be, than the pure air of heaven. We intend to persevere in "the Smoke Preventive," until the people adopt it, if for no other reason, for the sake of getting rid of our own importunities, along with the smoke nuisance. All who are for a clear and healthy atmosphere, come over and help us.

Cist's Weekly (Cincnnati) Advertiser.—We are pleased to acknowledge the receipt of this interesting paper since the commencement of the new series, and have already made its contents tributary to our own colums, for the entertainment of our readers. We inform the publisher that his paper for May 17, is the last we have received, and we are anxious to have the succeeding numbers regularly if he please.

Union Case.—We referred a few weeks ago, to the approaches made towards a union between the New School Presbyterian and Cumberland Presbyterian Churches. The Christian Patriot, a Cumberland Presbyterian paper, published at Princeton, Ky., to which we have heretofore made respectful reference, copies our statement, and after paying a friendly compliment to the Western Recorder, thus continues:

The Subject of the proposed Union between the two Churches, spoken of in the extract, is perhaps not entirely understood by any paper which has noticed it; and we have seen several notices similar to the one above.—The Committee of conference, appointed by the General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, we believe, are not authorised to propose Union, i. e. amalgamation; but to confer with a similar Committee of any other Evangelical denomination, on the subject of a closer intimacy, and a more friendly correspondence. What powers have been delegated to the Committee, on the part of our New School brethren, we have not learned.

We may add, that our own feelings and views, on the subject of the general Union of the Great Family of Heaven, have long since been made public. Those who regard slavery as 'a moral and political evil' (and who does?) would do well, however, to be far more temperate, and far less stringent in their measures of reform, than most of them are.

New Albany, Ind.

Some ten or more years since, we lived in New Albany, Ind. The place is retired, being in the shade of Louisville, surrounded by "knobs" and the poorest land in the Union. But New Albany is a place of more importance than is generally known. Its wealth consists in its workshops and stores—its boat building and boat finishing.—There have been a great number of steamers sent out of that little place, and of the very largest class. New Albany, according to the Daily Bulletin, contains the following population: 1181 families, containing 2,921 males and 3,065 females,—total, 5,986. Of this number 185 are widows, 513 Germans, 65 Irish. 67 French, and 263 colored persons. The reason there are so many widows is, that the families of great many river-men, captains, clerks, pilots engineers, &c., reside there, and the business being a hazardous one, each year women are bereaved of their lords. There always were and always will be a great variety of widows in New Albany—beautiful widows, too, for few places can boast of prettier ladies than that.—Cincinnati Commercial.

[They do say that friend Curtiss, of the Commercial, is a good looking old bachelor. No wonder he loves to compliment the ladies. We reckon also, he has lots of subscribers at New Albany. Ed. W. R.]

☞ The Western Christian Journal gives the proceedings of the meeting of the American Baptist Union, lately held at Cincinnati. We will try and give an abstract next week.

Is it Right? Read and See.

Mr. Bassett: Vill you let a duch man write a littel in your baber? an vot me write is like dis: Me see in your baber dat de beobles of Ohio are not satisfy mit de beobles of de Sout, because da hold de niger in bondedge. Vell, me say dat is very ronge, to sell de boore black man, an whip him like you would a horse or a bull. O, mine Got, have mercy on de boore black mence, an convert de master an make a human being of him, dat he may feele for suffring humanity. But shall we do ronge because de Sout do ronge? Me say no, for my Savior say to de beobles, vat is dat to de? follow dou me. Now, me dink he meanes for us to do rite; an if de Sout will not, de Lort will guge dem. Vell, do we rite? is de question. Let us see. (First;) As in reffrence to dem,—is it right to call dem horse deves, an raskels, an blood-houns of hell? Mr. Bassett, me aske you one question: If you wish to convert a mance, would you make him mat? First, you say no. Vell, den, let us do as de wise man say: Soft words turn away strife. An agane: Would you send a tory to ketch a tory? Me say no. Vat, do I meene dat de beobles of Ohio are tory? Some are, so far in dat da condemn de Sout, da are gilty. An vat do de Good Book say? If dou breachist to a nudder, dou shalt not steele, dost dou steele? If we, den, in Ohio, breach to dem not to bress de poor or de hireling in his wages, in de name of mine Got, will we? Let us see here, O, you inhapitance of Ohio, rise an trim your lamps, examan your conduct toward de boor, an de hierling. As to de boor, have you give your bread to de hungrey? have you paid your hireling his wages? O, mine Got, I am afrate you are gilty. Vat! gilty, an yet cry wo, wo, to de slave-holders? Is dis rite? But are da gilty? Vi, me can almost heare de lementation of de boor, an also de voice of dem dat reepe down your fields, going up to mine Got. Yes, do not rich mence opress you, an draw you before de gugement seat? Yes; de rich in Ohio have all de land, an de money, an de wheet, an de corn, an bork. Darefore, de boor have to vork for vat da pleace to give dem; an dat is not half anuff,—an yet da cry, wo, wo, to de Sout. Is dis rite? Ven Ohio say da must not opress, dost dou opress? I am afrate da ar gilty. Mr. Bassett, is de church cleare of dis sin? Do da cry wo, wo, to de Sout? Yes. O, mine Got, help dem to bull de beem out of dare eye first.—Vat! da cry opresser? Gest as vell mite de devil cry to a fallen Spirit, unholy! Vat! dem gilty? Yes. Look at de gurnnals of de quarterly an de anual Conference. Dare you see da send up for breachers,—an vat da pay dem. Shall I tell de story? I have not bin stuard so long, and dos not know. Some breachers git twenty-five dollar a yeare to suport dem and family; some git fifty, some a littel more, an some less, when da promises dem two hundred dollar, or more. Is it dese beobles dat cry wo, wo—de devil git de slave holders? Yes; an see de breacher riding in winter, mid ole hat, cote, an ole boots, dat de toses stick out, an de wife no close fit to ware to meeting, an must stay home, an get to heven de bes way she can; an nothing to eat but bread, an sometime not dat, midout da beg from sombody out of de church. Some time ago de Weslen breacher vas left midout eneding to eate, an we no da never done crying wo to de Sout. I have seene breachers riding in de middle of winter mid a summer cote on, an ven de breacher stoped, de first ding from his bredren was somthing about de boor niger, but could not see de frozen body of de breacher beneat de ole hat, cote, pants an boots, an say noting about his wife an family! Vi, Mr. Bassett, me dink de eyes of de beobles ar changing an aks quare. Da see better way to Kanetuckey or Georgy dan da do at home. O, vat a long sited beobles ar de Ohians. Vi da need no telicope. O, vat do de Good Book say? Do we have dis world's goods, an see our broder have need? and we shut up our bowels of compassion from him, an give him noting, how dwell de love of Got in him? O, maby da have an excuse because dare eyes ar like telicopes, an see so far into oder mence bisness, da can't see at home. O, Lort, make dem littel more short-sited, dat da may see de boor at home, and pay dare onest debts. O, mine Got, vat woould not a man do to a niger dat would cheete a breacher out his pay, an let him an his family suffer? Now, me hope we of Ohio will say but liuel ill we can have our minuts come out from Conference, saying, all is rite; we feede de boor, bay de breachers vat we have agreede. Mr. Bassett, don't slite me because I am duch. If I cannot speak or rite so plane as oders, I am not asleep.

Cove Spring Sunday School, }
Ross county, O., May 9, 1847. }

To Brother Shadford Easton, of Cincinnati:

The packages you sent were this day received, free of charge. They were presented to the School in the name of the donor, with suitable remarks. They gladdened the hearts of three score and ten enquiring girls and boys, who are in constant attendance on Sunday morning to receive instruction. They unanimously join in the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the hearty thanks of the School be tendered to Mr. Shadford Easton, for the gift of a package of Sunday School Documents, to us presented this day by our Secretary.

Resolved, That the Editor of the Western Recorder be requested to publish the above in his excellent paper.

We add no more, only that we should like to see many others stimulated to like acts of liberality and zeal for Sabbath Schools.

Can River Men be Religious?

A carpenter on a certain steam boat on the Ohio river, a few weeks ago, while busy at his work, amid a dense crowd of deck passengers, was accosted thus by one of them, who is a professor of religion at home, (i. e. the passenger is a professor at home.) Viz: I wonder you do not get mad and scatter the crowd from your way. To which the carpenter instantly replied, "The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God." The passenger was struck dumb, and by his looks, acknowledged that even a boatman might be religious. Oh, may religion obtain much more abundantly on our rivers.. This is the prayer of

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The following statistics extracted from the report of the Patent Office exhibit the stupendous resources of our country:

Wheat, oats, rye, Indian Corn, potatoes, hay and tobacco are raised in every State and Territory in the Union. Barley raised in all except Louisiana. Buckwheat raised in all except Louisiana and Florida. New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Ohio and Wisconsin do not raise cotton. The States that do not raise cotton, together with Maryland, Delaware and Indiana, do not raise rice. Every State and Territory except Iowa does raise silk. New York raises the most barley, viz:—1,802,232 bushels. New York raises the most potatoes, viz:—24,907,554 bushels. New York raises the most hay, viz:—4,595,936 tons. Ohio raises the most wheat, viz:—10,786,705 bushels. Pennsylvania raises the most rye, viz:—8,429,226 bushels. Tennessee raises the most corn, viz:—67,738,347 bushels. Virginia raises the most flax and hemp, viz:—31,726 lbs. Kentucky raises the most tobacco, viz:—72,322,543 lbs.—Georgia raises the most cotton, viz:—148,175,129 lbs. South Carolina raises the most rice, viz:—66,892,307 lbs.

Sudden Death.—The last Lynchburg, Va., papers announce the sudden death, in that place, of Captain Ammon Hancock, one of its oldest and most respected citizens. He was found dead early in the morning of the 18th ult., before the front of his residence, within the enclosure of his yard, with his knees on the ground and his head resting on a railing near the front gate.

Drowned.—On Saturday, at Baltimore, Mr. John Trenchard, of the firm of Geo. G. Trenchard & Son, of Church Hill, Queen Anna's Co. Md., had left the city in the sloop Millington, belonging to the firm. The sloop had all sail set, but when she got below Fort McHenry, the wind proved too strong, and in attempting to shorten sail, Mr. Trenchard was caught in a portion of the rigging, thrown overboard and drowned.—Every effort was made which was possible to rescue him, but without success.

Fatal Accident.—On Friday last, Mr. John Bull, in the employ of Mr. H. Lewis, of Broome, N. Y., went to the woods, about a mile distant, to procure brush to repair a dam. It appears that after having cut and loaded the brush, on his way home the wagon turned over, caught him under the load causing his death, in which situation he was found about 10 o'clock in the evening. Mr. Bull was a single man, about 26 years of age, and was from N. Jersey.

Singular Accident.—Mr. Josse Loyd, residing in Belmont county, was killed on the 22d inst., by being thrown from his horse. He was driving an unruly cow, and in running his horse before her for the purpose of stopping her, she, in some manner, tripped the horse and hurled it and the rider to the ground, the horse falling on the breast of Mr. Loyd and killing him instantly.—Zanesville Courier.

Mr. Polk has pardoned the Slave Trader, Flowry, convicted in Boston. This is the second case of like pardon, and there seems to be no proper excuse for it.—Pittsburgh Gazette.

Ocean Steamers.

No movement of modern times has resulted in such a complete revolution of business and thought as the application of steam as a motive power.—The regime of the last century and generation has been entirely metamorphosed under its influence. Opening up speedier and more accessible paths to enterprise, it has given force and velocity to the efforts of mankind. Of all forms of its application, the scheme of Ocean navigation is the grandest. The civilization of the world, the intercourse of nations, the communication of men's thoughts rapidly from one to the other over the earth, have always been abridged and set back by the barrier of uncertain winds and tides, making the ocean a line of terror between continents. Steam has completely dissipated both the distance and danger of the ocean, and by its almost electric transmission of travel and commerce, introduced men of differing climes, languages and creeds upon a more easy and familiar footing. Though our own Fulton was the first to propel a keel through the water by steam, accomplishing the proudest triumph of his age, one that should decree him monuments upon every ocean and river highland, we have not been the first to navigate the ocean by steam. Our Saxon brothers of England took the lead, proved the success of the experiment, and now we are beginning to enter upon it heart and hand, and the result, to him who can penetrate the future for a quarter of a century will be grand beyond all the dreams of Fulton or Bell. On the first of June, the Washington, the first of a dozen or more Government Mail Steamers yet to be constructed, and a magnificent vessel too, leaves this port for Cowes, Southampton and Bremen, opening a direct channel to the Continent, in place of the over England route of the Boston and Halifax lines. Who can measure the beneficent influences to spring from this immediate contact with middle Europe, with its gigantic commerce ready at our hands. What new emigration, travel and trade are to cluster to our shores, courted by the better facilities offered by the ocean steamers?—The bright German rivers, teeming with thousands of craft have long invited us, and now we are coming to plough them with our steam keels, to mingle with their burghers and peasants, and gather a rich harvest from the interchange of commerce and thought. The philanthropist must rejoice at every new accession to the ocean steam corps. They are so many witnesses that nations are drawing closer together, that old rude asperities are breaking down, and a more generous active business, and intercourse between men, and a higher civilization for society are being everywhere disseminated.

The Harvest in Ireland.

The Liverpool Times of May 4th, says,—"The weather has of late undergone a favorable change. Vegetation is making rapid progress. The accounts of the wheat and oat crops are highly encouraging; and even in regard to potatoes very favorable accounts are received. The smaller class of farmers, who have suffered so terribly by the destructive failure of last year, are plucking up courage to try their favorite root once more. The early spring sowing of potatoes had been confined at first to the large farmers and gentry, who could afford to make experiments; but within the last week the small farmers are also venturing. The Newry Telegraph says —"The planting of potatoes is quite general in this part of the country, several of the more extensive farmers having large breadths of land laid down for that purpose. The early planted are exhibiting the most gratifying promise of a large and abundant crop, the young plants coming up strong and vigorous, as in the most favorable seasons." The accounts from other districts are similar. Whether for good or evil, there will be a extensive potato culture this year. Probably the amount sown will be about the fourth part of the crop of ordinary years.—Bicknell's Reporter.

Strawberries were in market this morning, at 25 cents per basket. We also undersood from a market women that her green Peas are large enough for use, and that she should bring in a bushel on Monday. We mention these little matters for the benefit of those who can afford to buy; Editors and Printers decline dealing at fancy prices.—Zanesville Courier.

A fire occurred in Frederickstown Pa., on Sunday morning last, about 2 o'clock. Six dwelling Houses, one steam Grist Mill and two Stores were destroyed. Amount of loss not known.

A noble donation.—Mr. S. C. Blair has handed Mr. Allen $447 in money and nine barrels of flour, which, at present prices will amount to over Five Hundred Dollars from Messrs. Shoenberger's workmen, and all for Irish relief.—Pitts. Gazette.

Take Warning.—Two little girls in Philadelphia, on Tuesday engaged in a trial of skill, at jumping the rope, one of them continued it so long, that she became flushed in the face, fell down, and expired.

Emigrants at Boston.—The brig Mary, of Halifax, lately arrived at Boston, with 50 steerage passengers, in such destitute condition that the authorities would not permit them to land, unless the captain would give bonds that they should not come upon the city as a burthen.—This the captain could not do, nor was he able to compel the passengers to remain on board. In this dilemma, Captain Sturgis visited the brig with a revenue cutter, organized a strict watch on board, and induced the captain to clear his vessel for Halifax. This he did, but the passengers refused to go, and seized upon Capt. Sturgis, who was obliged to call all hands to his assistance, and deal out blows, before the mutiny was quelled. He then put the brig under weigh and guarded her down the harbor.—N. Y. Sun.

Mr. Pakenham left Washington on Friday last. After visiting Canada, he will proceed to Halifax, and there embark for Liverpool in the steamer which is to leave Boston on the 1st of July.—Mr. Pakenham bears with him the kindest wishes of the American public. In the high station which he has occupied for more than three years, his conduct has been such as to secure universal approbation. J. F. Crampton, Esq., remains at Washington as Charge d'Affairs during Mr. Pakenham's absence.

Melancholy Loss of Life.—A gentleman informs us that a sail boat with five boys in it, was capsized yesterday morning, and all on board were drowned. They went down to see the Jamestown come up.—Boston Post.

Two Daughters of Rev. James Weatherby, of Holly Springs, Miss., were riding in a buggy with their father, a few days since, when the horses took fright, and ran off—killing one, and cruelly mangling the other. The father was also injured.

Drowned.—Joseph Blanchard, watchman on the steamer Robert Morris, accidentally fell overboard yesterday evening below Jefferson Barracks and was drowned. Every effort was made by the officers and crew of the boat to save him, but without success. He was a young man—a native of Pittsburgh.—St. Louis Era.

Sabbath Work.

The following facts are commended to the consideration of all patriotic war-and-glory clergymen, who are nothing loth, at the proclamation of Gov ernors, to preach thanksgiving sermons over the triumphs of the American arms in Mexico.—National Era.

"The battle of Palo Alto was fought on Sunday, the 8th day of May.

"The American army arrived and took position in front of Monterey on Sunday, the 20th day of September—the battle commenced the next morning.

"The battle of Del Norte New Mexico, was fought on Sunday, the 24th day of Jan.

"The battle of Buena Vista commenced on Sunday, the 21st day of Feb.

"The surrender of the city and castle of Vera Cruz was made to General Scott on Sunday, the 27th day of Feb.

"The battle of Sacramento, Chihuahua, was fought on Sunday, the 28th day of March.

"The battle of Cerro Gordo commenced on Sunday, the 17th day of April.

The Passengers of the Tweed.—A surviver of the wreck of the Tweed, giving in the London Times a thrilling account of the horrors of that scene of disaster and death, speaking of the passengers just previous to the awful calamity, says: "All were in the best spirits, expecting to see something of the American attempt on the strong castle of San Juan d'Ulua." There is something very saddening in the reflection, that at the very time when these men and women were hoping to witness from the security of their deck the horrible exhibition of battle and bloodshed, the destruction of the dwellings and of the lives of their fellow men—amusing themselves with watching the varying incidents of battle, and following the red track of the shell until it exploded on some hearthstone, mangling women and children, gray age and helpless infancy—they were themselves struggling in the black waters, and under the sky of night, amidst the broken remnants of their noble vessel. In that awful hour, if the thought of their exulting anticipation of looking upon the misery and suffering of others found a place in their minds, must it not have added a new pang to the bitter agony?

Poor, Starving Ireland.—The London correspondent of the New England Puritan, says that in despite of all that can be done by private and public efforts (and the latter are on a scale which involves an enormous expenditure) there can be little doubt that a million of people will be swept off the soil of Ireland, by famine and fever, before next harvest! Reader, have you and I done all that we could to avert such a calamity? Have we done to them what we would have them do to us in a reverse of circumstances?—Cincinnati Protestant.

German Emigration.—In various parts of Germany the emigration fever has gathered strength lately, and it has become a serious question how to facilitate the transport and settlement of the emigrants. On the 3d ult., a meeting was held at Darmstadt, for the purpose of instituting a national society for the assistance of German emigration and colonization;" among the countries mentioned as suitable for emigrants, were Algeria, Corrientes in South America, but, more immediately, North America, especially the states of Illinois, Indiana and Iowa.

New York and Cincinnati.—New Buildings in this City.—The city inspector has ascertained that 1910 buildings were erected in the city of New York in 1846. The number erected in 1845 was 1980; but this includes all those in the First Ward rendered necessary by the fire of that year. But for this, the number in 1846 would have exceeded that of 1845.—Jour. Com.

It appears by this statement that for the accommodation of the increase of New York population during the last year, 1910 buildings have been erected. During the same period; 1375 houses were put up here. Take into consideration the difference of population in the two places, our progress in building is nearly four fold that of the next city of the Atlantic coast.—Cist's Cin. Ad.

Dreadful Distress in Switzerland.—A physician writing from Schull, in the Canton of the Grisons, on the 28th February says: "The parish of Schulls is one vast charnel house. A frightful mortality reigns here. Each day from forty to forty-five dead bodies are interred. There is scarce an humble dwelling in the Canton, into which fever, dysentery or death have not entered. Graves cannot be prepared in sufficient numbers, and the bodies are so hastily interred, that dogs, scraping off the dirt, draw them out and feed on their flesh. The feebleness of the inhabitants prevented them from digging deeper.—The master of a public school, who had a year ago a hundred and forty scholars, now has not one. Half are dead, the rest incapable of raising provisions themselves. The master, to support his family, is working on the road.—Jour. Com.

Sandwich Islands.—Five barrels of brandy, smuggled into Honolulu, were seized by the police of police, confiscated and emptied into the street in front of the custom house. The penalty for the offence, as prescribed by law, was confiscation of the vessel and a fine of $1000 each, on all who were concerned in the contraband.—But this was the first offence of the kind, the authorities let off the delinquents with a fine of $100, which was promptly paid into the treasury of the government.

Melancholy.—A poor woman went to the office of the township trustees on Wednesday for assistance. She had a sick child in her arms,—a child that had been, for a long time, a victim to a lingering disease. Having no attendance at home, and the necessity of assistance being urgent, she was compelled to take the sick infant with her. It died in her arms at the door of the office.—Cin.

Death of Judge Daniels.—The Hon David Daniels, of Woonsocket, was found dead in his bed on Monday morning. A post mortem examination showed the cause of his death to have been an ossification of the heart.

Judge Daniels was a highly respectable and intelligent gentleman, and his loss will be severely felt and deeply lamented in the section of the state in which he resided.—Providence Journal.

Wholesale Poisoning.—About the 1st May, a whole wedding party was poisoned in Shelby county, Texas. Out of sixty persons poisoned, about ten or twelve have died, and the lives of fifteen or eighteen or twenty others were despaired of. The nefarious act is supposed to have been committed at the instance of a disappointed suitor of the bride, who was present at the wedding.

Suicide.—A man named Hutchinson threw himself into the Great Miami river, yesterday morning, from the Hamilton and Rossville bridge, and was drowned. No known cause assigned for the act. He was wealthy—owning two large farms near West Liberty, Butler county.—Cin.

A Railroad Convention, composed of delegates from Indiana, Illinois, and Ohio, was held at Indianapolis on the 12th instant. Gov. Bebb, one of the delegates from Ohio, presided over the deliberations of the Convention, and stated its objects in a brief but felicitous speech. The ostensible object of the Convention appears to have been to favor the project of a railway communication between the city of St. Louis, on the Mississippi river, and Cincinnati, on the Ohio, thro' the States of Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio, with the ultimate view of a continuous railway communication with the Eastern Atlantic cities. Resolutions were adopted favoring this project, and urging the importance of immediate action upon the subject in the several States interested in its construction.—Urbana Gazette.

Samuel Newell, Esq., formerly and old and respectable citizen of Logan co., O., died at his residence in Wappalo co., Iowa, on the 11th ult., in the 67th year of his age. Mr. N. was several times elected to the Legislature of Ohio, from the district in which he resided, and always sustained the character of an honest, intelligent and enterprising man. Peace to his ashes.—Urbana Gazette.

Human Nature.—Noble Boy.—One of the Committee appointed to collect subscriptions for the relief of Ireland, informs us of a noble act of generosity. Joseph Klemm, a boy 5 years old, son of O. Klemm, Esq. of this city, on hearing his mother read one of the distressing and heart rending accounts from that unhappy country, immediately exclaimed, "Mother, give me my money box, and I will carry my money to Mr.———, to be sent to feed and clothe the little boys in Ireland." The noble boy delivered the whole of his little fund, one hundred and three cents, and when thanked for his liberality, and told how much good the money he gave might do, the sparkling eye showed the workings of a generous heart. Such acts deserve to be noticed and commended.—Cleveland Herald.

I was by, when this anecdote was read, in the presence of a little boy of six years of age. His flushed check and lively eye attested his sympathy. "Pa," said he, "I will give what is in my money box, too, for the little boys in Ireland, if you will put it in the papers."—Cist's Cin. Adver.

Early in 1848 there will be sixteen steamships regularly plying between New York and Europe, by which means a weekly communication will be kept up with England, France, and other countries in the Old world, independently of the Boston line of Cunard steamers.—Pittsburgh Com. Journal.

One can frequently see on our wharf, now a days, boxes parcels placed side by side, marked "Relief Contributions for Ireland and Scotland," and piles of cannon balls, ammunition, guns, cartridges, &c., "for Mexico." Consistent, that!—Pittsburgh Commercial Journal.

Bad News for the Poor.—The master bakers, at a meeting, have determined to raise the price of their bread, selling the loaves at 5 and 10, instead of 3 and 6 cents each. How strange are the laws of trade! Here we are absolutely overwhelmed by the excessive yield of our harvest fields, and yet our prices are higher than they have been for years, for the articles produced. It is a proof, if any were needed, that after all the whole race of mankind have the same general interests. While the inhabitants of the old world are suffering for want, we cannot, although our fields are fruitful, escape participation to some extent in their evils.

Expenses, &c.—The Washington correspondent of the New York Herald estimates the total loss of the United States, from the commencement of the war with Mexico up to this time, at 3,010 killed and wounded, and 2,500 died from the climate. The Mexican loss is set down at 10,000. The United States have lost two vessels of war, equivalent to $2,000,000. The aggregate expenses, up to this date, he places at $50,000,000. These are the losses. The gain, so far, have been confined to newspaper publishers, who have made a considerable amount of pocket money by their extras.—National Era.

A New Mission.—It is said that the merchants of Vienna, apprehensive of a long continuance or repetition of the dearth, have resolved to send a mission of agriculturists and other practical men to this country and China, to ascertain what edibles there o. here can be introduced to advantage in the fields of Europe.

Emigration to Oregon.—The tide of emigration is setting strong for Oregon. Letters speak of the city of St. Louis being crowded with emigrants on their way. From present appearances, says one letter, I should not be surprised if five hundred wagons crossed the Mississippi at St. Joseph's. Large numbers are also crossing at Iowa Point. —National Era.

A very severe hail storm passed through Morgan township, Scioto co., on the 17th instant.—Two young men at work in a corn-field, took shelter under a tree, which was struck by lightning, one of whom was killed and the other badly injured. In some places the hail was two or three feet deep in the gutters.

How it Works.—It is curious to note the workings of charity, economically. A farmer has 1,000 bushels of corn meal, at 75 cents. A demand for the suffering poor of Ireland is made upon the country, and he munificently donates 100 bushels, a tenth of all he has. The deed is noticed in the papers. But the demand has carried up the price of corn meal to $1, a rise of 25 cents; one-half of which may be fairly set down to the vast amounts given to Ireland. Whereupon, he sells his 900 bushels for $900, just $250 more than he would have sold his 1,000 for. Deduct the amount of his donation, 100 bushels, at 75 cents, equal to $75, and he has been a gainer by the whole transactions to the tune of $175! Who has paid his charity, and rewarded him, too, for an act which cost him nothing! The people who have purchased his grain for food. But, no matter at what expense, let us rejoice that Ireland is fed.—National Era.

The Skeptic.—"If we are to live after death, why don't we have some certain knowledge of it?" said a skeptic to a clergyman.

"Why don't you have some knowledge of the world before you come into it?" was the caustic reply.

More Banks.—Three more new banks, under the Banking Law of Ohio, are about to go into operation at Eaton, Elyria, and Tiffin.

An Emigrant Family.—A family of emigrants, of the name of Dolan, consisting of a man, his wife, and five children, started from England a few months ago for this country.—When the voyage had been almost completed, two of the children died and were thrown overboard: they were soon followed by two more of the children; the mother then sickened and died, and just as the ship—the James H. Shepard—was coming into this port, the father died. One poor orphan only of this once numerous family, reached the shores of this country.—Boston Traveller.

Lamentable Accident and Death.—Information was received in Philadelphia on Tuesday, by a letter addressed to James Young, of the city police, of a most melancholy casualty on the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore railroad, resulting in the death of a gentleman, who, at the time of his discovery, was not known, but who has since been recognized as Robert Scott, of the firm of R. Scott & Co., shoe dealers. The body was found on the railroad, a short distance from Perryville, Cecil county, Maryland, at an early hour on Tuesday morning, in a most frightful and horrid condition, the face being nearly ground off, and the body otherwise shockingly mutilated. Along the road, for about a mile, money and papers were strewed, supposed to be, and no doubt were, the property of the deceased, from which it is presumed that the unfortunate deceased was dragged the whole of that distance by the train, suffering the agonies of a thousand deaths before life had become extinct. A clue to his place of residence was furnished by his name and that of the boot maker being written in one of his boots, which was found upon the road. Mr. Scott left Philadelphia on Monday night, in the train of cars for Baltimore with the design of visiting Washington city, and from all the circumstances thus far known, his friends have no doubt that the fatal and heart-rending details as given above have befallen him. The accident, it appears, resulted from the unfortunate deceased falling from the platform of the car, upon which it is safe to infer he had been standing.—Baltimore Sun.

Miss Beecher, the daughter of the venerable Dr. Beecher, is untiring in her efforts to promote education at the West. She is in a few days to meet at Albany, twenty-six young ladies from New England, who are to go out with her as teachers, after having spent a season at the State Normal School. Her plan is to transfer a large number of educated young ladies to the west, and there employ them as teachers.—N. Y. Sun.

A Shaker Case of interest has lately been tried at Cleveland, O. It was a suit brought for wages for 13 years service, by a seceder from the brotherhood, a lady who had joined them when a child. The case was ably argued on both sides. The jury concluded inasmuch as the plaintiff voluntarily joined the society, knowing its rules and regulations, (which are that all proceeds of labor by any of the fraternity go into a common fund, not to be withdrawn,) and had as voluntarily left, she was not entitled to damages. —N. Y. Sun.

Drunkenness.—In Queen Anne's time drunkenness was rather popular than otherwise. In the manuscripts of the British Museum, there is a letter from the private Secretary of the celebrated Dutchess of Marlborough, addressed to the Pope, which began thus, "Sir, my lady the Dutchess being drunk, was unable to see you when you called yesterday." Temperance Societies were unknown in those days.

Statistics.—202 suicides committed in the United States last year. Of this number 38 were by cutting the throat; 51 hanging; 29 shooting; 25 drowning; 22 poison; 10 jumping from a height; 6 stabbing; 6 under railroad cars. Of this number, 59 were insane, 15 drunk, and 18 filled with remorse and despair.

Body Found—Mysterious Death.—A passenger on the Utica road informs us that last night as some men were fishing in Cuyadutta creek, near Fonda, they discovered the body of a man, whose linen was marked with the name of "Geo. W. Hathaway, Fall River, Mass." He had on his person about $260 in eastern money and was about 35 years of age. He is supposed to have fallen off the cars in the night time.

Dreadful Accident at a Rolling Mill.—On Monday morning a Workman, Mr. Laban Hammell, was crushed to death at the Rolling Mill in South Trenton, N. J. It appears that he was engaged in oiling some of the machinery, when his hand was caught, and in an instant, his entire body drawn through a narrow aperture and crushed in a shocking manner. A slight tremor in the mangled mass, discernible for an instant, was the only evidence of life that remained after the accident. The Trenton News says: "Mr Hammell leaves a wife and three children. We understand that all the hands employed at the mill have determined to bestow the proceeds of one day's labor upon the family of the deceased."—Baltimore Sun.

The Famine at Madeira.—Recent authentic advices from Madeira, received by Rev. Mr. Howe, Pastor of the Seamen's Bethel in New Bedford, Mass., state that many hundreds of the inhabitants of that island have actually perished from starvation. Flour has sold as high as $27 a barrel, but so miserably poor are most of the inhabitants as to be unable to purchase at any price. The letter adds:

"We have had no potatoes for two years, on account of the potato rot. For God's sake send us some Indian corn, or we must all perish. A little rice will be thankfully received. Oh, that we might have a portion of that which the highly favored Americans throw to their animals, to keep us from the grave."—Baltimore Sun.

General Cushing met with a serious accident at Matamoras, on the 6th inst. As he was walking out with a lady, he stepped upon a loose brick, and fell, and we are sorry to say, broke his left leg, just above the ankle.

Employment for Emigrants.—The numerous emigrants arriving in the city of N. York need not stay there one hour. The Express says:—"Hundreds of them are wanted on our public works. Arrangements have been made to send even the penniless to Illinois; the transportation or emigrant companies undertaking to pay their passage, which the Canal Commissioners of Illinois will deduct from their wages and become responsible for, provided they will agree to go on the public works of that State."—Baltimore Sun.

Sandusky and Beaver Canal.—The work on this Canal is rapidly progressing, and 26 miles from New Lisbon to the Ohio River, is open for navigation. The line from New Lisbon to Bolivar, a distance of 65 miles, will be open and ready for navigation by the 4th of July. Pittsburgh expects to draw produce trade from the Ohio Canal by this route, an expectation not likely to be fulfilled, as the Lake route still presents the most feasible channel for the transit of goods and produce.

Fires.—The Harrisonburg, (Va.,) Register of Saturday states that the store-house and mill belonging to Mr. Peter Henton, on Smith's creek, in that county, were entirely destroyed by fire on Friday morning of last week. The store-house was filled with goods. The mill contained a large quantity of wheat and flour, almost all of which was destroyed by the devouring element. The loss is estimated at from $8,000 to $10,000, upon which there was no insurance.

The Oil Cloth Factory at East Winthrop, Kennebec county, (Me.,) owned by Messrs. Bailey, was consumed by fire on the night of the 17th instant. No insurance.

Horrible Event at Boston Mass.—On last Wednesday a woman chanced to pass a new building at Boston, with an infant in her arms, just as some workmen were throwing lumber therefrom. A joist fell upon the child's head, crushing its skull and dashing out a portion of its brains. Of course it caused instant death.

Ex-Governor Porter, of Pennsylvania, it will be remembered, was famous, while in office, for the great number of criminals he pardoned. Some one trod on his toes recently, and turning to him, said,

'Beg your pardon, sir.'

'Can't grant it—I'm no longer Governor,' was the prompt reply.

Never condemn your neighbor unheard, however many the accusations which may be preferred against him; every story has two ways of being told.

A German Society has been formed in New York to keep off, if possible the land sharks from the German emigrants. The emigrants are beset by runners the moment they land and it is said that one establishment has paid these runners $43,000 in one year.

Volcanoes and Earthquakes.—By an arrival at Boston, from the Cape Verd Islands, we learn the volcano on the Island of Fogo commenced burning on the evening of 9th ult., and continued eight days, during which the blaze was distinctly seen at Porta Praya, and the earth was felt to tremble violently at intervals during the remaining six days. The smoke was still rising from the crater on the 2d inst.

Things in Philadelphia.—Defrauding Emigrants.—At Philadelphia, on Wednesday morning, a family of Germans, of very interesting appearance, proceeded to the Baltimore Railroad Company's depot for transportation to Baltimore, and presented a ticket purporting to be a receipt for the amount of their fare, which they stated they had received from an individual in New York. The ticket was a fraud, the company having no agents in New York or any where else, to transact any business of such a purport. The family was sent on by Mr. Dale, President of the company, free of charge. He has instituted measures to ascertain the whereabouts of the individual implicated in this affair, with the view of exposing him and preventing his further depredations on the ignorant and poor.—Baltimore Sun.

The poor house at Cattaraugus, N. Y. was destroyed by fire on the 15th inst. One of the inmates, a lunatic, was burnt to death.

Still they come.—On Monday three more vessels arrived at Boston from Ireland, having on board 135 immigrants. This makes a total of 1054 the last three days.

Very Natural.—A late bar-room fight at Eldorado, Ky., terminated in the death of Col. Milton, and three others severely wounded.

Fifty miles of Canal Boats.—About 1000 new canal boats are estimated to have been added to the New York canals the present season, making, with those previously registered, say 3500. These, at 80 feet in length to each boat, would make a line of boats over fifty three miles in length.

A pastor in a Congregational paper before us has the following fears—the first eight respecting himself, the other six respecting his brethren:

EIGHT FEARS.

I fear—1. That I am not sufficiently thankful for the privilege of preaching the gospel.

2. That I think too much of the trials of the ministry.

3. That I am not entirely devoted to my work as a minister.

4. That I have given my people occasion to utter just complaints respecting my sermons.

5. That I have needlessly caused them to feel dissatisfied with my prayers.

6. That I have not visited them as I ought to have done.

7. That some have already gone to hell thro' my unfaithfulness.

8. That others, who now form a part of my charge, will perish in like maner.

SIX MORE FEARS.

I fear—1. That some have entered the ministry not being called.

2. That some who have been called, have not entered it.

3. That some who were called, and did enter it, have left it without permission.

4. That their influence in leaving has been evil, and only evil, to the ministry.

5. That some now in the ministry are more intent on acquiring the world than on saving souls.

6. That merchandize, agriculture, animal magnetism, electricity, and a thousand other secular interests, are carrying captive numbers of the watchman Israel.

An Irishman, after being distanced in a foot race, at length succeeded, when he suddenly exclaimed:

"Well, I am first at last, but I was behind before!"

A Critic Criticised.—We find the following in a late English Journal: A Wolveshampton man of business once wrote to a professional friend at Walsall, with an accompanying sample padlock: "Send me 100 dozen hiron locks like the pattern, upon honor." The Walsall professional wrote in reply: "The iron locks shall be sent to order and pattern, upon 'onor." A few days after, the good friends met, when the diplomatist, sarcastily alluding to the shorn honor of the man of locks, thus began: "When next you write to a gentleman, be sure to spell 'honor' as it should be, and not without the h," "Bless my heart," rejoined he of the locks, in a master key, "we've got no letter h in Walsall; they keep 'em all in Wolverhampton to spell iron with!"

New subscribers this week 6—Discontinuances 7. Difference on the wrong side. Not common.

Br. B. Deuel, Ill. you say you paid in advance, first year, "to our Agent, W. Patterson." He never acted as our Agent, that we know of, but to send us your name, and one other, as subscribers. He never sent us money for you nor for any one else. We hope that friend P. will at once give satisfacton in this matter. Let us see.

The Post Master at Dover, Bureau county, Ill., informs us that the paper sent to A. Conklin, is not called for. He owes us for Volumes 7 and 8. Will our agent there, please enquire into the matter, collect what is due, and report to us soon as he can? We are entitled to send on until he pays.

Br. A. L. Collings, you are right. We stand corrected.

A subscriber at Brooklyn, Ohio, taxes us with postage on a notice to discontinue, when his Post Master would have given us the word without expense to us or him.—We name this, that others may see that there is no need, if indeed there is justice in laying these little burdens upon us? Little, did we say? Why, a thousand or two such items in a year, would make enough to support a travelling minister.

Very Strict, Very.—At the close of our seventh vol., we announced that to every subscriber who would pay $2 in advance for volume 8, we would send a copy of the Annual Register. We have just received a notice to stop sending the paper to two subscribers out West, who had previously paid for part of the 7th and part of the eighth volume, "because they were disappointed in their expectations concerning the Register." Now we fulfilled our promise, we believe, to the very letter in every case. Why these two subscribers should take umbrage at what was no deficiency on our part, is rather strange. We have hundreds of others who have as much reason to discontinue.

PROSPECTUS

OF THE

OHIO SCHOOL JOURNAL—VOL. 2, 1847.

The second volume will be published monthly, in Columbus, each number containing sixteen pages octavo.

The Journal will be devoted entirely to the promotion of education—physical, intellectual, social and moral—and especially to the improvement of Common Schools—the better education of teachers—the elevation of the employment of teaching to the rank it should hold in the community—the diffusion of intelligence relating, to the best modes of teaching, to the location and construction of school houses, and to the progress of education in this State and in other States and countries; it will contain the Annual Report of the State Superintendent of Common Schools, and the School Laws of general interest which may be enacted during the present session of the Legislature.

Post Masters, School Officers, Teachers, and the friends of education in general, are respectfully invited to aid in giving it a wide circulation.

Editors who give this prospectus one insertion and forward a copy marked will receive the Journal for the year.

Terms—Single copies, 50 cents; seven copies, $3,00; twelve copies $5,00; twenty five copies, $10,00; payments to be made invariably in advance. Orders for the Journal may be directed, "Ohio School Journal, Columbus, O.," or, (until the first of March next,) to A. D. Lord, Kirkland, Lake Co., O.

MEMORIA TECHNICA:

Or, the Art of Abbreviating those Studies which give the greatest labor to the Memory; including Numbers, Historical Dates, Geography, Astronomy, Gravities, &c.; also Rules for Memorizing Technicalities, Nomenclatures, Proper Names, Prose, Poetry, and Topics in general.—Embracing all the available Rules found in Mnemonics, or Mnemotechny of Ancient and Modern Times. To which is added a Perpetual Almanac for Two Thousand Years of Past Time and Time to Come. Adapted to the use of Schools. By Lorenzo D. Johnson. Second edition, revised and improved.—Boston.

Price—50 cents.

In presenting to the public the "Memoria Technica," which, in some respects, may be said to contain a new theory of instruction, the publishers beg leave to call the attention of Teachers, School Committees, and others interested in education, the peculiar merits of the work. It has been already introduced into several of our best and most popular schools in Boston and vicinity, and has also received high commendation from many of our most distinguished clergymen and other literary men who have examined it.

Notices of the Press.

'This system of Mnemotechny, differing considerably from the one introduced by Prof. Gouraud, is designed to furnish all the rules for aiding the memory without lessening mental culture, which can be made available during a course of elementary study. The illustrations may be easily comprehended by any person of ordinary mental capacity, and the application of the principle upon which the system is based must necessarily furnish an agreeable and useful exercise to the mind. It is well adapted to common school instruction, and may be made a very profitable study, if rightly pursued. Every page of the work gives evidence of a desire to present the laws of association distinctly & clearly, so as to enable the learner to establish such relations between things, events, &c., as will aid the memory. We commend the book to trachers and all interested in this important subject.'—N. Y. Teachers' Advocate.

'The art of improving the memory is surely a very important one, and whoever contributes any thing to further this end, certainly renders an important service to the public. Mr Johnson, we believe, has succeeded in bringing his system of mnemonics into such a practicable form, as will render it an essential aid to all who do not naturally have a great power of memory.'—Ch. Witness

'This is a treatise on artificial memory prepared for the use of schools. The subject is a curious one, and worthy of attention.'—Boston Recorder.

'This system of mnemonics, being the first work of the kind ever prepared for the use of schools, and being so arranged and simplified that any one of ordinary capacities may easily acquire a knowledge of its principles, is certainly worthy of examination and study. It is most emphatically an aid to the memory, and as such, is well adapted to common school instruction. We heartily commend it to public notice, while we hope that Mr. Johnson will receive the reward due to his industry and perseverance by seeing this work extensively introduced into our schools, public and private.'—Tem. Standard.

'The author promises to endow his pupils with an infinite faculty of memory. If he can do it without too much trouble on the part of the recipients, he will do a good thing, and as far as we can judge, he seems likely to accomplish it. While his system is much more simple than any we have before examined, it contains a great deal more. Moreover, it makes the thing a matter of practical education, within the reach of all.'—Chronotype.

'There are minds of a certain class that are wont to be interested in mnemonics, and we doubt not that such may find valuable assistance in a work of this kind.—N. E. Puritan.

'The book, although designed and adapted to the use of schools, is nevertheless worthy the attention of all persons who wish to assist or strengthen memory.'—N. E. Washingtonian.

'A very ingenious and useful book, designed to shorten the labor of those studies which require the exercise of the memory, by a system of memorizing.'—Reading Gazette, Pa.

We feel no hesitation in recommending this work to the deliberate attention of teachers, and the guardians of youth. We learn that it is received into several of the schools in Boston, and used as an auxiliary help to the studies now pursued by the pupils.'—Boston Courier.

'We noticed the first edition of this book a short time since, and in addition to what we then said, will only say now, that it is prepared by one who has paid great attention to the subject, and who has been employed to teach his system by some of our most experienced teachers and wisest men.'—Ch. Register.

'We have given the work a partial examination, sufficient to become convinced that the subject is one of importance.'—Ch. Watchman.

The Memoria Technica is now studied in some of our best schools; and the system taught in it appears to be much approved by those who have made trial of it.'—Evening Traveller.

The work contains a vast amount of important facts and useful information; which, aside from its value as a system of instruction, render it, as has been justly said by many who have examined it, well worth the price of the work as a mere book of reference. Published by

GOULD, KENDALL & LINCOLN,

POETRY.

Written for the Western Recorder

The Better Clime.

There's a blissful clime, far, far away
From earth and its scenes of care;
No storm-cloud darkens its brilliant day,
And 'tis said "There is no night there."

That clime has beauty, exceeding far
What mortal eye hath seen;
Not fancy's wildest dreams compare
With aught of that bright scene.

There voices sweet their melody blend
With notes from golden lyres,
And peans harmonious ever ascend
Which untold bliss inspires.

That cloudless clime is the spirt's home
When the conflicts of life are oe'r,
And loved ones lost in this vale of gloom,
Are there—to sorrow no more.

O, strong are the ties that draw us away
From earth to that world above!
But the strongest tie that attracts us there
Is the tie of our Savior's love.

Putnam, Ohio, May 29, 1847. P. B.

The Return.

Drowsily as I was lying
On a Sabbath afternoon,
Deep the bell in church-tower plying,
Ringing its monotonous tune,
Seemed like some low voice entreating
Now advancing, now retreating,
Then again its prayer repeating,
Saying "Come!"

Many years had I been straying
From the paths of Love and Fear;
Years in which the voice of praying
Had not fallen on my ear.
When then gave that bell its power,
Ringing from the old church-tower,
In that solemn Sabbath hour,
Saying "Come?"

Shadowy recollections thronging,
Gathered in my troubled breast;
Forms to those I loved belonging;
Gazing sadly, round me pressed.
One beside me, softly kneeling,
Uttered, in a voice revealing
All a mother's heart-full feeling,
Sadly, "Come!"

Forth I went, the voice unheeding,
Far, and weary, I sped;
But I could not leave that pleading,
Following ever as I fled.
Over mountain, plain, and river,
Tones that on the soft air quiver,
Still that earnest prayer deliver,
Saying, "Come!"

Doubts and Fears, and Scoffs, engaging
Those strong Memories of the Past,
In my heart their conflict waging,
Sense and reason reeled at last—
All to wild confusion turning,
Heaven and Earth were wrapped in burning,
Death, fierce Death; with sneer and scorning,
Whispered, "Come!"

Vanished river, field, and mountain,
Like the phantom of a spell!
With a horror past recounting,
To the reeling earth it fell!
* * * * * * * *
Darkness left me. I was flying
Over mourners weeping, sighing,
And to them the bell was crying,
Sadly, "Come!"

Clouds and tempests then came o'er me;
Demons laughed and shrieked around;
Through thickened air they bore me,
In an icy terror bound.
Then to God, in wild despair,
Lifted I my hands in prayer;
Sudden music filled the air!
Crying, "Come!"

Rising from my fearful dreaming,
Doubting, trembling, sad, I knelt,
Till my grateful tears were streaming,
As His pardoning love I felt!
Then the bells, with quicker ringing,
Chimes upon the sweet air flinging,
Seemed a choir of angels singing,
Brother, "Come!"

Biographical.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Doctor George M. Clellan,

Late professor of surgery in the Jefferson Medical College, &c. &c., of Philadelphia, died suddenly on the 9th of May last, in the 51st year of his age. Pennsylvania has sustained a great loss in one of her most gifted sons. He was one of the most eminent both as a teacher and practitioner, and lived and died without his superior in surgery.—"Unlike to other men, a snow-crowned peak of science, towering high;" in practice, he was ready—fertile in resources, and as a consultant, it was impossible to meet with any one who had a higher sense of etiquette and propriety. Towards his younger brethren, he was extremely kind and considerate; always attempting to elevate the character of the attending physician. In the estimation of the family, communicating freely the practical knowledge which experience had enabled him to acquire, and suggesting his own views with great courtesy, and without dogmatism. We knew him well and are sure we do not err, in saying that he is sincerely regretted by all who knew him. No man needs a better epitaph than to be thus remembered by those that knew him. "He wished Prodesse quam conspici," To do good, rather then to be to conspicious.

He who among physicians shone so late,
And by his wise prescriptions conquered fate,
Now lies extended in the silent grave,
Nor him alive would his vast merit save.
But still his fame shall last, his bright example live,,
And all sepulchral monuments survive.

DR. A. W. KNIGHT, late of Bucks County Pennsylvania.

From Godey's Lady's Book.

STEPHEN GIRARD,

Was born on the 24th of May, 1750, near Bordeaux, in France. His parents were in a humble sphere of life, and his education was confined to a limited knowledge of reading and writing. He left his native country, at the age of ten or twelve years, as a cabin-boy in a vessel bound for the West Indies. The loss of his eye at that time tended to increase the natural moroseness of his temper, as he was sensitive to the ridicule of his associates. He remained but a short time in the West Indies, and again as cabin-boy sailed for New York. Having gained the confidence of his employer, he became first mate, then captain of a small vessel, and made several profitable voyages to New Orleans. Engaging successfully in small adventures, he soon became part owner of the cargo and vessel which he commanded. It is not known what first induced him to go to Philadelphia, but he became in 1769 an obscure trader in Water street.

About this time he was married, and his only child died in childhood. His married life was unhappy, and he applied to the legislature of Pennsylvania for a divorce.

In partnership with Isaac Hazlehurst, Esq., of Philadelphia, he purchased two vessels to trade with St. Domingo, but the vessels were captured and taken to Jamaica, and the firm was dissolved. From 1772 to 1776 he probably acted as shipmaster and merchant, dispatching goods to New Orleans or St. Domingo, remaining at home sometimes to settle accounts and adjust profits. The war which followed injured his commercial business, and he opened a small grocery shop in Water street, connected with a bottling establishment for claret and cider. On the approach of the British, 1777, he purchased a small tract of land called Mount Holly, on which was a house where he sold his fluids to great advantage to the American soldiers, as the encampment was in the vicinity.

Upon the evacuation of Philadelphia, he returned to the city and occupied a range of frame stores in Water steet, which were filled with pieces of cordage, sails and old blocks, which were destined to fit out ships at some future time.

In 1780, Mr. Girard again entered upon the New Orleans and St. Domingo trade, and increased his gains so much as to enable him to extend his enterprise to a larger scale. He leased for ten years a range of brick and frame stores, one of which he occupied, and rented the others to great advantage, and has been heard to say he dated his subsequent good fortune to this foundation.

His connection with his brother, Captain John Girard, terminated in consequence of misunderstanding, and the partnership was dissolved, and his share of the business amounted to about thirty thousand dollars.

His wife died in 1815, having been twenty-five years a patient in the insane department of the Pennsylvania Hospital, on which occasion he presented to that institution the sum of three thousand dollars, besides liberally rewarding the attendants.

His profits were greatly increased by the circumstances of two of his ships being at St. Domingo at the time of the insurrection on that island, when the planters in their alarm rushed to the docks to deposit their most valuable property in the ships lying there, and returned to secure more, but most were massacred, and but few claims were ever made on the property, which was found to be very great. This was sent to Philadelphia, and added greatly to his original fortune.

In the year 1791, Mr. Girard commenced building ships—which have been a source of pride to Philadelphia—to engage in trade with Calcutta & China. He showed some national feeling in naming his ships Montesquieu, Helvetius, Voltaire and Rousseau.

Mr. Girard's conduct during the dreadful pestilence which in 1793 visited the beautiful city of Philadelphia, is well known, and sufficient to redeem his character from the selfishness and want of feeling generally attributed to it. He entered into the most loathsome abodes, and performed constantly at the hospital the most menial services. It is probable that his early residence in a tropical climate made him less liable to the disease, but this does not in any degree abate the credit he deserves for exposing his life for his fellow-beings.

The establishment of his private bank, which was probably at first intended merely as a temporary circumstance, finally conferred upon the community great advantages, and rendered very important service to the government.

A circumstance which occurred in 1813 enabled him to add materially to his own funds, besides the benefit to the national treasury from the Montesquieu, captured in the Delaware by a British frigate, with an invoice cargo of two hundred thousand dollars, consisting of teas, nankeen and silks, from Canton; but it was determined by the captors, to avoid the risk of a recapture in attempting to carry their prize to a British port, to send a flag of truce to Mr. Girard and offer him a ransom. He immediately sent to the British commander the sum of ninety-three thousand dollars in doubloons, and is supposed to have realized by the transaction half a million of dollars.

His patriotism was shown in 1814 by his judicious and liberal aid to the country at a time when an invading army was marching over the land and the national treasury exhausted.

One of the distinguishing characteristics of Mr. Girard was his public spirit. He subscribed one hundred and ten thousand dollars for the navigation of the Schuylkill, besides numerous loans at various times. At one time, when the country was believed to have been injured by an injudicious course of internal improvements, he made a voluntary loan of one hundred thousand dollars. He erected in Philadelphia numerous blocks of buildings, adding much to its beauty. Among other public-spirited acts, he subscribed two hundred thousand dollars to the Danville and Pottsville railroad, and ten thousand dollars toward the erection of a public exchange.

In person, Mr. Girard was low and square, but muscular, and bearing the characteristic appearance of an old sailor. His skin was dark, and the loss of his eye added to the cold and hard expression of his face. His style of dress was peculiar, and generally very shabby. His equipage was always mean, and his personal habits penurious in the extreme.

He was a total disbeliever in the Christian religion, and his sentiments were those of Rousseau and Voltaire, and yet he gave liberally to several Christian denominations.

Girard lived to the advanced age of eighty-four, and his death was hastened from his disregard of all assistance. Being partially blind; he was knocked down by a wagon when crossing the street, which nearly took off his ear, badly bruised his head, and almost totally deprived him of sight. From this time his health declined, and in December 1830, an attack of influeza ended his existence. He died on the 26th of that month, in a back room at his house in Water steet.

By his will, he bequeathed to the "Pennsylvania Hospital," thirty thousand dollars; to the "Deaf and Dumb Institution," twenty thousand; to the "Public Schools of the city and county of Philadelphia," ten thousand; to the "Orphan's Asylum," ten thousand; to the "Relief of distressed Masters of ships," ten thousand; to the "Masonic Loan," twenty thousand; for the erection of public school, six thousand; to all the captains in his employ, having performed a given service, fifteen hundred dollars each; to his apprentices, each five hundred dollars: to the city of New Orleans, two hundred and eight thousand arces of land, with thirty slaves, and the remainder of his lands in Louisiana, to the corporation of Philadelphia; to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania he gave three hundred thousand dollars for internal improvement; the sum of two millions was left for the purpose of the erection of a building and founding a college for orphan children. In addition to these, Mr. Girard made considerable bequests to his relatives; but the bulk of his immense fortune was left to the city of Philadelphia, where his fortune had been made. He gave, in his will, particular directions for expending portions of his wealth in certain public improvements, among others, five hundred thousand dollars for the improvement of the Delaware front of the city and the widening of Water street; and he desired that a square of the city which he had long kept vacant between Chestnut and Market and Eleventh and Twelfth streets, should be intersected by a street and covered with four blocks of buildings, erected on a uniform plan, which was done soon after his decease; and the rents of these buildings now constitute an important part of the revenues of the city. The new street and the splendid row of buildings on Chesnut are now respectively designated by the name of Girard.

"In his will," says Mr. Lanman, "he clearly showed what had been the object of his long and fixed labor in acqusition. While he was forward—with an apparent disregard of self—to expose his life in behalf of others in the midst of pestilence, to aid the internal improvements of the country, and to promote its commercial prosperity by all the means within his power, he yet had more ambitious designs. He wished to hand himself down to immortality by the only mode that was practicable for a man in his position, and he accomplished precisely that which was the grand aim of his life. He wrote his epitaph in those extensive and magnificent blocks and squares which adorn the streets of his adopted city, in the public works and eleemosynary establishments of his adopted state, and erected his own monument and embodied his own principles in a marble-roofed palace for the education of the orphan poor. We who shall hereafter gaze upon that splendid edifice, the most perfect model of architecture in the new world, will perceive the result of the singular character of its founder, and shall be left in doubt whether, after all, his faults were not overbalanced by his ultimate munificence."

A word to Paul Pry.

Bro. Bassett: I see in the last number of the Recorder, an article over the signature Paul Pry, which writer in one or two other pieces is laboring to show the superior privileges of the unstationed ministers and preachers of the Methodist Protestant Church, over the local Ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Now, sir, we have heard no complaint in regard to the privileges of the ministers and Preachers of the M. P. Church, but it is likely that many of them are not aware of the doings of the last Pittsburgh Annual Conference, or the alarm might have been sounded before this. We would ask Brother Pry, then, if he did not vote for a resolution at the last Conference, compelling the unstationed preachers to come up to that tribunal, and then, there, and no where else, undergo an examination before they can be elected to orders? If so, did he give that vote in view of increasing or curtailing their privileges? Come, Brother Pry, we know you like a book. We know, too, that you are a friend to mutual rights. Now, do you not think that the unstationed preachers had better be on the look-out lest the Itinerants might take it into their heads to deprive them of some of their glorious privileges about which you have been talking so much of late?

Is the Common use of Tobacco Sinful?

NO. III.

Brother Bird: I now come to speak on my third and NASTY argument, in support of the proposition that the common use of tobacco is sinful, and I hope all decent people will excuse me for introducing this filthy subject to their view, and I will promise that (unless circumstances should make it necessary,) I will not again annoy you by introducing it. But to the argument. "These habits are filthy and disgusting."

Under the Jewish dispensation, cleanliness of person and attire, was strictly enjoined upon all God's people; for instance in Exodus, 19, 10, the Lord required, as a part of preparation necessary on the part of the people, for His appearing in their midst, that they should wash their clothes—that they should be free from external filth. The priests were required, before coming to the altar to serve, to wash their clothes and bathe their flesh in water. In short the strictest cleanliness was enjoined in every department of the camp of Israel. The apostle Paul says, let every thing be done decently and in order—that cleanliness of person, dress and conduct is a christian duty, I suppose no one will deny.

The use of tobacco in all its forms tends to pollute and defile the person! 1 It pollutes or taints the breath—gives it an offensive smell. I know that some people have bad breath who do not use tobacco, but its use always gives an additional offensiveness. 2 It blackens and defiles the mouth and teeth. 3 Chewers, snuffers and rubbers stain and besmear their clothes. 4 Smokers often burn theirs, and they bespatter and stain carpets, floors, walls, andirons, stoves, &c. And oh, what an intolerable strench is raised when tobacco juice is spurted upon a heated stove.

Again, these tobacco consumers do many filthy deeds—how they defile and abuse the house of God! Behold their masticated quids lying upon the floor in ponds of saliva. Go into the sacred desk and see in many instances it might well be compared to a spit box.—"There is no place clean"—all are polluted with saliva and filthiness. I have seen private dwellings, that had been used for the worship of God, after service was over, look like there had been a gang of brutes stabled in them for some time. And perhaps the good lady of the house had taken special pains to have her floor white and clean; and that was the treatment she received for her kindness. Some have refused to have public worship in their houses on that account. It sometimes requires much hard & unpleasant labor to clean away the filth & stain.

Tobacco chewers sometimes discharge their saliva about the fire, among the cooking vessels, and so near uncovered dishes of victuals, that it would almost make a decent man's flesh crawl to see it. I have seen tobacco chewers, when about to sit down to eat, take the half masticated quid from their mouths with their naked hands, and deposite it in their waistcoat pocket, and after the meal was over, put the precious bait into their mouths again for a second hearing!! Once more; I heard a tobacco chewer say, once he was standing in front of a fire, over which a pot of mush was boiling, and he took the exhausted quid from his mouth and threw it,—and where do you suppose it lit? in the fire? No but (shall I say) in that identical mush-pot!!!

I said these habits, that is chewing, smoking, snuffing and rubbing tobacco, are filthy and disgusting. And that they are filthy, I think I have already shown; and to say that such things are not disgusting would be to pay a poor compliment to the taste of society. But to particularize a little. Who can witness the chewer with his quid-bloated cheek, a hem around his mouth, with streaks of amber from the corners thereof; or the smoker with a pipe, the stem of which is badly affected with rattles; or the snuff taker with besmeared nostrils; or the snuff rubber with black teeth, gums and smutted lips, without feeling unpleasant sensations about the stomach? Here let me point out the marks of the snuff rubber, black mouth, pale or sallow complexion, with a painted face.—The most disgusting of all tobacco habits seems to have a death like influence upon the system—brings on premature old age—drives the rosy cheek of health far from its victim, and to restore this, there is a resort to paint, which gives the young lady something the appearance of a paste-board mask. These habits are not only filthy and disgusting, but they combine a degree of folly, to which I know of no parallel among the brute creation—unless it be that of the stump-sucking horse—no, this will not do for a parallel; because he pursues his favorite habit without expense, or injury to his health. It is true his conduct excites the indignation of the beholder, but it is not so well merited as that which is due the devotee to tobacco.—Here I would suggest, that a tobacco user should never put a band or strap around a horses' neck to prevent him from sucking stumps, troughs, &c. It would not be doing as he would wish to be done by.

I presume I have said enough on this filthy subject, and perhaps more than will do good, but be that as it may, I shall feel that I have tried to do my duty—and I can say truly that my object has been to induce some of those who are now afflicted with the desire for tobacco, to abandon it forever, and to pursuade youths and dear little boys that are now free from its influence, to remain so. I would call upon ministers of the gospel, who used it in any of its forms, for the sake of the honor of Christ, to quit it—I would call upon young ladies and gentlemen in view of their health, beauty, usefulness and happiness, to abandon it forever. "Is the common use of tobacco sinful?" My first argument to establish the affirmative of this question was: It is injurous to health—no man has a right to injure his own health; second, it involves unnecessary expense—no man has a right to waste his master's goods; third, these habits are filthy and disgusting—cleanliness is a christian duty; therefore, the common use of tobacco is sinful.

JAS. H. D. HENDERSON.

Miscellaneous.

Grave of John Randolph.

A writer in the Norfolk Beacon describes a visit to the grave of this remarkable man. Speaking of the former residence of Mr. Randolph, he says:

"After a ride of two or three hours, we entered a forest of tall oaks, and were told by Mr. Cardwell, that we were on Mr. Randolph's estate. Shortly, the houses that were occupied by the great and eccentric genius appeared through the intervening trees, built up in the midst of the woods. Not a stump to be seen, not a bush grubbed up! all standing as if the foot of man had never trodden there. Mr. Randolph would not suffer the primitive aspect of things to be disturbed in the least. Not a tree, or branch, or a switch, was allowed to be cut. During his absence in Europe, a limb of an oak, projecting towards a window of one of the houses, drew so near, that old Essex, fearing the window would be broken, cut the limb off. On Mr. Randolph's return, he at once discovered the mutilation, old Essex was called up, and the reasons demanded for cutting off the limb. The old negro told his master he feared the window would be broken. 'Then,' said Mr. Randolph, 'why did you not move the house?'"

The writer here met John, the former body servant of Mr. Randolph, who treated him and his companion with great politeness, conducting them to the winter and summer houses, and other objects of interest in the vicinity. We copy the description of his last resting place:

"At my request, John directed us to his master's grave at the foot of a lofty pine, just a few steps in the rear of the summer house. The place was selected by Mr. Randolph, twenty years before his death, and by his direction his head was laid to the east, instead of the west, the usual position. It was observed to John, his master had ordered his body to be thus laid, that he might watch Henry Clay. John replied, that he had never heard him say anything of the kind. I suppose the position was preferred by Mr. Randolph, because it is the Indian sepulchral posture; his descent from Pocahontas, the Indian princess, being one of the things he much boasted of. A rude unchiselled mass of white, rock, found by Mr. Randolph on a distant part of his estate, many years before his death and used by him, at the door of one of his houses, as a wash-stand, marks the head of the grave. A huge mass of brown stone, also selected by Mr. Randolph, and used as a stepstone to mount his horse, marks the foot of the grave. These rocks were procured and kept for the purpose to which they are now appropriated, and particular direction was given to John on the subject.

"I can never forget my emotion while standing over the unornamented grave of the gifted and eccentric Randolph. The tall, unbroken forest, by which I was surrounded, the silence and gloom that reigned undisturbed amidst the deserted place, the thought of the brilliant mind that once animated the remains, then mouldering beneath the sod upon which I was standing, the vanity of earth's promises, and hopes, and distinctions, impressed my heart and mind with a degree of solemnity and interest I was unwilling to dissipate."

Life of the Husbandman in Hindoostan.—The husbandman rises with the earliest dawn, washes, and says a prayer, then sets out with his cattle to his distant field. After an hour or two he eats some remnants of his yesterday's fare for breakfast, and goes on with his labor till noon, when his wife brings out his hot dinner; he eats it by a brook or under a tree, talks and sleeps till two o'clock, while his cattle also feed and repose. From two till sunset he labors again; then drives his cattle home, feeds them, bathes, eats some supper, smokes, and spends the rest of the evening in amusement with his wife and children, or his neighbors. The women fetch water, grind the corn, and do the household work, besides spinning and such occupations.—Elphistone's History of India.

The King of Prussia, at his own expense, has caused the printing of 17,000 copies of the Scriptures for distribution among the schools of the realm.

Yankee Trick.

During the Revolutionary war, two brothers from one of the eastern ports, were commanders of privateers; they cruised together, and were eminently successful, doing great damage to the enemy, and making money for themselves. One evening, being in the latitude of the shoals of Nantucket, but many miles to the eastward of them, they espied a large British vessel, having the appearance of a merchantman, and made toward her; but to their astonishment, found her to be a frigate in disguise. A very high breeze prevailing, they hauled off in different directions. One only could be persued, and the frigate gained rapidly upon him. Finding he could not run away, the commanding officer had recourse to stratagem. On a sudden he hauled in every sail, and all hands were employed in setting poles, as if shoving his vessel off a bank! The people on board the frigate, amazed at the supposed danger they had run, and to save themselves from being grounded, immediately clawed off, and left the more knowing Yankee 'to make himself scarce.' As soon as night rendered it prudent for him, he hoisted sail in a sea two hundred fathoms deep.

Mr. McDonald, in his travels through sweden, says: "Young children, from the age of one to that of eighteen months, are wrapped up in bandages, like cylindrical wicker baskets, which are contrived so as to keep their bodies straight without interfering much with their growth. They are suspended from pegs in the wall, or laid in any convenient part of the room, without much nicety, where they exist in great silence, and good humor. I have not heard the cries of a child since I came to Sweden."

A wealthy Brahmin at Benares, India, not long since, committed his son to the care of a missionary, using this extraordinary language:—"I feel convinced, sir, after reading your holy shasters, that they contain the true religion. I have not the power to come up to its precepts. But there is my son, take him as your son; feed him at your table, and bring him up a Christian." At the same time he made over to the missionary the sum of $5,000, to defray the expenses of his son's education.

The New Testament of the new Chinese version, prepared by the combined energies of the missionaries of various denominations, is reported as nearly ready for the press. The missionaries are to hold a meeting at Shanghai in June, to compare their views and make arrangements for publishing the entire Bible.

It is stated that Rev. A. A. Phelps. of Boston, who has passed the winter in the West Indies, derived little benefit in respect to his health.—His disease, of a pulmonary nature, is said to be confirmed.

Push On.

The following extract from the writings of John Neal, may have met the eyes of many of our readers before. It is worth repeating, and the truths it contains are worth remembering.

'There are people who having begun life by setting the wind and tide, are always just ready to give up, and for that very reason always helpless and good for nothing. Good voyages are made both ways.

'A certain amount of opposition is a great help to a man. Kites rise against, not with the wind. Even a head wind is better than nothing. No man ever worked his voyage anywhere in a dead calm. The best wind for anything in a long run, is a side wind. If it blows aft, how is he to get back?

'Let no man wax pale, therefore, because of opposition. Opposition is what he wants and must have, to be good for anything. Hardship is the naiive soil of manhood and self-reliance. He that cannot abide the storm without flinching or quailing, strips himself in the sunshine, and lays down by the wayside, to be overlooked and forgotten.

'He who but braces himself up to the struggle, when the wind blows, gives up when they are done and falls asleep in the stillness that follows.

'Did you ever know any body to stick to any kind of business, no matter how unpromising, ten years at most, who did not prosper, No matter how bad it might be at the beginning, if he stuck to it earnestly and faithfully, and tried nothing else, no matter how hard he may have found it sometimes to keep his head above water, still, if he persevered, he always came out bright in the long run—didn't he.

Activity in Heaven.

Because heaven is a place of rest, it does not follow that it is a place of idle inactivity. Like the Sabbath, which is its type, it will be a state of such rest as is consistent with active worship. The activity of heaven will be tireless and untiring. The highest mental and spiritual exercises of those who are admitted there, will not tire; there will be neither flesh nor blood for them to tire; and emancipated from these, the soul in heaven, like the soul on earth, could it be thus set free, will exercise its highest powers, untiring and untired. Nor is this all. Heaven is a state of active beneficence. There all are employed in doing good. They who tasted beneficence as a luxury on earth, shall banquet on it in heaven forever. All shall do good; from the highest seraph that bends before the throne, to the last soul saved, as by fire. No sooner do saved spirits breathe the atmosphere of heaven, than they fly off on errands of love—"ministering angels"—to all who need their ministering offices. How sublimely did Dr. Beecher discourse on this theme to his pupils. Hear him:

"Excepting freedom from sin, intense, vigorous, untiring action, is the mind's highest pleasure. I would not wish to go to heaven, did I believe that its inhabitants were to sit inactive by purling streams, to be fanned into indolent slumber by balmy breezes! Heaven, to be a place of happiness, must be a place of activity. Has the far-reaching mind of Newton rested from his profound investigation? Have David and Isaiah hung up their harps, useless as the dusty arms in Westminister Abbey? Has Paul, glowing with god-like enthusiasm, ceased itinerating the universe of God? Are Peter and Cyprian, and Edwards, idling away eternity in mere psalm singing? Heaven is a place of activity, of never tiring thought. David and Isaiah will sweep noble and lofty strains in eternity, and the mind of saints, unclogged by cumbersome clay, forever feast on a banquet of thought—rich, glorious thought. Young gentlemen, press on—you will never get through. An eternity of untiring activity is before you, and the universe of thought your field."

John Q. Adams, the Ex-President, is said to be worth $350,000.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

OHIO HARMONIST.

The Harmonist will contain a choice selection of about 150 pages of Psalm and Hymn tunes, compiled with much care from the best authors in the United States, to which is added a supplement of Temperance songs, designed for the use of congregations, singing schools, temperance meetings, and musical associations.

It will be arranged in three parts,—parts first and third contain the seven syllables in the patent notes; the seven sounds being represented by seven different characters, to wit:—do, ra, mi, fa, sal, la. si.

Part second contains the four syllables in the old patent notes.

It will also contain the rudiments of music on a plain and concise plan.

The object of the publishers in getting up this work, is to assist the public in singing the do, ra, mi system with much ease and accuracy, without being compelled to go through a long and tedious study of the round note system.

It also contains a Hindoo piece, accompanied with both the Hindoo and English languages.

The entire work will be executed on good paper and in a neat and substantial manner, and bound in good style, by J. A. & U. P. James, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

The work will be completed about the first of June next.

TERMS.—The Ohio Harmonist will be delivered to subscribers at seventy-five cents per single copy, to be paid on delivery. A reasonable discount will be made to wholesale purchasers. All orders addressed to the undersigned at Washington, Guernsey county, Ohio, or Deersville, Harrison county, Ohio, or J. A. & U. P. James, Cincinnati, accompanied with the cash, and post paid, will be promptly attended to.

PROSPECTUS

FOR PUBLISHING A SERIES OF VOLUMES OF SERMONS,
By the Rev. Thomas Potter, Minister of the M. P. Church.
VOLUME I.

THE EVANGELICAL ECONOMY DEVELOPED, IN A SERIES OF DISCOURSES ON THE FACTS, INSTITUTIONS, APPLIANCES, EFFECTS, AND FINAL RESULTS OF THE CHRISTIAN SYSTEM, VIZ:

I. The dispensation of the Gospel the subject of prophetic anticipation.
II. The evangelic announcement of the Savior's nativity.
III. The divine mandate at the incarnation of the Son of God.
IV. The introduction of the Mediatorial economy the subject of rejoicing in heaven.
V. The work of grace on the day of Pentecost the model for religious revivals.
VI. The primitive Evanglisits the patterns of all succeeding preachers.
VII. The divine institution for saving the world.
VIII. The moral revolutions which the triumphs of the Gospel accomplish.
IX. The religious excitement produced by the successful preaching of the Gospel, defended.
X. The principal cause of the failure of the agencies of Christianity.
XI. The penitent sinner on earth the delight of the Angels in heaven.
XII. The final consummation of the dispensation of grace in the solemnities of the day of judgment.

The views embodied in these discourses are such as are held in common by all evangelical denominations. The author eschews all controversy. The style is didactic. Nothing sectarian has a place in these sermons, which are simply devoted to popular impression and instruction It is proposed to put to the Press these Sermons as soon as a sufficient number of subscribers have been secured to justify their publication. If the author meet with adequate encouragement in the sale of this first Volume, it will be succeeded by a second, and so on.

[The contents of the second, third, fourth and fifth volumes are also given in the prospectus which has been furnished us, but as the first volume is to be published separately, the above will sufficiently for the present, indicate the nature and plan of the work. Ed.]

The whole of these discourses were prepared and delivered during a not unsuccessful ministry of upwards of twenty years, partly in this country and partly in Great Britain; and are already committed to writing.

Each Volume will be sold at the moderate charge of One Dollar, to be paid for on delivery.

The Volumes will be neatly bound,—octavo size,—and printed on good paper, in a clear type. Each Volume will contain upwards of three hundred pages. Subscriptions will be received for the first Volume alone; or for the first and second; or the whole series may be subscribed for at once.

Mr. Levi Petit is authorized to receive subscriptions for these contemplated publications; or a letter addressed to the author, Mount Vernon, Knox county, Ohio, with a request over the writer's signature, to become a subscriber, will insure the insertion of his name on the subscription list. [May 20.] THOMAS POTTER.

CIRCULAR,

the ministers and Lay members of the Methdist Protestant Church, within the bounds of he Pittsburgh Annual Conference.

Dear Brethren and Friends: The duty of dressing you upon a most important subject, s been assigned to us, by the Board of Managers
"the Preachers' Aid Society, of the Pittsburgh nual Conference, of the Methodist Protestant urch." We sensibly feel our incompetency perform aright the task devolving upon us, and cerely wish it had been intrusted to abler
nds. As our responsibility, however, is exactproportioned to our means of doing good, and can only employ such as we possess, we cheer-ly cast our mite into the treasury of the Lord, d earnestly invoke His blessing upon it.

The closing scene of Christ's mission on earth, will be recollected, was the institution of the pel ministry. "Go ye therefore," said the ssed Redeemer, "and teach all nations, bap-ng them in the name of the Father, and of the n, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to serve all things, whatsoever I have commanded u: and lo, I am with you always, even unto e end of the world." As this commond of the viour, to his disciples, was given, just before ascension to glory, we may reasonably conde, that it was at least equal in magnitude, and the consequences resulting from it, to any he livered, while journeying through this "vale of rs." That genuine Christians, from the sol-n and unprecedented circumstances attending so regard that extraordinary event, it would be most impious to doubt. It may therefore be af-med, that what the extinction of the sun in the mament would be to the natural, the removal of evangelical and zealous ministry would be to moral world. In the former case light and tility would forsake the earth, and in the latter ligion and virtue the souls of men. And yet, range to say, the men of God, whose vacation s to win souls to Christ, are often left, by pro-sing Christians, to pine in poverty and suffer
"the ills that flesh is heir to." This surely ght not so to be. Such a state of things, is a ep, if not an indelible stain on Christianity.
o think of men, whose physical and mental engies have been exhausted in the service of the urch, and whose wives and children are par-lly, or perhaps wholly destitute of the common cessaries of life, is sufficient, one would image, to arouse our slumbering sympathies, and cite into powerful action every dormant prin-ple of benevolence within us.

Clerical members of the Pittsburgh Annual nference! our chief reliance is placed on you, regard to the successful prosecution of the bevolent enterprise, in which we are engaged.
ou must feel as no other class of men, in the ature of things, possibly can, for your superanated and worn out brethren. They occupy now e unenviable position, which ere long, you will obably fill; and expect you to render them such d, as you may need, at no distant day, from en, comparatively young in the ministry. It ems therefore, almost like a work of supererogation to press upon your attention the importance obtaining as many life and annual subscribers possible to the "Preacher's Aid Society," prior the sitting of the next Annual Conference.
e would however, "stir up your pure minds by ay of rememberance, in reference to the faith-l discharge of the all important duty, just luded to. To direct your attention, in more rnest langaage, to the subject of which we are eating, would be manifesting towards you in r judgment a less degree of respect than you e entitled to.

To our brethren, who will represent the laity, the approaching Annual Conference, we take e liberty, in conclusion, of making a few re-arks. We feel persuaded you are disposed to ive a comfortable support to the embassadors of hrist, who labor among us in word and doctrine.
ou know, that "the laborer is worthy of his ire;" that we should "not muzzle the mouth of e ox that treadeth out the corn," and that "they hich minister in holy things live of the things of e temple, and they which wait at the altar are artakers with the altar. Even so hath the Lord rdained that they which preach the gospel should ve of the gospel." From the foregoing quota-ons, taken from the book of God, it is obvious at there cannot be a more sacred or imperative uty, than that of making suitable provision for en divinely called and qualified to instruct us in e science of salvation. Let us therefore, dear rethren, appeal to you, by every high and holy onsideration, to use all your influence, and tax our energies to the utmost, in favor of the reachers' Aid Society, which if properly sustain-
, by the members of our Zion, will be productive of good to an extent, of which we can form no adequate conception. We are, in the bonds of the gospel, faithfully yours.

Preachers' Aid Society.

Bro. Bassett: I am anxious to be doing something, as I am unable to attend my appointments and preach. Therefore I will say a few things relative to our Aid Society, which you are at liberty to publish should you think them worthy a place in your valuable paper. I look upon this society as one of vast importance to the Methodist Protestant Church in the Pittsburgh District. This is one of the most useful societies that could be gotten within the church. One that might prove a lasting blessing in giving permanency to the ministry. One that might pour a flood of comforts into the hearts of the afflicted and worn-out. Many of our old experienced and talented ministers have been compelled to leave the Itinerancy and engage in other callings in order that they might provide a shelter in old age and infirmities, while their places in the church have been filled up with inexperienced youths like myself. Thus the wheels of Mutual Rights have been retarded. Had the church made any provision for superanuated ministers, could they have looked forwards to the day when they would be able to toil in the vineyard of the Lord no longer, that the people of the Lord had provided them with food and raiment, these lovers of Lay-Representation would yet have been in the field unfurling the flag of ecclesiastical liberty; and many whose mental powers are yet chained down to the "iron wheel" of despotism, might have been rejoicing as God's free men. A word to the membership of the church: brethren and sisters, you are deeply interested in this important matter, you should look to this society as an enterprize worthy your attention and contributions. You have embarked on board the ship launched in the city of Baltimore, in the year 1828. Your all is upon this vessel. Does it not concern you, then, to know whether skilful men are at her helm or not? Does it not concern you to know whether this ship is going to make the port, or become a cast-a-way upon the rough sea of time? Many good and substantial vessels have been lost for the want of a skilful pilot, while those of an inferior character have out-braved the storm and made the port.

Is there a passenger on this ship, male or female, who would not give five dollars sooner than abandon this beautiful craft of Mutual Rights, and take passsge on one where man could not enjoy his Natural Rights? Five dollars contributed by each member within the Pittsburgh District would amount to $35,000. This sum thrown into the Aid Society as a permanent fund, the interest of which would amount to $2,100 annually. This handsome sum of money would feed and clothe a number of Widows, Orphans, and Superanuated Ministers.

But say you, many of our members are poor, and could not give this amount. Admit it, but I am led to conclude from observation that the number is but few, comparatively speaking, who could not give five dollars once during their lives were they willing. I know that there are many who have their names in the church that never have 6¼ cents to give to any benevolent purpose whatever, yet these same persons spend dollars annually in that which is neither food nor raiment. You see them on big meeting occasions as fine as butter flies, in fine style, best of cloth, ribbons in abundance; pockets filled with cloves, cinnamon. Some waste flour enough in dusting their faces, during a year, to make a widow a loaf of bread. Let a steward present a bag or hat to them, they turn away with disgust, perhaps while he is making ready to take up the collection they take their flight until the next big meeting. These are, generally speaking, our poor, pauper, non-praying members. There is not one of these members but what might pay five dollars in a year, and sacrifice nothing but their extravagance. I have said nothing relative to the unnecessary waste of feathers, which might be saved to make a bed for the widow and the orphan.

Yours, W. A. PORTER.

A few Questions addressed to those who can answer.

It is said, that one simpleton may ask more questions than many wise men can answer.—This saying, however, does not preclude the propriety of asking questions for the wise to answer. Possibly every thing depends upon the character of the questions. Well, then, are not secret Societies mentioned in history as far back as the times of Moses? Have they not existed in different countries from that time to the present?—St. Paul alludes to such societies, and he disapproved of them. But he did not form other secret societies on better principles. He gloried in the publicity given to the Gospel even by its enemies, and his persecutors, who thought to "add affliction to his bonds." Paul was a public man. All the Apostles were such as was Paul. Men of the light. It is an insult, or would be, if any were to say seriously that not one of the Apostles founded, or united with, any secret societies!—A secret society founded by an Apostle! A christian secret association! These secret societies were all heathen! Did any of the primitive christians belong to the heathen secret societies?—There is an important question to be propounded here—if it has not been anticipated; to-wit: Was it possible for any one of the Apostles, or all of them conjointly, to form a secret——mark, a secret society for any purpose whatever, in the name and by the authority of their Lord and Master? We know not. Very well. We should like to see the authority of some people who formed secret christian societies now-a-days. We should like to be introduced into the holes and corners where they are the lights of the world.—Should be pleased to see their city under ground; and the bushel which covers their candle. Their good works done in secret—not in the church for the glory of the Head of the Church—but done in secret for their own glory—or mutual advantage—as in duty bound. Alas, see, we must read aright: "Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid. Neither do men light a candle and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick that it may give light unto all in the house. Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father who is in heaven." If christians are not the light of the moral world, what are they good for in the moral world? Instrumentally they are nothing worth. But this is a mistake, says some one. For, 'such a man is a good man, but he is not a useful man.' So, then, if he is not useful, what is he good for? Ah, but he is both useful and good. He belongs to a society that don't let its right hand know what its left hand doeth. Judge not from appearances. Nay, certainly not, where nothing appears.

Lack-a-day, we wish we knew how to reason. What said our Divine Teacher? "I spake openly to the world. I ever taught in the synagogue, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing. Why askest thou me? Ask them which heard me, what I have said unto them: behold they know what I said." Truth blushes at nothing except at attempts to conceal it. 'Proclaim my Gospel to all the world.'—Here again, we say, the gospel glories in publicity. A secret religion—what is that?

See, our Lord is sending his word into all the world. In what part of the inspired books are heathen converts taught to form secret christian societies?

It is said of most churches in this country, that for some two or three years, there has been a decrease in their numbers. How is this to be accounted for? How old are some of the secret associations? It is also said, that thousands of young men, and others under forty years of age, have joined the secret confederations, during the last two or three years; and that other thousands, instead of becoming church members have found their resting places in secret places. Even some ministers not over forty years of age have become secret doers.

We must conclude: and we say in all seriousness, that not one and all of these secret confederations have been instituted by the authority of the Lord Jesus. All of them together cannot save a soul. ☞'No great moral changes can be effected by secret confederations. This is impossible in the nature of things. No favorable influence can be exerted by what can not, or will not show its face. Look into a man's eyes, and your words will go down upon your glance into his inmost soul—blink, or look aside, and he will not quail under your strongest expressions. So it is with moral movements. As they should be for the daylight, so they should be in the light of day. It is what we do before others that tells upon them.' W. S. S.

REMINISCENCES

OF THE FIRST SETTLEMENT OF OHIO.

NO. XI.

Friend Bassett: I have told you I wished to say something of Harmer Blenerhassett, not because he was necessarily connected with the early history of this State, more than others who came after the war was over, but because there has been much said, giving false views of the transactions of a public character, in which his name has been conspicuous, and it has lead to a great deal of Romance in regard to him, his wife, and the place of his residence.

Mr. Blenerhassett came to Marietta soon after the treaty with the Indians, I think about the year 1797, possibly '96. He first resided in the Stockade, in a house where Mr. Charles Green, a merchant, had lived until the close of the war, when he moved on to the Ohio bank. The house was about 80 or 90 feet from my father's door, and I was often in it while he resided there. Mr. B. was very near sighted, so much so as to render all careful physical exercise, almost impossible. Mrs. Blenerhassett was a woman of good figure, moderately handsome, genteel, and dignified in her deportment. They were both no doubt well educated, and it was evident they were in easy circumstances. They brought with them a pair of carriage horses, and a saddle horse. For this he appeared to be quite solicitous their groom should discharge his duty well, as I have frequently seen him examine very closely, whether they were quite clean, and in order to do so, he had to bring his nose within an inch or two of the animal. Unfortunately, we had no carriage roads, and his match horses were useless as such. His furniture was such as excited the curiosity of persons like myself, who had never seen anything called elegant; as it was when compared with what this back woods then afforded: and there was a method in their household, which showed they were accustomed to good style;—furniture was rubbed every day; knives and forks scoured after each meal &c. &c., which to children, seemed quite unnecessary, but if you compare their furniture, and style of living with that we see here now, in the houses of our wealthy citizens, there was nothing to attract any particular notice. It was by comparison, that their style excited attention; and perhaps in some envy; in others ambition. No impression is left on my mind, as if they desired to exhibit themselves as above those with whom they associated; but that they were living as nearly as they had been accustomed to, as the circumstances admitted, and where they could not enjoy such refinement, or luxuries, a disposition to conform to the habits and usages of society. The Island on which he afterward located, just below the mouth of little Kenhawa, and twelve miles below the Muskingum, belonged to a Mr. Elijah Bachus. It is three miles long, and near the middle, the width was very trifling, (about two rods at the top of the bank.) The number of acres in it, and another between it and the Virginia shore was about 300 acres, about 150 of which was about the narrows. This part Mr. Blenerhassett bought; and went on to it, as it was cleared, and there was a dwelling house on it, where a Dr. Pettit, who had married a Miss Woodbridge, a niece of Mr. Bachus had lived. Mr. Blenerhassett also entered into a partnership, as a silent partner with Dudley Woodbridge Jr., in the mercantile business, in Marietta. Mr. B. speedily began to improve his grounds, bought a few slaves, (as he was then in Virginia) and became a regular Farmer. I was not myself, well acquainted with his habits there, but was in daily intercourse with those who were. Mr. B. was a great proficient in playing the bass viol, and was fond of music: saw a good deal of company from Marietta, and the farming settlements of Belpre; and frequently invited young men who could play on instruments, to visit them, and play with him, and for the amusement of his visitors; especially after he had erected his house. The house was two stories in the main building, with offices for the kitchen, on one wing, and study, library &c., on the other, projecting at about an angle of 45 degrees towards the front, all pointing directly up the river. As I said they entertained a good deal of company, but Mrs. B. always attended personally to her domestic affairs, kitchen, dairy, &c., so that most of her mornings were occupied in household affairs, while her company amused themselves in the grounds or with Mr. B. in music, reading, &c. Her afternoons and evening were devoted to company or amusements. She was without question a woman of education and talents; and probably a little too ambitious for the life she there led. They passed amongst their acquaintance for Irish, though he would call himself English, she would say, "my dear you know you are Irish." The place was handsome enough, and pleasant, when plenty of company, and good cheer enlivened the scene; but often it was dreary enough! No neighbors but by crossing the river, and this frequently full of ice, or overflowing its banks and full of drift; no prospect except directly up the river, nothing to excite emulation, or satisfy ambition; it was rather a place for retiring from the world, than enjoying the benefits of society, and the benefits of civilization. And, this is probably the secret of their after misfortunes.

History furnishes sufficient evidence that Aaron Burr was artful, ambitious and designing. After failing to become the President of the United States, in his contest with Thomas Jefferson, other ambitious views entered his mind, and he visited this State, and the West, in the prosecution of these schemes, whatever they were; and Marietta amongst the rest of the places, where he spent some time. I remember him well, a small, trim, erect man, wearing a small cue of hair; quick and active in his movements. He soon ascertained that Mr. Blenerhassett had money, and credit, and was not long in engaging him in his projects. I am under the impression Mrs. B's. spirit, and ambition, was the means through which he operated upon Mr. B. to draw him into his plans. Certain it is, he did so; and involved him in extensive pecuniary responsibilities; believing as he no doubt did, that the expedition, was sanctioned by the then President, (Thomas Jefferson) and was for the glory and benefit of the United States; for I have reason to know, that such was the representation made, to those active enterprising young men, who were engaged, for the expedition. There was no idea of treasonable practices against the United States. Many young men of first character were engaged; but to none was the secret entrusted. They were assured it was such as honor and patriotism sanctioned. There were many conjectures; such as Revolutionizeing Mexico, annexing Texas, &c., but all was conjecture. Mr. Blenerhassett through his partner, engaged Col. Joseph Barker, who lived about six miles up the Muskingum, to build nine or ten boats, carrying from 2 to 3 tons each. They were very frail boats, built like a skiff sharp at both ends, and sided up with thin boards like weather-boarding and covered. No one thought of their being dangerous to the peace or harmony of the government, but they were called in derision Burr's Flotilla. Whatever the object of Burr was, President Jefferson saw, or thought he saw in Burr's plans, a chance to render him odious, and make political capital out of the circumstances, and there were not wanting in Marietta, as elsewhere, those who were willing to advance their own popularity, at the expense of Burr, and his associates, and as a means to the end, to represent the preparations as of greater magnitude than the facts would justify; for in themselves they were contemptable, when viewed as a military adjunct, for there was no preparation, no embodying of men, or purchase of arms, or presenting of flags, as we saw a few years since, for Texas, without exciting in our government, any alarm. A little pork, and a few barrels of parched corn meal, was prepared to send off in them, and had it been desirable to arrest the boats, a constable was all the force which would have been necessary, to do so. But this would have offered no fame to the actors, and besides there was no legal cause for such arrest. It was known that several young men were engaged, in the expedition. It might be mercantile for any thing that appeared. In the absence of legal cause a fictitious one might be made to answer the purpose of the actors, and gull the people; and such a one was got up, and carried into execution, the particulars of which I must reserve for an other communication.

MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCE.

From the Missionary Herald.

South Africa.

LETTER FROM MR. BRYANT, SEPTEMBER 28, 1846.

Mr. Bryant, it will be remembered, embarked for South Africa on the 15th of April, 1846. He arrived at Port Natal on the 15th of August, and on the same day proceeded to Umlazi, the station occupied by Dr. Adams, where he was at the date of this letter.

As it was Saturday night when Mr. Bryant arrived at Umlazi, the first day which he spent on missionary ground was the Christian Sabbath. An extract from his letter, describing this first Sabbath, is given below.

The Sabbath morning was as beautiful and quiet as any that ever dawned on New England. Soon after breakfast the natives were seen coming from various directions to attend the Sabbath school; their dark forms moving in silent procession, one after another, over the neighboring hills and valleys towards the sanctuary. They first assembled in the school-room, which is under the same roof with Doct. Adams' house. There many of the females, who had come almost naked, clothed themselves in plain calico dresses, which are kept hanging up in the school-room for that purpose; and which, at the close of public worship, are again put off, and suspended in the proper place. About two hundred assembled and were taught, a few from the English Testament, but most of them from the Zulu books which have been prepared and printed by the missionaries. In about three quarters of an hour, more had assembled than the school-room would hold, and they all repaired to the chapel; where Doct. Adams spent some time in catechizing them, and hearing them repeat the Lord's prayer and the ten commandments. A few minutes were then allowed for recess, after which public service commenced.

Doct. Adams' chapel will hold about six hundred persons. It was filled, and some stood around on the outside, who could not gain admission. Some were clothed very decently; some had only a shirt or pantaloons; a few were dressed in the cast off garments of soldiers; and others wore nearly naked. A portion of the men brought along their assagais and war clubs, which they left outside of the chapel door. This was almost our first view of the natives, and a singular group they were, six hundred of them, thus appareled, and crowded together in one long and narrow chapel.

The service commenced, and I looked around with interest to see how such a company of heathens would conduct themselves in the house of God. I was surprised, and happily disappointed, to find among them so much order and decorum, stillness and attention. I do not know but they were as quiet and attentive as congregations of this size usually are in New England. I saw no laughing or whispering, and but little restlessness and nodding; though the weather was warm, and some of them had walked twelve miles or more (sometimes they walk twenty miles) to attend public worship. So far as their conduct in the chapel was concerned, they certainly would not suffer in comparison with many congregations in America. Had my observation ended here, I should have gone away strongly impressed in their favor, and with too high an opinion of their civilization.

These people are little accustomed to restraint; and the task of sitting still an hour and a half at a time, is one that is seldom or never imposed upon them, except at public worship. When the service closed, therefore, their pent up feelings seemed to gush forth with a vehemence which was the greater because of the previous temporary restraint; and many of them, on emerging from the chapel, started off on a full run, chattering & laughing like so many children just released from the confinement of the school-room. One or two minutes sufficed to give vent to their feelings; and they then retired with a good degree of silence and order. Save this one momentary outbreak, I saw hardly anything during the day that would be deemed reprehensible among the people of New England.

About three o'clock in the afternoon, the people again assembled in the school-room for instruction; but there were not so many as in the former part of the day. After singing and prayer, Doct. Adams questioned them with regard to the sermon, adding further explanations and remarks suited to press the subject home to their hearts.

In addition to these regular Sabbath services, Doct. Adams generally teaches school during a portion of the day, conducts a weekly lecture on Tuesday or Thursday afternoons, and attends prayers in the Zulu language every evening in the school-room, where twenty-five or thirty of the natives are usually present. A portion of Scripture is read, acccompanied with explanatory remarks, and often with questions addressed to the native; a hymn is then sung, and the service closes with prayer.

An interesting event occurred on the Wednesday after our arrival, which is worthy of a passing notice. I allude to the marriage of two men, who give evidence of being truly converted, and who, of their own accord, abandoned polygamy and desired to be married in a Christian manner. Men here commonly buy their wives with cattle, paying about ten head for a common woman, and thirty or forty head for the daughter of a chief. It is a mark of wealth and honor to have several wives; and hence the natives are desirous of increasing the number, as they have the means. One chief who lives a few miles distant, it is said, has eleven.

The men to whom I have already alluded, had both had two wives. One man was married to the woman whom he had purchased first; the other to the one whom he had purchased in the second instance, because the first opposed his becoming a Christian, and had no desire to live with him afterwards. Having been duly published according to the English laws, they were publicly married by Doct. Adams in the school-room, about eighty of the natives coming in as spectators. The occasion was improved to show them the sinfulness of polygamy, and to press on them the duty of living according to the institutions of Christ.

After the marriage ceremony was performed, about half a bushel of wedding cake was distributed among the people, made of Indian meal, to which was added a little sweetening and a few raisins. Mrs. Adams had also prepared a supply of coffee which, with the native cake, made a comfortable repast. At the close of the entertainment the people retired to their homes, apparently well satisfied with the events of the day. From one of the native converts I have since learned, however, that the marriage has led to considerable discussion among the people; and there is in some minds a strong feeling of indignation and opposition. This was to be expected.

Consequences of Smoking.

We have become somewhat identified with a sincere and uncompromising opposition to the idle, pernicious, and filthy practice of Tobacco-using in general and street-smoking in particular. We have hitherto regarded these vile practices, more especially in reference to their bearing upon the non-consumers of the noxious weed, who are most unjustly and oft-times indecently subjected to the disgusting expectoration, and suffocating exhalations of their neighbors and friends.

Who among us is there that does not know dozens of the class of persons to which we allude, who have lovely wives and pure and sensitive children, yet whose breaths, from the united effects of tobacco, rum and cigars, are little if any less repulsive and sickening than would be the malaria of a charnel house?

But it is not only in a social point of view that the abatement of this evil is worthy of every good citizen and philanthropist. Its physical effects are of the most important and alarming character. The editor of the London Literary Gazette holds the following language:—

The wide-spread habit of smoking has not yet had due medical attention paid to it and its consequences. It is only by two or three years' observations that Dr. Laycock had become fully aware of the great changes induced in the system by the abuse of tobacco, and of the varied and obscure forms of disease to which especially excessive smoking gave origin. He proceeded to state some of them as they were met with in the pharyngical mucous membrane, the stomach, the lungs, the heart, the brain, and the nervous system. The tobacco consumed by habitual smokers varied from half an ounce to twelve ounces per week, the usual quantity from two to three ounces. Inveterate cigar smokers will consume from four to five dozen per week. The first morbid result is an inflammatory condition of the mucous membrane of the lips and tongue; then the tonsils and pharyna suffer—the mucous membrane becoming dry and congested. If the thorax be examined well, it will be found slightly swollen, with congested veins meandering over the surface, and here and there a streak of mucous. Action ascends upwards into the posterior nares. The eye becomes affected with heat, slight redness, lachrymation, and a peculiar spasmodic action of the orbicularis muscle, experienced with intolerance of light on awaking in the morning. The frontal sinuses do not escape, but there is a heavy, dull ache in their region. Descending down the alimentary canal, we come to the stomach, where the results in extreme cases are symptoms of gastritis. The action of the heart and lungs is impaired by the influence of the narcotic on the nervous system; but a morbid state of the larynx, trachea, and lungs, results from the direct action of the smoke. The voice is observed to be rendered hoarser and with a deeper tone. Sometimes a short cough results, and a case of ulceration in the cartilages of the larynx came under the doctor's notice. The patient was such a slave to the habit, that he hardly ever had the pipe out of his mouth. Similar sufferings have been caused by similar practices in other instances. Another form is a slight tickling, low down in the pharynx or trachea, and the patient coughs, or rather hawks up, a grumous-looking blood. It is so alarming, as to be mistaken for pulmonary hæmoptysis. The action of tobacco-smoking on the heart is depressing; and some individuals who feel it in this organ more than others, complain of an uneasy sensation about the left nipple—a distressing feeling, not amounting to faintness, but allied to it. The action of the heart is observed to be feeble and irregular. An uneasy feeling is also experienced in or beneath the pectoral muscles, and oftener on the right side than on the left. On the brain the use of tobacco appears to diminish the rapidity of cerebral action, and check the flow of ideas through the mind. It differs from opium and henbane, and rather excites to wakefulness, like green tea, than compoes to sleep; induces a dreaminess which leaves no impression on the memory, leaving a great susceptibility, indicated by a trembling of the hands and irritability of temper. Such are secondary results of smoking; so are blackness of teeth and gum-boils. There is also a sallow paleness of the complexion, an irresoluteness of disposition, a want of life and energy, and, in constant smokers who do not drink, a tendency to pulmonary phthisis. Dr. Wright, of Birmingham, in a communication to the author, fully corroborates his opinions; and both agree that smoking produces gastric disorders, coughs, and inflammatory affections of the larynx and pharynx; diseases of the heart, and lowness of the spirits; and in short, is very injurious to the respiratory, circulating, alimentary and nervous systems.

A Beautiful Sentiment.—The late eminent Judge Sir Allan Park once said at a public meeting in London: "We live in the midst of blessings till we are utterly insensible to their greatness, and of the source from whence they flow. We speak of our civilization, our arts, our freedom, our laws, and forget entirely how large a share is due to Christianity. Blot Christianity out of the pages of man's history, and what would his laws have been—what his civilization? Christianity is mixed up with our very being and our daily life; there is not a familiar object around us which does not wear a different aspect, because the light of Christian love is on it. Not a law which does not owe its truth and gentleness to Christianity—not a custom which cannot be traced, in all its holy, healthful parts, to the Gospel."

Religious Intelligence.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Lockport, Pa. May 24, 1847.

Br. Bassett: I embrace this opportunity of writing to you and the friends of Zion of the condition of this Conneaut circuit. When I came to this circuit I found things rather discouraging, some church trials pending and other difficulties calculated to mar the peace and prosperity of the church, also to retard the advancement of the kingdom of Christ in the world. We are trying to settle them we hope to the satisfaction of all

We found religion on the decline and the love of many waxing cold but through the mercy of God we are rising.

Our first quarterly meeting was held at Sorrel Hill shortly after our arrival, and in consequence of the short notice, and imclemency of the weather, our meeting was not as interesting as we anticipated. It lasted three days; we had the assistance of Br. Joshua Turner.

Our second quarterly meeting was held at Wheeler's School house. At this meeting we had the pleasure of seeing many souls converted from the error of their way, it lasted seventeen days, and in consequence of my ill health was compelled to bring it to a close. There were between 25 and 30 sinners converted and backsliders reclaimed. At this place we had no class; we have organized a class of 18 or 20 members.

Our third quarterly meeting was held at Sharp's school house. We have a class here of 15 or 20 members. At this meeting we had the pleasure of seeing the church much revived and sinners benefitted. There was a general union existing among the different denominations.

There are men of great moral worth on this circuit and the most that is wanting is a persevering and zealous ministry to advance the good cause. We intend by the grace of God to try to discharge our duty towards this people, leaving the event with God who has promised to be with us unto the end. Pray for us that we may see a great out-pouring of the spirit of God this year, that sinners may crowd to the mercy seat and bow to the mild sceptre of Jesus.

Yours in Christ,
JOEL J. WOOD, Supt.

Allegheny, Pa., June 4. 1847.

Rev. George Brown.—Dear Sir—since we had the pleasure of your Presidential visit in this place, the great Head of the Church, has favored us with visitations of his awakening influence, and converting power. The work which the Lord began near the commencement of the year, progressed during the winter without much abatement, and has resulted in the conversion of a great many souls, and the addition of above seventy to our numbers. They are nearly all doing well—thus far we have had to drop the name, of but one from the list of our probationary members.

We have had a very pleasent year thus far—our meetings are lively and spiritual; as Br. Reeves says, a good deal of "poetry" among us, our folks pray in the spirit, sing in the spirit, and I may add praise in the spirit; or in other words shout in the spirit. Our classes are, as a general thing, well attended. There are some however who might do better in this matter, without much disadvantage to themselves, if they would. Thus matters stand with us at the present.

Yours truly, JAMES ROBISON.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Leesburg Circuit, May 31, 1847.

We had a pleasant time at our third quarterly meeting on the 22d instant, in Leesburg. Br. Duling assisted on the occasion. Two joined. We are moving along in peace and harmony.

Yours, W. L. BALDWIN.

INDIANA DISTRICT.

White River Circuit, May 25, 1847.

Dear Bro. Bassett: I take this opportunity of informing Brother Shipp and the friends of Zion generally of the prospects on this circuit. Bro. W. B. Evans who was appointed to the charge of this circuit, from the extreme bad state of his health was unable to travel. He therefore asked to be released, which request the second Quarterly Conference granted and employed me to travel in his place. We held the second Quarterly Meeting at Mt. Pleasant Meeting-house.—The Lord was with us and blessed us in a good degree. The membership were very much revived, and united together in the bonds of christian love. Three united with us as probationers, and some obtained a hope in Christ. We have just held our 3rd quarterly meeting at Mt. Moriah meeting house. We have received twelve accessions to the church in all. We are looking forward to the time when the Lord will abundantly revive his work among us. We hope the friends of Zion will pray for us, that the Lord may visit us in a powerful manner.

Yours in the Lord,
WM. BARNET.

Conference Proceedings.

From the Methodist Protestant.

New Jersey Conference.

The Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, of the New Jersey District, held its 5th session in Dover chapel, commencing on 3d March, 1847.

The Conference was opened by the President with the usual religious services.

William M. H. Smith elected Sec'y, Thomas W. Stanger, Ass't.

Bartine Twiford was elected President for the ensuing year.

The following brethren were received to serve under the stationing authority, viz: Jacob Yesner and Winslow Jackson.

Rev. Wm. B. Vanlier elected to Elder's orders.

Resolved, That this Conference organize a Superannuated Fund Society, for the purpose of supporting the superannuated ministers of this Conference, their wives, widows, and children, to be under the supervision of the New Jersey Annual Conference.

Resolved, That the respective Superintendents use every possible effort within their jurisdiction, to effect a more general observance of the sanctity of the Sabbath, the advancement of the cause of Temperance, and of Sabbath Schools.

Resolved, That we, as an Annual Conference, will not approbate any minister or preacher who may receive an appointment from this Conference, to engage in any secular employment whatever during the Conference year.

The following report was adopted:

"Your committee, to which the communication from the Genesee Conference was referred, beg leave to report, that they greatly deplore the existence of Slavery in this country, yet they do not feel free to recommend the calling of a Convention for the purposes stated in that communication.

Report of the Stationing authority:

Egg Harbor Circuit, J. N. Timberman: New Brunswick Circuit, Jacob Gesner; Centreville Circuit, W. M. H. Smith; Glassboro Circuit, Edward Schock; Barnsboro and Woodbury Circuit, J. H. WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO:

THURSDAY MORNING, JUNE 10, 1847.

☞ Wish those who owe us knew how badly we need funds. We do indeed.☜

☞ In Maj. Nye's article, first column, for "careful" read "useful physical exercise."

☞ The Maine Annual Conference of the M. P. Church holds its fourth session at East Buckfield, commencing on Wednesday, June 16th, 1847.

Died, at his residence near Shron, Hamilton county, O., a few days ago, Mr. John Vanzandt, whose case before the Supreme Court at Washington, has been a subject of so much animadversion. We were personally acquainted with Mr. V. and believed him a sincere christian, as well as ardent philanthropist.

☞ We learn by the New York Sun that Hon. Daniel Webster arrived in that city on the 1st instant, on his return from the South. A severe prostration of his health obliged him to relinquish his intended visit to the Western States.

Requisition full.—The Cincinnati Commercial states that the requisition on the State of Ohio for a regiment of infantry, and one company of cavalry is full.

Cheering from Cincinnati.—Brother J. Dalbey, Superintendent of Cincinnati Station, informs us in a private letter, that an enterprise is in progress to establish another church and congregation of Methodist Protestants in that city.—He states that the brethren have been so far successful as to procure at an excellent bargain, a lot on which to build, and have nearly $2,000 dollars subscribed. The location is in the Western part of the city. It is thought that about $3500 will complete the house. Brother D. expresses a hope that the basement will be ready for occupying by the ensuing Annual Conference. This enterprize has engaged most of his spare time this spring, which accounts for his not writing for us for so long a time. Indeed, we had for some time thought of inserting "Information Wanted," but his letter came in good time, with the good word above mentioned. And withal, it brought us a few dollars for our paper, a little matter which our excellent brother does not lose sight of.

Secret Societies.—With some hesitancy, we have concluded to admit, for a time, temperate articles concerning the question of Secret Societies. We confess that we doubt the utility of such a controversy, but as it has been requested of us by a number of friends both by letter and in person, we have thought best to give it place for a while. A calm discussion may do good; if conducted after a friendly sort, it may at least do no harm. We will state however our determination at present to observe neutrality upon this question, forasmuch as we do not see it our duty to take sides in the matter. We intend to treat with equal fairness, writers upon either side of the question. We must premise, also, as above hinted, that temperate articles only should be sent us on this subject. And should any writer on either side, indulge in undue severities, or offensiveness of expression, after this notice, we shall feel at liberty to lay aside any such article, or at least to omit the objectionable part. This will certainly be considered fair, as the rule shall work both ways. We furthermore wish it understood, that we desire not to perpetuate such a discussion, and therefore request those who wish to give their views upon the question, not to delay beyond the limits of the present volume, as at the expiration thereof, at furthest, we think we shall desire to have the subject dismissed.

No Peace Yet.—The Baltimore Sun has late dates from New Orleans, by overland express.—The intelligence from Mexico, is any thing but favorable to the prospect of peace. It is stated that the war spirit is increasing daily, and that new measures are constantly being adopted to carry on the war with vigor. The Mexican Government had appointed a committee to raise money by subscription for the expenses of the war, and thousands of names were set down, with sums from 12½ cents to $1,000. Santa Anna, from accounts, was rapidly gaining forces. General Bravo published a decree requiring every one who had two or more horses, to furnish one for the service within six days. Another decree, orders all citizens, from 15 to 60 years of age to be ready for enlistment armed and equipped, at the shortest notice. Guerillas were forming rapidly. The sale of any provisions, goods, horses or cattle to the Americans is prohibited. under a fine of from $100 to $1000, to be applied to the expenses of the war. The clergy of Potosi have published a long address, urging all their 'faithful hearers,' to fly to the combat,—'swearing to God, that they will die for his religion, and to the country for its independence.

Deeply, most deeply do we deprecate and deplore the continuance of this sanguinary war.

The Ohio School Journal.—This is a monthly publication, in octavo form, devoted to the interests of education, recently commenced at Columbus, O. The several numbers, already issued, have been sent us. We think well of the work and wish it success. Asa D. Lord is its editor. Terms, 50 cents per annum. Three copies for $1. See prospectus, which we have inserted in our advertising columns.

A pioneer gone.—Who that is at all conversant with the Queen City, is not familiar with the old Vine Street Meeting House, or still more commonly termed, "Burke's Church!" It was the first house of worship erected in Cincinnati, a frame, built in 1792. It was originally the first Presbyterian Church, and stood on Main Street, on the site of present First P. Church. In 1814, it was removed to Vine Street, to make room for the present more commodious house, and ultimately became the property of Rev. Wm. Burke. The society of secedent Methodists sometime ago associated with him, worshipped in the Vine Street Meeting house for many years; indeed so long as that society continued to have a nominal existence.

We learn by Cist's Advertiser, that this venerable relic of the last century, is being taken down and removed, and is to furnish materials for several dwelling houses in the new western addition to the city, called Texas. Mr. Cist states it as a remarkable fact, that nine tenths of the timber of the old building, is found, after standing half a century to be apparently sound as ever. It consisted of white oak, poplar and walnut, and was all taken down and squared upon the ground on which it grew, i. e. the premises of the aforesaid 1st. Presbyterian Church. The part of the building most decayed, was the west end, upon which so many thousands of storms had beaten. Wrought nails entirely were used in the construction of the old building, cut nails being a more recent improvement. Cist says that the subscription paper for the erection of this edifice is still in existence, and bears date Jan. 16, 1792. Of the whole list, one hundred and six in number, not one individual survives! Solemn thought.—And where shall we, of the present generation, be, 50 years hence.

Slavery in Kentucky. Influence of the division of the M. E. Church.—We recently received a letter from a personal friend in Harrison County, Kentucky, upon whose statements we feel bound to rely, giving some account of the present position of the slavery question in that region. He observes that considerable excitement exists in reference to slavery, but it is nearly all upon one side of the question. Since the division of the M. E. Church, he says there has been a considerable 'increase of opinion' in favor of slavery. Methodists who used to oppose slavery, now plead for it, and many of them would own slaves now, if they were able. And no marvel at this, our friend continues, since some of their bishops are slave holders, and many of their ministers and members have become such, since the division. Rev. Josiah Whataker, and old itinerant minister of the Kentucky Conference, has recently bought two negro men. He gives public lectures on slavery, and tries to prove from the bible, that God sanctions the practice of slave holding, and reproaches all anti-slavery men as abolitionists. "Not long since, at a quarterly meeting held at Richland meeting house, the Presiding Elder, at 11 o'clock on Sabbath, attempted to preach a gospel sermon, but behold, it proved a pro-slavery lecture. He congratulated his brethren in their having no connection with the North—said they were now a popular, high minded church! What surprised me most, he was from the the North. I think his name is Maley."* Our friend however states that there are a few Episcopal Methodists in that section, as well as elsewhere, who will not go with the South. There are 22 members associated with Rev. Michael Geoghegan, who declare they will have no connection with slavery. These are much persecuted, especially by the southern church. All possible art and trickery is used, to crush the little anti-slavery church, and our friend fears that it will be effected. He adds: "The slave system in this country is worse than it ever was before, (I am a native of Kentucky.) New laws have been passed by the legislature, depriving the slave of his former privileges. A slave who receives a pass from his master on Saturday night, to 'pass and repass till Monday morning,' can be taken up and whipped severely. Slaves are not allowed to hold a religious meeting. I have been credibly informed that last summer, about seven miles from where I live, a company of slaves met in the woods on the Sabbath day, and were peaceably holding a religious meeting. The patrollers came upon them, broke up their meeting, and cowhided every one who did not make his escape. While I pen these facts, my heart sympathises with these downtrodden people. And is it not awful that a christian church, professing the religion and benevolence of the gospel, will sanction this system of iniquity, and throw all its weight of influence to sustain and perpetuate it? It is my opinion however that an overruling Providence, that bringeth good out of evil, will cause even this division of the Methodist Episcopal Church to hasten the extinction of slavery. I think that slavery will get worse faster than it ever before has done. The cries of the oppressed, thus increased, will the sooner be heard and answered, and a righteous God will speedily work some means to destroy slavery."

* Rev. Geo. W. Maley; formerly of the Ohio Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church. Who would have thought it? We would gladly hope that there was some mistake; that our old friend M. had not really come to this. Ed.]

Another Cheering word from Cincinnati.—The City Council, as we learn from the Watchman of the Valley, has by a decided majority of 17 to 13, taken a stand against license. We trust the Council will adhere to its position this time. There has been some backing out in that quarter, heretofore.

New York Illustrated Sun—Monthly—The June number of this highly embellished Journal is received. It contains many interesting articles, and more than thirty engravings. It is a handsome and cheap publication, at $1 per year in advance. Published by M. Y. Beach & Sons, N. York.

The Presbyterian General Assembly (Old School) adjourned at Richmond on Tuesday, to meet next year at Baltimore.

Arrival at Boston.—The New York Sun of the 3d instant, has intelligence by telegraph of the arrival of the royal steamer Hibernia at Boston, on the evening of the same day. The countess of Elgin was among the passengers. Intelligence was received that the American ship Carmelita had been captured by a Mexican Privateer, and brought into Barcelona. The smallness of the amount of grain all over Europe, and the consequent scarcity of provisions, seems to be more and more felt. An advance in prices has taken place, not only in Britain, but at many Continental ports. The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland is dead. Famine and disease have by no means ceased in that distressed country. The food brought out by American relief ships, or provided by the Government, though forwarded through the country with strong guards of soldiers, is frequently intercepted and seized by mobs of famished peasantry, at the risk of their lives. Food riots are not uncommon. Laborers parade the towns with flags inscribed, "Bread or employment." Horses, dogs and cats it is stated, are sometimes killed and eaten by the famishing poor. The growing crops of grain, promise well, but little or no prospect of potato crop.

New Organization.—An Anti Slavery Presbyterian Church.—We learn by the Watchman of the Valley that on the day after the adjournment of the General Assembly, at Cincinnati, viz. 27th ult., a convention assembled in the 6th Street Congregational Church to form an Anti Slavery Presbyterian Church. Rev. John Rankin was called to the chair, and after delivering a sermon, was chosen President of the Convention, and Rev. Mr. Hills, secretary. The Confession of Faith, and Catechism of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, were adopted, simply striking out the words 'in the United States,' so as to read, "the Presbyterian Church of America." An Anti Slavery Declaration was adopted, to be prefixed to the form of government. It was agreed, that for the purpose of completing a general organization, any three regularly ordained ministers in good and regular standing, may constitute themselves into a Presbytery; that any three Presbyteries or more, may constitute themselves into a Synod; and that when the Presbyteries shall have increased to fourteen, they may constitute a general Assembly. We are not advised of the number connected with this new organization, but understand that thus far, it is confined to the Ripley Presbytery.

The Editor of the Watchman sympathises somewhat with this new movement, but regrets "to lose such valuable men from the connection,"—does not reproach them as schismatics. But he takes the ground we do in reference to secessions from our branch of the Church. Hear him:

"For ourselves, we design to hold on to our present connexion, believing that in it we can wage a more successful war against slavery than we could out of it. Let those that have "no stomach for this fight depart." We have enlisted during the war, and we ask for no rest until the victory is won—until slavery is vanquished. Nor do we despair of the church. "We'll Try" is a general that never surrenders. We'll try, and try again. Brethren will you desert the standard?"

Herald of Truth.—We have reviewed the June number of this Journal, containing five poems and seven prose articles. We like the manly independence of its editor. He disclaims sympathy with any party; but as truth may to him seem to require, he declares his honest sentiments, whether they please or provoke. But who, save the intolerant bigot of sect or party, can be provoked at such a course? The leading article of the number, is an article for the times. The editor speaks noble sentiments against the prevailing war spirit. He says, 'Though triumphant in every field of battle, our country is in a crisis." He condemns the present war with Mexico, and points out the extensive and incalculable evil it will bring upon us as a people. He says, "it will not only impede our moral improvement for at least a quarter of a century, but will neutralize the advancement that has been made for the last twenty-five years." He thinks that the sanguinary war spirit will be greatly fostered and prolonged by the nomination of a military hero for President. The election of such to the chief magistracy he thinks, in the very nature of things, instead of subserving the interests of peace, would 'greatly influence the warlike ardor of the people, and endanger the peace of the country.' 'We, the people,' he says, 'should be studious to avoid everything that tends to induce a spirit of military glory. It is opposed to moral and intellectual elevation and refinement, for its enthusiasm lends a charm to savage brutality.'

The Herald is printed at Cincinnati; L. A. Hine, Editor. Price $ 3 per annum.

Cist's Advertiser.—We again request to be furnished with the 10th number of this paper, if the publisher please. We have received No. 11, containing several numbers of Maj. Nye's Reminiscences, without credit given. If we could see No. 10, perhaps we should find all right.—Furthermore, we desire to file the numbers of the Advertiser.

Extract of a Letter from Mrs. Judson.

The natives flocked around with offerings of fruit, fish, eggs and goat's milk, as soon as we arrived; and are full of sympathy for me, because I don't know their language. They love the doctor as I never saw man loved before. Poor creatures!! Now the true state of the case is, if we were to settle down in this house, with the comforts we should be able to secure, and the pleasant English and missionary families about us, although in a very different condition from the family of a Pastor at home, my taste would be gratified, and I should, as far as things of this world are concerned, be perfectly happy, but that is not to be. I lay no claim to a certain rabid qualification called "a missionary spirit," but my conscience will not allow me to settle down in delightful Maulmain, while there is the slightest hope of my husband's being able by going to a place of danger and privation, to do any thing for the miserable nation at the door of which we are now standing. I am not myself made for great things, but when I see his heart turning that way, I can say "go," and when the trouble comes I know I can cheer and comfort him.—As soon as I can get a few words of the language, a couple of months perhaps, we shall be off to Rangoon, and there wait an opportunity to creep into Ava. I have discovered since I left America, that I am incapable of the emotion of fear.—I have been two or three times pretty severely tried in that respect, I may meet with things, however, at Rangoon, that will make my hair bristle. God only knows, and quietly in my own closet. I ask his direction and assistance. You and your dear husband will, I trust, help me to ask—for none ever needed all the graces of godliness combined, with singular wisdom, more than I do just now;—I hate all cant, and make-believe, but I do love the cause of Christ with my whole heart—and I love too these poor wretches, that in ignorance of the way of life, are going down to eternal misery. God make me useful to them.—I do not believe in practicing self-denial for self-denial's sake—I think that a relic of popery;—but I should be the worst, the most ungrateful creature in the universe, if, after all the blessings that God has showered upon my path for years, I should shrink from suffering, or even death, in his cause, I pray that I may not be like Peter when I say I never will.

Your most affectionate of friends,
EMILY C. JUDSON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Mr. Editor:—Amid the numerous correspondents who have contributed to enrich the columns of the Western Recorder, making it a welcome visiter in every family to which it has access, I have not hitherto never dared to appear. Frequently have I addressed myself to the work of writing, but then, "those quail tracks." Again, but that barbarous punctuation. Again, but those harsh expressions that are not only inadmissable in a christian journal, but indicative of the absence of that charity which "hopeth all things," and throws the mantle of forbearance over the seeming faults of others. Again, a page is written, apparently, free from the faults before mentioned: but then, self appears too prominent. I have been preceded (on my circuit) by a faithful brother, who has labored for the conversion of souls and the extension of the Church, difficulties, however, exist, and as I reach my appointment I sit down to describe my field of labor, and ere I am aware have it thus: "Came on to my circuit after Conference and found everything dead—members scattered, circuit disorganized, &c., but by the grace of God I went to work, and a glorious prospect of revival and increase, has been the result of hard labor and faithful attention to ministerial duties. Two persons have already been received on probation."

Another page is written, but upon examining it by the dictates of moral principle—I find a disposition to conform to the views and feelings of those among whom I reside no matter what those views and feelings may be—thus doing violence to the affirmations of my own consciousness, and lowering the standard of God's law to conform to the vagaries of perverted human understanding. Having obviated all these difficulties—divested my mind of every influence adverse to the claims of moral obligation, and standing forth upon the broad foundation of eternal truth; a field, indeed, presents itself for human contemplation, worthy of engaging the highest exercise of man's mental and moral nature, and which might be portrayed in "thoughts that breathe and words that burn," conveying alike, pleasure and instruction to your numerous subscribers. But here difficulties thicken around me; with an imagination glowing with warm sentiments, I take up my pen and a few hours finishes a production which upon sober examination is not only "Quixotic" in character, but a labored argument about words "that only gender strifes," which would tire the printer, be passed over by the reader as a "wind-mill exploit," time lost and the world unbenefitted. But suppose I turn aside from the arena of strife, and give up the long-loved and dearly-cherished thought of setting individuals, annual and general conferences right—and turn to some theme more in unison with the character of Him "who went about doing good," who did not "strive nor cry" whose object was, to soothe the sorrows of mankind—shed the light of Divine truth upon benighted hearts,—in whose every word was breathed forth the benevolence of a God, here, here indeed, I find exercise for heart and pen, that might be presented profitably, and operate instrumentally in arousing the dormant energies of the church, and thus be engaged in the appropriate work to which God has called me as an humble minister of the cross.—Thus you perceive, Mr. Editor, that obstacles of no small magnitude have thus far kept me silent, but as progression is the law of our mentality; by repeated effort, I think I have made some improvement. By the aid of your correcting hand, and by studying the style, spirit, language, and excellencies of the many estimable writers, whose productions appear in the columns of the Western Recorder, I have determined to send you pieces for publication.

Pleasantville, O., June 1, 1847.

JOHN TODD, D. D.

This gentleman is the well-known author of the "Student's Manuel" and other excellent books. He may be denominated with truth "the friend of the young," for he has done much to promote the welfare of this portion of community. But his labors are not confined to any one class: he works for the good of all, he serves his age in the fear of God. We understand he was at New York during the Anniversaries. He attended and spoke at the Temperance Anniversary meeting in Broadway Tabernacle on the 13th of May. He only occupied the floor forty-five minutes, but those who know his style may imagine what an amount of useful information and valuable hints he could give in that time. He is in fact—preventing evil rather than of first suffering it to become extensive and then set about to cure it—prevention, he contends, is better than cure.—He gave strong illustrations of this idea at the Tabernacle. Besides this he spoke of other important points; but we have no space for an extended report. We only design to call attention to the name and to the character and writings of Mr. Todd—his manner of life, the course of usefulness he pursues, and his literary productions are all worthy of commendation. Young men, we speak of Mr. Todd as a good friend for you to advise with, through his works.—Columbian Fountain.

Bequests of a Wealthy Irishman.—Matthew Wright, Esq., who died in the city of Washington on the 24th May, has bequeathed to the Washington and St. Vincent Orphan Asylums, each, the perpetual interest of $10,000. It is provided in the will that, in case either of these institutions cease to exist, the bequest is to fall to the Washington corporation; (which is the trustee of the fund)—with a reservation of $60 per annum for the Ebenezer (Methodist) chapel. Five slaves are also manumitted, with a portion of $200 each, on condition that they emigrate to Liberia. Mr. Wright was 80 years of age; he was a native of the county of Tyrone, Ireland, whence he emigrated in 1795, and became a citizen of Washington in 1804.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Powder Mill Explosions.—The Wikesbarre (Pa.) Advocate states that, on Saturday, the 22d inst, the Powder Mill, in the upper part of Kingston, belonging to Mr. D. Schooley, exploded. One hand, a young man, son of Silas Lord, was instantly killed—another hand was slightly injured. Mr. Schooley, with some hands, were setting a post in the press-house, when some powder ignited from the throwing a stone in the post-hole. Observing the particles of powder exploding in the sand, Mr. Schooley called to the hands to run, and fled himself. Scarcely had they left the building, when it was torn to pieces. Soon followed the explosion of another and another building, and finally the drying house. One or two dwelling houses, near by, were demolished, and two or three others injured, all the inmates escaping except one, who was slightly injured.

The Magazine, in which were 160 kegs of powder, was blown to pieces, leaving the powder kegs piled up as before. A fire was enkindling under a shelf, on which stood a keg of powder, directly over the flames. Observing it, Mr. Schooley, very imprudently, with a pail of water in hand, rushed to the spot, lifted off the keg, and then extinguished the fire, saving all the powder in the Magazine, and perhaps a greater destruction of life and property. He ran a great risk, but, providentially was successful in the dangerous enterprize. The entire loss we have heard estimated at $2,000.

The rush of Produce.

The high prices now being paid for produce has brought a rush to market. The canal receipts are unprecedentedly large, and the streets are thronged with wheat teams from fifty miles around. The warehouses are full to bursting, notwithstanding the increased number built this Spring, and the active shipments East,—Every thing is flooded in commercial affairs just now. The streets, docks and warehouses, are flooded with produce, as is also the canal and lake shipping, bearing it to and from port. Bankers and brokers are flooded with applications for currency, and are overflowing with specie and drafts on New York. Exchange is now in favor of Cleveland, and currency here commands a premium. The farmers also are being flooded with cash.—The State of Ohio has suddenly become rich. She has now as many spare dollars as she had a few weeks ago bushels of wheat, which must amount to millions. The canal tolls this year will materially reduce the public debt, and Ohio stocks are now at a premium in New York. Thus brightly do our prospects open for '47.—Cleveland (O.,) Plain Dealer.

Horrid Death.—A singular suicide was committed by a poor degraded specimen of humanity, in New York on Wednesday. He announced his determination to end his life a few days before, but no person paid any attention to it, as he had been frequently known to make a similar threat. However, he put the threat in force, in the following deliberate manner. He went out on the Harlem railroad, where he divested himself of all his clothing, save his shirt. He made a bundle of them, and placed his boots on the top, and then left them in the centre of one track.—He then laid his body across the rails of the other track, where it was found the next morning, severed in two. It was one of the most deliberate cases of suicide that ever occurred it that city.—Scott's Weekly Paper.

There is much satisfaction felt in the city of Brooklyn, on account of the capture of the desperate gang of wretches who are known to have perpetraied the murderous assaults upon Mr. Hotchkiss, in Brooklyn, and Mr. Bennett at Williamsburg. The actual perpetrator of the mortal wound, received by the former, was caught some eighty miles from Brooklyn, on Long Island, with Mr. Hotchkiss' watch in his pocket; and Mr. Bennett has identified him as the one who assaulted him with the same weapon, (a slung shot,) which shattered Mr. H.'s skull. His name is Joseph Buchanan, alias Jack Williams. He had two accomplices, named Logan and Bailey, the latter of whom was released from the State prison less than two months ago. The proof against the three is very strong—that against Buchanan conclusive.—Scott's Weekly Paper.

Drowned.—Charles Dennis, a native of Ireland, was drowned at Hartford, Ct., on Monday, by driving his cart off the wharf. His horse was drowned also.

Ship Fever not Contagious.—The Baltimore Clipper pulishes a communication from Dr Horatio G. Samison, on the subject of the ship fever which now prevails in the city of Baltimore, and in most of the seaports. The object of the Doctor is, to disprove the contagiousness of the disease.

Cincinnati gives daily evidence of its expanding greatness in the individualization of its business. We saw yesterday a man whose only business was to sell sponges—another who made a handsome thing of quite a handsome thing, a large saw filing establishment on Main street—another on Twelfth, a sort of rasping dentist, who flourished in the world's luxuries by the novel occupation of reteething old files—another, who picked the "dimes of life," by driving a wheelbarrow—and another, who realizes a handsome income from collecting old shoes about the streets—and many, who, from the accumulation of old rags and old paper, hold account with the banker! These are but a few of the many means of livelihood, novel in their character, but quite sufficient in the enumeration, for this item.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Counterfeits.—Counterfeit threes of the bank of Norwalk, have made a new start. We heard yesterday of several that had been taken, and saw an officer on the look out for a man.—identified, and known by name—who had been dealing pretty freely in them. The counterfeits are calculated to deceive at the first glance, but are easily detected upon close inspection—the engraving being coarser than the genuine, and the paper thin and flimsy.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Suicide.—James Freeland, a Caulker, committed suicide at Charlestown, Mass., last Thursday, by jumping off the wharf with a stone tied to his neck.

Singular Coincidence.—A man was sentenced to the House of Correction in Springfield by Judge Wells on Thursday, for stealing a watch from the store of Jonathan Bangs. The same man was sent to the State Prison 16 years ago, for stealing the same watch from the same nail in the same store belonging to the same man.—Northampton Courier.

Fatal Accident.—The Owego Gazette gives the particulars of a dreadful accident on the Ithaca and Owego Railroad, on Friday evening. The cars broke through a bridge about six miles from Owego, called "Woodbridges," and instantly killed D. C. Hatch, of Owego, engineer, and A. Dickinson, of Danby, fireman. The bridge has been for some time in a tottering condition.—N. Y. Sun.

ATH AND DISEASE IN HIGH PLACES.—Lord ey, brother of the Duke of Wellington, died days ago in Paris; the Duke of Argyll on day morning, April 26; the Bishop of Sodor Man, whose death was occasioned by sleep- n damp sheets in Liverpool; Lord Lurgan, T. B. Martin, M. P., both by the famine-fe- which they caught in attending the suffering in Ireland. The Lord Lieutenant of Ire- is thought to be lying at the point of death. hristian Citizen.

ROWNED.—Captain Cornelius Smith, of New ron, Me., was drowned recently at Sandy r, while floating a raft of logs to a mill-dam ne river. The raft struck a rock, and he was ied over the dam in sight of his friends and ly, who could render him no assistance. body was recovered several days afterwards. . Y. Sun.

ISCONSIN.—This territory has already twen- ght newspapers; two daily, two semi-weeky, twenty-four weekly—of which eleven are eral, ten Democratic, two neutral, and one ition. One Whig and one Democratic are ted in German. The vote of the State on doption of the Constitution, was: Yes, 13,- —No, 19,967—about 37,000 votes were poll- So the State is without a Constitution.

XTRAORDINARY EMIGRATION TO OREGON.—A r from Princeton, Illinois, dated May 3d, says: If the emigration to Oregon may be estima- by the number of wagons which have passed ny house this spring, it will be very large.— e than one hundred wagons have passed thro' ceton this season, on their way to that dis- country. Sometimes ten or fifteen of them, their accompaniments of men, women, chil- , and cattle, go by in a day. Many are from thern Indiana, Michigan and Ohio. They dly carry cooking stoves in their wagons of ery small size. Most of them seem to be le of some substance, and will unquestiona- make good settlers.

The severe and general sickness of the last on has been the moving cause of much of emigration."

ERMAN COLONY.—The advance of a colony German emigrants, 40 in number, landed at nitouwoc, Wis. T., on the 7th inst. The main y, consisting of about 6000, are on their way, whole colony will occupy a county.

The body of Father Rey, the Catholic priest t to the army as a chaplain, has been found interred. He was killed, together with a ll party of Americans travelling with him, r the village of Marin. After some days, the le heard that a Priest was among the slain. y searched out the body and removed it to Church of Marin, where it was interred with gious rites. The other Catholic chaplain, her McElroy, is about to return home, having rtained, he says, that he can do no good by aining with the army.

Hon. Samuel Church, has been elected Chief ice of Connecticut, in place of Judge Wil- s, whose resignation has been mentioned.

THE INCREASE OF BUSINESS on the New York Erie Canal is unprecedented. The weigh- ter at Syracuse reports, that from the 16th to 22d of May, seven days, he weighed at the gh lock at that place, 256 loaded boats, of ch number 116 had cargoes exceeding 70 tons. N. Y. Sun.

TROUBLE IN THE M. E. CHURCH.—Rev. J. C. Greene.—The Centenary Methodist Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., was the scene of quite an excitement on Sabbath last, notwithstanding this congregation had declared its independence, in view of the late decision of the N. York Annual Conference, and called the Rev. J. C. Greene, Rev. B. Griffin, the preacher appointed by the Conference, was on the ground at an early hour on Sabbath morning, and entered the church with a view of taking possession of the pulpit, but he had not proceeded many steps when he was called aside by a committee of trustees. They entered one of the private rooms and remained some ten minutes in conversation, during which time the Rev. Mr. Greene went into the pulpit and commenced the services. The committee assured Mr. Griffin that it would be useless for him to attempt to enter the pulpit—and so it would seem, he thought—for at the close of their cogitations he came out and took up a position opposite the church, where a crowd soon gathered around him, whom he informed that he would preach in the afternoon in a room in South Brooklyn. The excitement being over, the Rev. Mr. Green delivered a discourse.

The N. Y. Express says:—"Four New York M. E. churches have refused their preachers, though we have not learned that any of them have drawn off from the conference entirely as the Centenary Church has done, owing to the fact that most of the M. E. churches hold their property on what is called a conference deed, for the use and occupation of the preachers of the conference.

"The Rev. Mr. Maffit is now in Pittsburgh, but his wife is in Brooklyn, whither, we understand, he will soon return, and where, without much doubt, a church and flock will be provided for him."

THE TELEGRAPH TO NEW ORLEANS.—The work of setting up the posts for the Washington and New Orleans Magnetic Telegraph is progressing at the Southern end of the line.

EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.—A widow in Missouri, named Bishop, recovered a few days since, $3,000 damages from James Swart for debauching her daughter.

THE FAMINE IN MADEIRA.—As we stated some time since, the fears of famine in Madeira, we are compelled to state, results now well authenticated. By an arrival at New Bedford we learn that many hundreds of the inhabitants have already perished by starvation. Flour has sold as high as $27 a barrel, but most of the inhabitants were unable to purchase at any price.—Cincinnati Commercial.

A skiff, containing two German boys, was run over by a steamboat on the evening, of the 26th inst., opposite Madison, Ia., and both boys were drowned.

HORRIBLE.—Mr. Robert Meldron, an old and respectable citizen residing near Deerfield, O., met his death in the following horrible manner: He had been engaged on his farm in burning brush and trees; a tree that had been fired fell across his thighs, holding him fast. And there he was held in that iron vice, with no human ear to hear his shrieks, nor hand to help, yet the flames crawling slowly to his side, first warming, then blistering, and finally seizing the vitals. When discovered, he was nearly consumed, and it was difficult to recognize in the crisped mass of detached bones, any trace of humanity. Awful death.—Cin. Com.

KEEPING HOUSE.—A young married woman who has not had the opportunity of profiting by the advice and example of a good mother, will have some difficulty at first in spending her money to the best advantage; for there is really an art in spending money, though not in getting rid of it. Some women will keep house respectably and plentifully on one-third less money than will be required by others, and without either meanness or illiberal dealing. But to do this, judgment, forethought, and experience are necessary. One woman shall be able to tell you how much her housekeeping costs to a shilling, while another cannot even guess within ten. The former has method, rule, regularity, and a certain sum assigned to her; with the latter it is all hap-hazard, it comes and it goes, she neither knows nor cares. And this is almost sure to be the case if the money is doled out by her husband in a few shillings at a time.

ACCIDENT.—Mr. Peter Curry, a house carpenter, was killed yesterday by the falling of a heavy piece of timber, while at work on the new shops now being built in the Penitentiary. The workmen were throwing down some of the burned timber from the old building, when Mr Curry unfortunately stepped out of the lower part just as they had thrown one off. It was a very heavy stick, and killed him instantly. He has left a wife and four children to mourn his loss.—Ohio Statesman.

RAILROAD LETTING.—The Newark Advocate of Saturday last, announces that contracts for grading 20 miles of the Lake Erie and Columbus Railroad, extending from Newark towards Mt. Vernon, have been entered into. The Advocate adds, that the bidding was spirited, the contractors all responsible men, and the contracts taken below the estimates. We learn that the holders of contracts will shortly be at work upon them.

The Wesleyan missions at New Zealand are in a highly prosperous condition. Many of the natives have recently abandoned heathenism; and in two of the Feejee Islands, a similar change is progressing.

The Presbyterian General Assembly (O. S.,) sitting at Richmond, Va., on the 25th May, decided that no further correspondence on the subject of slavery, should be had with the Presbyterian Church of Ireland and the Free Church of Scotland. The former opinions of the assembly, on this subject, were referred to and confirmed.

The Baptist Missionary Union closed its annual session at Cincinnati, May 22nd.—The attendance from all sections of the country was large. Several were present from Asia and Europe. A converted Cherokee gave variety to the exercises conducted by the Missionaries. The business was transacted with great harmony, and the devotional exercises were marked with great fervor.

THE UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION, in session at Boston last week, passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That we believe slaveholding to be in direct opposition to the law and will of God, entirely incompatible with the precepts and spirit of Christianity, and wholly at variance with a Christian profession.

MAGNETIC TELEGRAPH IN TURKEY.—We learn from the New Haven Palladium that the Sultan of Turkey is anxious to learn the structure and working of the Magnetic Telegraph, and recently some beautiful instruments, with all the apparatus, for a Telegraph two miles in length, were sent out to him by Professor Silliman, Jr., of Yale College.

GERMAN IMIGRANTS.—Many German immigrants who pass through this place for the west, are of a class that will ultimately be of great benefit to the country. One day last week, a company of ninety-two arrived here by Railroad, and as the cars were to remain during the evening, they marched in a body to the German Church on Ford street, and held a prayer meeting. The country has nothing to fear from such immigrants. —Roch. Dem.

This incident is calculated to excite a great many pleasant reflections.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—We learn that a little boy, about 10 years of age, son of Mr. William Riley, was killed on Saturday last by being crushed between two cars, near the Mt. Clare Depot of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company.

DROWNED.—John Fryer, of Saratoga Springs, and Deputy Sheriff, was drowned in the Saratoga Lake last Sunday by the upsetting of a boat in which he was fishing.

A fire at Toronto, Canada, on Monday destroyed the Free Presbyterian Church and other buildings on Hammond Street.—New York Sun.

PASSENGERS ARRIVED AT N. YORK.—The following returns from the Custom House shows a large increase in the number of immigrants arrived at this port:—

☞ It will be highly satisfactory to the friends of General Shields to know that he is still convalescent. His recovery is looked upon as a miracle. It was thought at first that he could not by possibility have lived twenty-four hours.

PRESIDENT POLK and lady, accompanied by the Hon. J. Y. Mason, Secretary of the Navy, passed through Richmond on Friday, en route to N. Carolina. Appropriate salutes were fired in honor of the President, who was received by the city authorities and a committee of citizens.

NAME ALTERED.—By an act of Congress, passed during the last session, the name of the unlucky bark Pons has been changed to that of Cordelia. It is to be hoped that better success will attend her in future than her past history has been marked with.

MR. WEBSTER'S VISIT.—The friends of Mr. Webster who had anticipated the pleasure of giving him a cordial greeting, will learn with regret that they must forego that pleasure. Mr. Webster's health was such, while in Georgia, as to induce him to change the entire plan of his contemplated journey—and he is now, probably, on his way to New York and will not visit Ohio. This will prove a sad disappointment to his friends; but the course is forced upon by stress of circumstances beyond his control. He may visit the North West on some future occasion.—O. State Journal.

THE ACCIDENT TO GEN. CUSHING.—A letter from Gen. Cushing, dated Matamoras, May 8th, gives the following account of the accident which befel him:—

"In proceeding last evening, with Col. Belknap, to the house of one the Alcades, it was necessary to pass along a very narrow pathway, by the side of one of the ditches, which appertains to the fortifications of the main Plaza, and in so doing, it being dark, and the wall shelving, my foot slipped, I fell in, and broke my leg. I shall have to keep very still, for a week or ten days, and to abstain from using my leg two or three weeks longer. I am entirely without fever, and do not feel any apprehension for my leg, and I bear it more patiently, inasmuch as I am now awaiting orders, and shall not probably receive them for some weeks."

ACCIDENT.—We regret to learn as we do from the St. Louis Republican, of last week, that our friend Dr. BENJ. S. OLDS, of Bloomington, Iowa, (late of Pickaway county,) was thrown from his buggy in Alton, and had his left knee badly fractured. He was returning home from Ohio, where he had been in attendance upon his brother the late JOSEPH OLDS, in his last illness.—O. State Journal.

QUICK ARREST.—A telegraphic dispatch was received at New York from Albany on Monday night about 11 o'clock, that a person had left that city by the 4 o'clock boat, charged with having stolen a gold chain, gold breastpin, and $25 in money. An officer stood upon the watch at New York, and nabbed him about 5 o'clock next morning, as he left the boat.

THE TEXAS POISONING CASE.—Doctor A. C. Denson (says the Galveston News of the 21st) directly from Cherokee county, in the vicinity of Shelby, where the late dreadful case of poisoning happened, informs us that the wedding party was probably poisoned by accident, the proprietor of the house having given arsenic in the place of saleratus to make the cakes, pastry, &c. Dr. James H. Starr, of Nacogdoches, was sent for, who has written a letter stating that seventeen out of the fifty four poisoned, had died about the 1st inst. Our informant learns that six others have since died, and that fifteen or twenty more are considered in a very dangerous situation.

SIXTY FOUR LIVES LOST.—Appalling Shipwreck—The ship Miracle, Elliott, master, from Liverpool, bound to Quebec, 34 days out, with 408 passengers, was wrecked at the Magdalen Islands on the 19th May. Sixty-four were drowned and thirty others died of fever. Two schooners had arrived at Pictou, Novia Scotia, with part of the passengers.—N. Y. Sun.

STAND FROM UNDER.—The telegraphic wires between Wilmington, Del., and Philadelphia, were struck by lightning on Tuesday last, breaking the magnets at both places. In Wilmington where the wire was broken, and one end hanging down, the fluid was perceived descending to the extremity of the pendant piece and then exploded with a very loud noise. Beware then how you stand under the wires in too close proximity to the posts, as the electric fluid, gathered from a storm miles off, may be discharged at the very spot you have chosen.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—Toronto (Canada) papers announce the death of Rev. Thomas Fidler, missionary at Fenelon Falls. His boat in which were himself and two laboring men, was drawn into the current and carried over the falls, all three perishing.

DEAD.—Rev. Wm. B. O. Peabody, D. D., an emitant Unitarian preacher, of Massachusetts, died at Springfied, in that State, last Friday. Mr. Peabody was one of a family, in N. England, remarkable for their intellectual culture, and the contributions they have in various ways, made to the literature of the country.

SINGULAR DEATH.—A Mr. George Wallace was killed on Friday evening last, in a papermill at Wilmington, Delaware. He went to start it, and his cravat catching between the rollers choked him to death.

A Reformed Man.

We have the pleasure of laying the following advertisement before our readers, from which they will perceive that Mr. Freeman, who was lately engaged in a discussion upon gambling with Mr. Green, has "cut loose" from his old associates, and resolved upon pursuing an honest and honorable course of life:—

In the Lecture which I have advertised in the Sun to come off this evening, (May 28th,) it is my intention to make public my determination to abandon forever the pursuit of Gambling, and for the future to fight, if fight at all, under the banner of virtue. This determination may be, in part, the result of the friendly admonitions which have lately been bestowed upon me, by some of the best men of this city, (and indeed ladies, too,) but it is not wholly so, for it is no more than the dictate of every feeling of my nature.

In cutting loose from those yet in the ranks, I have only to say to them, "that they will never find in me a traducer;" on the contrary, it will give me pleasure to defend them, so far as truth will sustain me; further than this I durst not go. I shall be happy to be met upon the occasion, by as many of them as possible, that they may hear what I have to say.

J. G. FREEMAN.

At the lecture above alluded to, which was attended by a very attentive audience, respectable both as to numbers and character, Mr. Freeman endeavored to put himself and the class he has left, in their just position before community—thinking that nothing is gained by unfair and exaggerated statements. He then exhibited a Faro Bank, and showed how easily the better could be duped by the dealer—the latter being able to pass such cards as best suited his purposes out of the box, without scarcely the possibility of detection.

We understand that it is Mr. Freeman's intention to devote his time to lecturing upon the subject of Gambling, in different sections of the country, illustrating by facts drawn from his own large experience the danger incurred by the young man who foolishly puts his foot within the charmed whirlpool of the gambling room—and proving by the cards themselves, how vain it is, when a novice is in the question, to talk of "the even chances of the game." In this endeavoring to impress upon the minds and hearts of our young men, the folly and wickednesss of gambling, we trust that Mr. Freeman will receive the support and encouragement of his fellow citizens, in every portion of the country which he may find it convenient to visit.

Since writing the above, we have been informed that Mr. Freeman being present at a Temperance meeting, where an eloquent address was delivered by the Rev. John Chambers, went forward to the platform and signed the Pledge. In doing so, he made some very affecting remarks. Mr. Freeman may now be considered fully embarked in the Reform movement. It is probable that he and Mr. Green will labor hereafter together in the Anti-Gambling cause. Success attend their efforts.—Sat. Evening Post.

Friends' Yearly Meeting.

The N. York Yearly Meetings of both the Hicksite and Orthodox Friends, took place during last week. The Hicksite Men's Meetings were attended by eight hundred to a thousand persons, while the attendance on the Women's Meeting was still larger.

The Abolition question was discussed in an animated manner; but the great majority of the meeting seemed strongly averse to co-operating with any existing anti-slavery organization.

The women's meeting was attended by Mrs. Lucretia Mott and Mrs. Rachel Barker, who were frequent speakers.

The meeting of the Orthodox Friends was not so numerously attended as that of the Hicksites. On Sunday week, at the meeting for worship, about one thousand persons were present, but the business sessions were attended by about five hundred only.

Several Friends from other yearly meetings were present, among them one from Germany, two from England and a number from the west and from New England.

It was determined to establish a store in New York city, at which Friends may find goods produced by free labor. For this purpose it is proposed to raise $5,000.

It was also proposed to add to the discipline a provision that members should abstain from the use, manufacture, and sale of all drinks that can intoxicate, but some of the members opposing it, the subject was laid over until next year.

With regard to Ireland, it was agreed to continue the exertions which Friends have heretofore made in her behalf. Much has already been done by Friends in the way of sending gifts of provisions, and this good work is to be continued. —Baltimore Sun.

The Monster Among the Great.

A correspondent, writing from Zanesville, Ohio, thus speaks of the recent death of one of the richest Ohio Merchants, by Intemperance:

"I have some startling truths for the "Columbian Fountain." While standing yesterday before the stage office, I saw the mail stage coming from the east with a Coffin on the top. The strange sight auracted a crowd. I ascertained that it contained the body of a person who had been one the most distinguished Merchants of our State, residing in ———, the principal town of a neighboring county. A few weeks since he went to the East, to purchase goods, after just completing the erection of two splendid stores, one being designed for the goods he was about purchasing. It seems he had been drinking ardent spirits, moderately for years without being discovered. He visited Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York, spreeing occasionally in each city; having, it is supposed, been allured to those ultra improprietics of those fashionable swindlers, who haunt the fashionable eastern taverns. I understand that he slept occasionally in the store boxes along the streets of Philadelphia.—In Baltimore he was seen roving about after a night's frolic, without hat and boots, and penniless, having been robbed of his pocket book, containing a large sum of money and valuable papers. The first thing which attracted suspicion at home was the arrival of a part of the goods he had purchased, in which was packed the hat he had lost. Suspecting something was wrong, a gentleman, who had formerly been his partner, went eastward searching for him. He found him in a tavern at Fairview, in this State, between Zanesville and St. Clairsville. He there learned that a friend—a Merchant from the same place,—discovered his unfortunate situation, and getting him on the railroad, as soon as possible, started for the West paying his expenses. It is thought that he could have fetched him home alive had he not met a drinking acquaintance at Wheeling, who induced him to drink at the stage office tavern bar. He there swallowed a tumbler full of unmixed spirits, which threw him into spasms. His Merchant friend hurried him on, but was obliged at Fairview to take him out, and place him in a bed in a tavern, where, after lingering two days, he died a horrid death, fancying that he was commanding a charge against the fortress of Cerro Gordo, crying as if to a Company of Soldiers,—"Charge! Charge! Charge! take that battery!"—reminding us of a passage in Walter Scott's works:

"Charge, Chester, Charge! on, Stanley, on!
Were the last words of Marmion!"

His wife, Dr. T. O. Edwards, (who will be a member of the next Congress, and was called to attend the case,) and a few friends, were in the stage bearing his remains. Some suppose it was another Gough case—that he had been dragged for the purpose of being robbed more readily.—His death, however, has had an excellent effect. Being generally known, his death caused a great sensation, inducing many to join the Sons of Temperance."—Columbian Fountain.

A man fell, in one of the streets of New York a day or too since, under a stroke of apoplexy.—A water doctor passing, immediately poured cold water gradually over his head and the patient got up and went on his way in less than 15 minutes. This is worth trying, for it is recorded as a fact.

PROSPECTUS

OF THE

OHIO SCHOOL JOURNAL—VOL. 2, 1847.

The second volume will be published monthly, in Columbus, each number containing sixteen pages octavo.

The Journal will be devoted entirely to the promotion of education—physical, intellectual, social and moral—and especially to the improvement of Common Schools—the better education of teachers—the elevation of the employment of teaching to the rank it should hold in the community—the diffusion of intelligence relating, to the best modes of teaching, to the location and construction of school houses, and to the progress of education in this State and in other States and countries; it will contain the Annual Report of the State Superintendent of Common Schools, and the School Laws of general interest which may be enacted during the present session of the Legislature.

Post Masters, School Officers, Teachers, and the friends of education in general, are respectfully invited to aid in giving it a wide circulation.

Editors who give this prospectus one insertion and forward a copy marked will receive the Journal for the year.

TERMS—Single copies, 50 cents; seven copies, $3,00; twelve copies $5,00; twenty five copies, $10,00; payments to be made invariably in advance. Orders for the Journal may be directed, "Ohio School Journal, Columbus, O.," or, (until the first of March next,) to A. D. Lord, Kirkland, Lake Co., O.

MEMORIA TECHNICA:

Or, the Art of Abbreviating those Studies which give the greatest labor to the Memory; including Numbers, Historical Dates, Geography, Astronomy, Gravities, &c.; also Rules for Memorizing Technicalities, Nomenclatures, Proper Names, Prose, Poetry, and Topics in general.—Embracing all the available Rules found in Mnemonics, or Mnemotechny of Ancient and Modern Times. To which is added a Perpetual Almanac for Two Thousand Years of Past Time and Time to Come. Adapted to the use of Schools. By LORENZO D. JOHNSON. Second edition, revised and improved.—Boston.

PRICE—50 CENTS.

In presenting to the public the "Memoria Technica," which, in some respects, may be said to contain a new theory of instruction, the publishers beg leave to call the attention of Teachers, School Committees, and others interested in education, the peculiar merits of the work. It has been already introduced into several of our best and most popular schools in Boston and vicinity, and has also received high commendation from many of our most distinguished clergymen and other literary men who have examined it.

Notices of the Press.

'This system of Mnemotechny, differing considerably from the one introduced by Prof. Gouraud, is designed to furnish all the rules for aiding the memory without lessening mental culture, which can be made available during a course of elementary study. The illustrations may be easily comprehended by any person of ordinary mental capacity, and the application of the principle upon which the system is based must necessarily furnish an agreeable and useful exercise to the mind. It is well adapted to common school instruction, and may be made a very profitable study, if rightly pursued. Every page of the work gives evidence of a desire to present the laws of association distinctly & clearly, so as to enable the learner to establish such relations between things, events, &c., as will aid the memory. We commend the book to teachers and all interested in this important subject.'—N. Y. Teachers' Advocate.

'The art of improving the memory is surely a very important one, and whoever contributes any thing to further this end, certainly renders an important service to the public. Mr Johnson, we believe, has succeeded in bringing his system of mnemonics into such a practicable form, as will render it an essential aid to all who do not naturally have a great power of memory.'—Ch. Witness

'This is a treatise on artificial memory prepared for the use of schools. The subject is a curious one, and worthy of attention.'—Boston Recorder.

'This system of mnemonics, being the first work of the kind ever prepared for the use of schools, and being so arranged and simplified that any one of ordinary capacities may easily acquire a knowledge of its principles, is certainly worthy of examination and study. It is most emphatically an aid to the memory, and as such, is well adapted to common school instruction. We heartily commend it to public notice, while we hope that Mr. Johnson will receive the reward due to his industry and perseverance by seeing this work extensively introduced into our schools, public and private.'—Tem. Standard.

'The author promises to endow his pupils with an infinite faculty of memory. If he can do it without too much trouble on the part of the recipients, he will do a good thing, and as far as we can judge, he seems likely to accomplish it. While his system is much more simple than any we have before examined, it contains a great deal more. Moreover, it makes the thing a matter of practical education, within the reach of all.'—Chronotype.

'There are minds of a certain class that are wont to be interested in mnemonics, and we doubt not that such may find valuable assistance in a work of this kind.—N. E. Puritan.

'The book, although designed and adapted to the use of schools, is nevertheless worthy the attention of all persons who wish to assist or strengthen memory.'—N. E. Washingtonian.

'A very ingenious and useful book, designed to shorten the labor of those studies which require the exercise of the memory, by a system of memorizing.'—Reading Gazette, Pa.

We feel no hesitation in recommending this work to the deliberate attention of teachers, and the guardians of youth. We learn that it is received into several of the schools in Boston, and used as an auxiliary help to the studies now pursued by the pupils.'—Boston Courier.

'We noticed the first edition of this book a short time since, and in addition to what we then said, will only say now, that it is prepared by one who has paid great attention to the subject, and who has been employed to teach his system by some of our most experienced teachers and wisest men.'—Ch. Register.

'We have given the work a partial examination, sufficient to become convinced that the subject is one of importance.'—Ch. Watchman.

The Memoria Technica is now studied in some of our best schools; and the system taught in it appears to be much approved by those who have made trial of it.'—Evening Traveller.

The work contains a vast amount of important facts and useful information; which, aside from its value as a system of instruction, render it, as has been justly said by many who have examined it, well worth the price of the work as a mere book of reference. Published by

The Bearing of the Cross.

BY JOHN COOPER VAIL.

MORNING.

No fairer morn to earth was born: the sun kissed Judah's mountains;
No brighter rays, in happy days, o'er-gushed from heaven's fountains;
And floating there, each cloud in air seemed timidly to falter—
A blushing bride in all her pride led forth to Morning's altar!
To heaven flew the gems of dew from Sharon's rosy bowers,
To fall again when Evening's train threw shadows o'er its flowers;
And Fancy flings such lovely things around the soul 'tis bending,
You well can see on Calvary bright angels are descending.

They whisper low, like angels do when gladness hath departed—
As mothers keep their sorrows deep, when they are broken-hearted;
They whisper low—why is it so? immortal brows are paling—
The wind alone can hear each moan when angel hearts are failing?
Jerusalem! thy doom hath come—thy future shall be sorrow:
A dark to-day will fade away, but bring a darker morrow:
In every land, on every strand, fondest hopes shall sever,
Till all will seem a hollow dream of glories fled for ever.

NOON.

'Tis noon! Jordan's river flows flashing in gold;
Bright sunbeams quiver—Light's banner unrolled;
No tribute streams sparing their joys to impart,
Like veins often bearing the blood from the heart.

"Go onward! walk faster! why tarry ye now?
False prophet! false master! the crown's on thy brow;
'Tis thy caronation—time suffers the loss—
Thou art king of no nation, but king of the cross."

'Tis Jesus the holy—our Saviour of love,
The cross bearing lowly—oft looking above:
For archangels tearful are hovering near,
The sight is so fearful—Christ bearing his bier!

"May ye be forgiven," his only, sweet prayer—
The second in heaven, though lowliest there!
Yet each tear adorning the spot where he trod,
Took the wings of the morning, and fluttered to God.

A fearful boon paying on that awful day,
And only one praying, "May this pass away!"
Till each angel's pinion, dissolving in air,
Had left his dominion, the throne of despair.

EVENING.

'Tis evening! but no star arrays the breadth of solemn gloom—
The world seems like a giant corse laid in a system's tomb;
Yet in its heart an earthquake beats—the throb of life below—
An echo to dark thunder-clouds that breathe upon its brow.
And when the lightning shivers far the trappings of the bier,
It glimmers o'er unhallowed things, that quickly disappear—
Dark phantoms of a former world, who, trembling, have defined
The clouds were but a blackened veil—the living God behind!

MIDNIGHT.

'Tis midnight! from heaven descendeth God's love—
A world is forgiven—Christ mounteth above!
The archangels singing a chorus sublime,
A bright spirit bringing to heaven from time.

Break, soul! from the portals that bind thee to earth,
And fly with immortals, thy brothers at birth:
Thy pathway is broken—it leads to God's throne!
And now—a bright token—he claims thee his own.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Rejoinder to Paul Pry.

MR. EDITOR:—Permit me, through the medium of the Western Recorder, to assure our friend, Paul Pry, that he has, by the spirit displayed in his reply to J. H. raised himself, at least one hundred per cent, in my estimation. If he could take my hand, no doubt it would receive a hearty shake; and, be assured, I would reciprocate cordially. I am now well satisfied that I shall not share less in his confidence and esteem, if I should beg leave to dissent from some of his positions in his reply to his friend, J. H. Before proceeding any farther, I shall, most cheerfully concede, as I have already done, that the unstationed ministers of the Methodist Protestant Church enjoy well secured rights and privileges, which the local ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church can never hope to enjoy; hence, I prefer the position of those. My Br. Paul however, does not seem to have sufficiently pryed into the main subject by J. H. presented, so as distinctly to perceive the bearings of the present usage upon the unstationed ministry. I take it for granted that Br. Pry well understood that the primitive object of the Methodist Protestant Church in her organization, was to secure the "Mutual Rights" of every department of the Church. The unstationed ministry is one department: any arrangement which goes, either directly or indirectly, to deprive these ministers of their rights, should be, and will be opposed by every genuine friend to "mutual rights." If the votes cast by the unstationed ministers, in the Electoral College, amount precisely to the same as no votes, then, I conclude, their voting can have no very beneficial effects, either upon themselves or any others. That this is their position in these colleges, under present usages, to my mind is as clear as two and two make four; unless by mere accidental division among their itinerant brethren; in which case they may succeed in defeating a portion of these; but without the aid of the laity, other than this, they can never prevent the election of any candidate, no difference how hostile he may be to their rights. "Prevent," I said, for this is all that either the itinerant or unstationed ministers, or the lay delegates ought to have the power to perform without a concurrence of a majority of each department. I suppose Br. Paul Pry is aware that there are sundry things presented by him, in his reply to J. H., which have no particular bearing upon the main question; hence, it is deemed immaterial whether they are, or are not noticed. I, however, beg leave to remark, Br. Paul Pry says, "much has been written from Batavia and other places by J. H., and others on the rights of the unstationed ministers. They have rights, and they should be maintained, carefully guarded and never relinquished." All right, Br. Paul. I never suspected you to be wanting in strong attachments to "mutual rights." I appreciate your remarks which immediately follow; yet you will allow me to notice an item or two which, as it seems to me, are not quite so consonant with fact. In defining the position of delegates to an Annual Conference, you represent the unstationed minister who serves as a lay delegate, as representing "perhaps unstationed ministers." Br. Paul, if you have found any thing, either in our constitution or discipline, which authorizes any unstationed minister to vote for a representative, either lay, or ministerial, to an Annual Conference, other than to attend the Electoral Colleges, you have been more successful than I have ever been; and if you will point out the section or item, I will feel under obligations to you. Br. Pry, you say correctly when you state J. H. does not wish the "power to be placed in the hands of the unstationed ministers at the expense of the itinerants." Even handed justice is all I ask, this I desire. But you proceed to say, refering to the appearance of an adverse desire; "I must acknowledge it looks very considerably that way, for he complains, that the unstationed minister to entitle him to a seat in the college must be elected by his brethren, ("when more than two,") this he says is a difference between itinerants and unstationed ministers." Br. Paul here shows "TACT;" or he shows how difficult it is to make others comprehend definitely, what we mean when writing. All that J. H. intended, was, that the election of the unstationed minister from each circuit and station, showed that the constitution made a difference between these and the itinerant ministers, without any design to complain of the arrangement; for I highly approve of the plan if no undue advantage is taken; and I have from this, been led to believe that he, or they, who drafted that portion of our constitution which refers to the electoral colleges, really designed that, for which I contend; viz: that the itinerant and unstationed ministers and the lay delegates should each vote separatedly.

Br. Pry says the Pittsburgh Conference contains about 40 circuits and stations. Taking the proportion of each class of ministers to be in conformity with the number of circuits and stations &c., given by the "Register for 1847"—there are now, about 56 itinerants, and 66 unstationed ministers belonging to this Annual Conference. Now, Br. Paul Pry, since, agreeably to our elementary principles, "All elders in the church of God are equal," and consequently deacons also, can you inform me upon what principles of equity and good conscience, these 56 men should be more in point of power, than these 66 men of equal standing? And to make the itinerants 50, the heads of 26 of the unstationed ministers must suffer a legal abscision; and then by the present usage, when thus reduced to a helpless minority, instead of letting them vote as a portion of the college by themselves, and thus retain their equality, they are compelled to vote with a majority of itinerants, as a component part of this college. You may, indeed, tell us of great sacrifices made—of a man's all being identified with the Church, &c., but, Br. Paul, if any man presented such claims why he should have the rule over you, would you not, at least, tell him to wait until he was duly elected, or you had chosen him for your guardian? I respectfully say to Br. Paul Pry, as far as I can discover, there is no necessity for any alteration in our constitution or discipline. The whole rests with our itinerant brethren. Whenever they are disposed, they can give the relief requiste, by properly arranging the parts of the electoral colleges—the lay delegation can have no grounds to object to the procedure. Permit me to subscribe myself your friend,

J. H.

Biographical.

Another Laborer Gone to His Reward.

BROTHER ALLEN C. M'CURDY, the subject of this melancholy notice, was born in Westmorland county, Pa., about the year 1803. His pious and exemplary Presbyterian parents dedicated him in infant baptism, and at an early age inducted him into the study of the Catechism.—Brother McCurdy being constitutionally of a teachable, dutiful and amiable disposition, and being surrounded by the holy influences of the Sabbath, the family altar and catechetical instruction he embraced religion at 13 years of age, and made such rapid progress in the school of Christ, that he became a member of the Presbyterian Church in full standing at an early age, where he long continued to adorn his profession with a zealous, devoted and an innocent life.—About the year 1828 the parents, son and daughter, (these being the only children,) removed to the State of Ohio, and my first acquaintance with the subject of this memoir, was contracted in the neighborhood of New Athens in Harrison county. It was here at Franklin College that he laid the foundation for those polemical powers for which he was so well known among his numerous acquaintances in after years, and which he often employed with so much effect in defending the Bible against the assaults of scepticism.

As his religious sentiments deepened and his theology matured, he began to feel it his duty to become a harbinger of Christ's salvation to a lost world. At this crisis his attention was directed to the preparatory steps prescribed by the Presbyterian order, touching their ministry and the doctrine of the atonement. Regarding these as scarcely reconcilable with the teachings of the Bible with which he was unusually conversant, he took his position among the Disciples or Campbellite Baptists, and there gave vent to an overflowing heart, in telling the heart-cheering story of the cross.

His doctrines, however, touching the divinity of the Son of God soon excited an uneasiness in the minds of his new associates, and seeing a disposition to set up an espionage over him, to the end that he might be silenced, he now found it necessary to seek in some other quarter that liberty which he had so signally failed to find among these self-styled freedmen. Regarding the untramelled exercise of his ministry as essential to the discharge of his duty he made application at Georgetown, at one of the appointments of Bro. Robert Scott, and was taken into the Methodist P. Church.

He soon passed through the preliminary steps and was licensed to preach; and labored about 2 years among us as a local preacher. On Sabbath the 18th of April last, after closing meeting at Harrisville after sermon by Brother Linder, Brother McCurdy was struck by palsy and died next morning about 3 o'clock, leaving a most affectionate companion and four small children to mourn their irreparable loss. May that God in whom Bro. McCurdy has so long trusted, put it into the hearts of surviving acquaintances to take care of the widow and orphans.

In conclusion it affords a deep current of pleasurable feeling when I remember his early and continuous devotion to his Saviour, his prevailing cheerfulness of temper, amid the fluctuations of life, his almost unequalled constancy and affection toward his wife and children, his uniform politeness and affability towards all with whom he associated, and the full-hearted and christian promptness with which he always called in the stranger to share his cordial hospitality, nor do I remember during an acquaintance of many years, that I ever saw him indulge in the least malignity of feeling towards even his worst enemy.

I hope to see him again with all his christian graces still stronger and purer, which may God grant for the Redeemer's sake. H. H.

From the Waynesburg Messenger.

It becomes my painful duty to record the death of sister MARY, daughter of Br. John and Susanna Rogers, which took place on the third inst.

Just as the spring was putting forth and clothing herself with her beautiful garment of verdent green, and all nature enlivened with the sweet music of birds, yielding up their hymns of devotion to the God of nature, this lovely youth was in the spring of life. Eleven years did she look forth upon God's fair creation, but she has exchanged the beautiful scenery of earth, and took her flight to the skies to gaze forever upon the glories of heaven, where she sees all things new. The immortal mind sleeps not in the darkness of the tomb. She was the object of a father's and a mother's love. In rural peace they lived and contemplated many happy days upon earth. Their hopes were wove in flattery's loom. Death like an ocean, dark, deep, rough and shoreless, rolled his billows e'er little Mary and she is gone.

Nip't by the wind's untimely blast,
Parched by the sun's scorching ray;
The momentary glories waste,
The short-lived beauties die away.

There is one great source of comfort to these bereaved friends. They can muse upon the prophetic paintings of the last day. The day will be without a cloud, the weeping of the world hushed, all its great miseries passed away. Christ on his throne, in the midst of redeemed, sanctified, and happy children; all things sacred to his name, all tongues rehearsing the great chorus of redemption.

Relatives, here then, is an object at once to take your affections to the throne of God; your child, your sister is there.

Ministers' Department.

The best Style of Preaching.

The celebrated Garrick having been requested, by Dr. Stonehouse, to favor him with his opinion as to the manner in which a sermon ought to be delivered, the English Roscius sent him the following judicious answer,—

"MY DEAR PUPIL.—You know how you would feel and speak in a parlor concerning a friend who was in iminent danger of his life, and what energetic pathos of diction and countenance you would enforce the observance of that which you really thought would be for his preservation.

You could not think of playing the orator; of studying your emphasis, cadence, and gesture: you would be yourself; and the interesting nature of your subject, impressing you, would furnish you with the most natural tone of voice, the most proper language, the most engaging features and the most suitable and graceful features. What you would thus be in the parlor be in the pulpit, and you will not fail to please; to affect, and to profit."

If young ministers would only observe the above suggestions they would realize much greater advantage than by attempting to ape some favorite preacher whose faults they are always sure to imitate.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

A Hint to Preachers.

We are told that when Kean first came out upon the London stage, the veteran Kemble, who had retired from it, went to see him, and being asked afterward by his friend Boaden, how he liked him, "Why," said he "his manner is so totally different from mine, that you can hardly expect me to like him altogether; but I must say one thing for him—he is always terribly in earnest. This was the remark of a player, but it may serve to suggest a good hint to preachers. There is manifestly no point of public speaking so important and effective as earnestness, and it happens somehow or other, most unfortunately, that it is the very one in which the generality of our performers in the pulpit appear to be most deficient. Another player said of them, "They speak of most awful realities as if they were indifferent fictions." They do not appear, at least, to be in earnest, when we are bound to believe that they are most entirely so. The fault lies, no doubt in their delivery, rather than in their hearts, but it should be corrected, if possible, without delay. They ought in fact, not only to be, but to appear also to be, always thoroughly, and sometimes even "terribly."

An association of enterprising and benevolent men has been formed in New York, for the purpose of building houses for the occupation of the laboring classes, on such improved plans as shall more fully secure health, convenience, and comfort, at low rates.

Miscellaneous.

From the Oberlin Evangelist.

Colored People in Canada.

Rev. A. D. Eddy of Newark, N. J., in a speech before the Am. Colonization Society at its thirtieth anniversary, took occasion to give a very dark view of the character and state of the refugees from slavery now in the Canadas, his object being to show that there can be no good to the southern slave except either in slavery, or in expatriation to Africa.

Rev. Hiram Wilson, well known to most of our readers for his labors and sacrifices in behalf of the Canadian refugees takes his occasion from the published report of Mr. Eddy's speech to reply by stating what he knows to be the facts respecting the people of color in Canada.

Our readers cannot fail to be interested in his remarks. We take them from the National Era: giving first Dr. Eddy; then Bro. Wilson.

"A few months since I was travelling near to Canada, and desiring to see the result of freedom, as they found it in their northern flight, with their eyes fixed on the polar star, I enquired about them and found that when they first came there, they were docile and full of hopes; they lost their buoyancy of spirits, became indolent, unwilling to submit to the restraints of society which the whites submit to, and, as a necessary consequence, a large number of them were in the penitentiary, and others are in the greatest state of want and wretchedness. They do not think they have bettered their condition by the change.—They say they were betrayed and deceived; that false hopes were held out to them, and allured them on. One man said to me, after a long and candid conversation, "I never knew misery till I came to this freedom: and he begged me to 'sue out a hocus-pocus' for him, and get him back. There is no advantage gained by going to Canada. British philanthropists may boast as long as they choose. The facts in the case are all against them."

Bro. Wilson's Reply.

Now observe, Mr. Eddy makes no mention of his ever being in Canada. He was "travelling near to Canada," &c. So his near-sighted observations, not extending across the transmutation waters of the North, reveal nothing new to the world, and his hearsay testimony may be counted chaff—nothing more. It has been my privilege to labor in Canada as a missionary to the refugees during the last ten years; and having seen them in every part of the province, in the various conditions and relations of life, favorable and adverse, I have no hesitancy in pronouncing Mr. Eddy's statements grossly libelous. It is true that some have gone to the penitentiary, and that others are poor and in want; but by far the greater portion of them are in a thriving state; and all of them whether in affluent or indigent circumstances, are rejoicing with 'joy unspeakable' in their inalienable birthright boon of freedom, under the mild and benignant sway of Victoria's sceptre, which anti-republican despotism would never allow them in their native land. Generally, they are found to be a quiet, peaceable, law-abiding people, filling a great variety of useful occupations, much to their own credit and to the advantage of their adopted country. Large numbers, as tillers of their own soil, acquired by persevering industry, are earning for themselves and families a comfortable subsistence. The lowest condition in which I have ever seen them is infinitely preferable to slavery, even in its mildest form. There are reckoned to be in Canada about twenty thousand, to most of whom their asylum is a terrestrial paradise. To some extent the prejudice of the whites annoys them; but its keen edge is taken off by the laws of the country, which are equitable and impartial. Their wealth, though considerable, is small compared with what it would be, had justice awarded to them their hard earnings in the south. They are favored with governmental protection, with a mild and salubrious climate, a fertile and productive soil, which yields bountifully to the hand of industry. So their transposition and transmutation from a southern plantation to a northern asylum is something. They are where parental, conjugal and filial relations, most sacred to all rational beings, have the respect of the community and the protection of the law—while female virtue, which commands the smiles of heaven, sits enthroned upon the altar of many a steadfast heart, no longer exposed to compulsory prostitution; and then the glowing prospects of their legitimate offspring, gathered by pious teachers and instructed during the week and on the Sabbath in the rudiments of education, secular and religious—the light of gospel truth ever shining, and the happy gates of gospel grace ever open and inviting, the blessed bible no longer a sealed book, now open to dispel the accumulated gloom of ages, shedding its benign and beauteous beams upon their intellects—lighting up their pathway to usefulness and respectability—to the Mount of God and to the glory and blessedness of immortality. And does all this imply no change for the better? Shame on the man who professes to be a minister of Jesus Christ, and yet is so morally obtuse, so spiritually blind, as to blend together these antagonisms. Are such developments of mind sanity or insanity? I do no say that such is Mr. Eddy: but his speech, whether the effect of mental aberration or cool reflection, is adapted to elicit from every noble and philanthropic mind abhorrence.

For truth and humanity,
Very respectfully yours,
HIRAM WILSON.

Growth of the West.

The following eloquent allusion to the rapid growth and improvement of the west, is from the Cleveland Herald's report of General Cass' lecture:—

Gen. Cass remarked that about fifty years ago he stood upon the summit of the Alleghenies, and looked out upon the unbroken wilderness extending over the vast area now occupied by the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin and having a population of only 30,000. Now 5,000,000 of intelligent freemen are here pursuing the various avocations of honorable enterprise and industry.

Then the glassy surface of our beautiful rivers were rippled only by the light canoe of the red men; now nine hundred floating palaces ride on the current of the great Father of Waters and his tributaries. Then the "multitude marine" of our great lakes was comprised into one solitary vessel; now five hundred are scarce equal to the demands of commerce on these inland seas. He, with his early lamented friend, Gen. Harrison, had frequently met large numbers of the aboriginal possessors of the soil, in peaceful council, and on the battlefield; now they have traversed the uttermost confines of civilization, and stand looking out upon the boundless Pacific.

He had, when in Europe, spoken of the magnitude and suddenness of the improvements witnessed by the valley of the Mississippi, and they were received with great incredulity.

No man has a right to do as he pleases unless he pleases to do right.

An effectual remedy for the various diseases of mankind is, simple living.

Anger has produced death. A woman in Philadelphia, a few years since, expired in convulsions after indulging in a fit of passion.

The wheat grown in Great Britain in 1790, amounted to 14,000 bushels. In 1830 the crop was estimated at 100,000,000 bushels.

A raven will live 100 years; a partridge, 25; swine, 25; a bull, 15; an ox, 20; a hare, 10, a cat, 10; a goat, 8; a ram, 15; a dog, 25.

Singular Occurrence.

The Springfield Republic, in speaking of the work on the Mad River and Lake Erie Railroad, relates the following singular occurrence. A car load of passengers would look well in such a scrape:

"Between Bellefontaine and West Liberty, the road crosses a small prairie, which is evidently a lake, over the surface of which a heavy sod has grown. The road was graded and contractors were about to deliver it as finished, when it suddenly disappeared, and twelve feet water was found in its place. Thirty years ago, the grass was cut on this prairie, and hauled off on a heavy wagon. It is supposed that there is a subterranean communication between it and the neighboring lakes. The road will probably have to be carried around the prairie."

The City Inspector's Report shows that the number of deaths which occurred in New York in 1846 was 11,318. The increased mortality over the previous year is imputed to the large number of sick and feeble emigrants sent to this port, chiefly from Europe.

It was decided, at the late Rhode Island Methodist Conference, to employ the superannuated preachers as colporteurs for circulating their publications, after the plan of the colportage of the American Tract Society.

The Madras government have recommended to the Court of Directors, the introduction of Bibles into Provincial Schools about to be established.

Rev. John J. Lawrence, stationed at Dindigul, a branch of the Madura mission, died at Tranquebar on the 20th of December. He was on his way to Madras to take passage for the United States, his health, having failed. His widow and children are now on their return to this country.

Rev. Charles Robinson, stationed at Bankok, Siam, died on his voyage home, on board the barque Draco. His wife and family have arrived in New York.

To point out failings in the spirit of kindness is one of the clearest indications of friendship.

Esteem is the mother of love, but the daughter is often older than the mother.

NEGLECTED SANCTUARIES.—A colporteur laboring in Western Pennsylvania, says, 1,100 of the 2,213 families he visited during the year, seldom or never attend church, and a majority had never been invited by a professing Christian to attend. Most of them spend the day in recreation—hunting, fishing, and visiting; while many attend to their secular concerns as on other days. He found fifty adults that could neither read nor write, ignorant, destitute of the necessaries of life, and sunk in degradation and vice.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

OHIO HARMONIST.

The HARMONIST will contain a choice selection of about 150 pages of Psalm and Hymn tunes, compiled with much care from the best authors in the United States, to which is added a supplement of Temperance songs, designed for the use of congregations, singing schools, temperance meetings, and musical associations.

It will be arranged in three parts,—parts first and third contain the seven syllables in the patent notes; the seven sounds being represented by SEVEN DIFFERENT CHARACTERS, to wit:—do, ra, mi, fa, sal, la, si.

Part second contains the four syllables in the old patent notes.

It will also contain the rudiments of music on a plain and concise plan.

The object of the publishers in getting up this work, is to assist the public in singing the do, ra, mi system with much ease and accuracy, without being compelled to go through a long and tedious study of the round note system.

It also contains a Hindoo piece, accompanied with both the Hindoo and English languages.

The entire work will be executed on good paper and in a neat and substantial manner, and bound in good style by J. A. & U. P. James, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

The work will be completed about the first of June next.

TERMS.—The OHIO HARMONIST will be delivered to subscribers at seventy-five cents per single copy, to be paid on delivery. A reasonable discount will be made to wholesale purchasers. All orders addressed to the undersigned at Washington, Guernsey county, Ohio, or Deersville, Harrison county, Ohio, or J. A. & U. P. James, Cincinnati, accompanied with the cash, and post paid, will be promptly attended to.

PROSPECTUS

FOR PUBLISHING A SERIES OF VOLUMES OF SERMONS

By the Rev. Thomas Potter, Minister of the M. P. Church.

VOLUME I.

THE EVANGELICAL ECONOMY DEVELOPED, IN A SERIES OF DISCOURSES ON THE FACTS, INSTITUTIONS, APPLIANCES, EFFECTS, AND FINAL RESULTS OF THE CHRISTIAN SYSTEM, VIZ

I. The dispensation of the Gospel the subject of prophetic anticipation.
II. The evangelic announcement of the Savior's nativity.
III. The divine mandate at the incarnation of the Son of God.
IV. The introduction of the Mediatorial economy the subject of rejoicing in heaven.
V. The work of grace on the day of Pentecost the model for religious revivals.
VI. The primitive Evanglisits the patterns of all succeeding preachers.
VII. The divine institution for saving the world.
VIII. The moral revolutions which the triumphs of the Gospel accomplish.
IX. The religious excitement produced by the successful preaching of the Gospel, defended.
X. The principal cause of the failure of the agencies of Christianity.
XI. The penitent sinner on earth the delight of the Angels in heaven.
XII. The final consummation of the dispensation of grace in the solemnities of the day of judgment.

The views embodied in these discourses are such as are held in common by all evangelical denominations. The author eschews all controversy. The style is didactic. Nothing sectarian has a place in these sermons, which are simply devoted to popular impression and instruction. It is proposed to put to the Press these Sermons as soon as a sufficient number of subscribers have been secured to justify their publication. If the author meet with adequate encouragement in the sale of this first Volume, it will be succeeded by a second, and so on.

[The contents of the second, third, fourth and fifth volumes are also given in the prospectus which has been furnished us, but as the first volume is to be published separately, the above will sufficiently for the present, indicate the nature and plan of the work. ED.]

The whole of these discourses were prepared and delivered during a not unsuccessful ministry of upwards of twenty years, partly in this country and partly in Great Britain; and are already committed to writing.

Each Volume will be sold at the moderate charge of One Dollar, to be paid for on delivery.

The Volumes will be neatly bound,—octavo size,—and printed on good paper, in a clear type. Each Volume will contain upwards of three hundred pages. Subscriptions will be received for the first Volume alone; or for the first and second; or the whole series may be subscribed for at once.

Mr. LEVI PETTIT is authorized to receive subscriptions for these contemplated publications; or a letter addressed to the author, Mount Vernon, Knox county, Ohio, with a request over the writer's signature, to become a subscriber, will insure the insertion of his name on the subscription list. [May 29.] THOMAS POTTER.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

Written for the Western Recorder.

An Immortal Spring.

In bright and merry May,
When every thing is gay,
I wandered forth
Along a valley green
With blossoms for a sheen—
Of verdant growth.

Where merry birds of spring
In lays of rapture sing
Anthems of praise;
Where sweet scented flowers,
'Neath the shady bowers,
In beauty raise.

Where gentle streamlets low
In purling murmurs flow
Onward in peace;
While little fishes lave
Are sporting in the wave
Of innocence.

Where majestic forest trees,
Raised up as if to please
The Great, the Good;
Where gentle zephyrs move,
All in silent love,
To praise the Lord.

I, too, at what I saw,
Was filled with sacred awe;—
I raised my voice
In hymns of holy praise
To Him whose righteous ways
Bid all rejoice.

Engaged in humble prayer,
In solemn reverence there,
To contemplate
The future world of bliss,
Beyond the shores of this,—
A blest estate.

There is immortal spring
Immortal souls will sing
Anthems of praise;
There sweeter scented flowers
In everlasting bowers
Ne'er ending, raise.

There gentle streams of grace;
In perfect holiness,
Forever move;
There the immortal flock
Are steadfast on the Rock,
The Rock of love.

There, too, the Tree of Life,
Is seen in bold relief,
With fruits of heav'n;
And there in softer gales,
Along the heavenly vales,
Blow winds of Eden.

REMINISCENCES

OF THE FIRST SETTLEMENT OF OHIO.

NO. XII.

Friend Bassett: I do not propose to give a history of Burr's intended enterprise in 1806. The trial at Richmond in 1807 disclosed all that could be brought in evidence against him, and failed to convict him of any crime against the laws of the United States. But it proved very disastrous to the family of Blenerhassett, certain it is that nothing had been done at, or near Marietta, which could have justified the proceedings I propose to relate. I have not at my command, any data whereby I can fix the day, but I remember it was in Nov. 1806, (the day before thanksgiving) that I saw quite a number of the Militia belonging to the company on the Point, (there were two companies in the town) coming up the street and going to a barn, and joiners shop, on the bank of the Muskingum, near the Stockade. Their object could not be divined, as there were no "signs of war" nor was it at a time when the militia paraded; and besides it was about, or after, sun down. In the morning we learn that they had arrested nine of Burr's boats, and had taken them down about half a mile below, to the ferry over the Muskingum, where the ferryman had a blacksmith's shop, immediately on the bank, and nearer where the guard resided. They were under the command of a Captain Hill who appeared to act under authority of General Buell, the Major General of that division of Ohio Militia. There was in Marietta, a small man, named Clark Green, blind of one eye, who had in his sole charge, two of the boats; two of his sons, about eleven and twelve years of age, managed another boat, the balance, except one, had one man each to work and guide them; in the other boat were two or three young men from Belpre, near where Mr. Blenerhassett lived. This boat heeded not the order given by these valorous troops, "to come a shore and surrender," but continued their way down the river. I mention these facts, to show how little necessity there was, for a military company to be called out. The boats were to have landed at the Point, to receive some pork, and meal, as cargoes and to receive such crews, as were necessary to navigate them; but, to have suffered a Constable to make the arrest, would have defeated the whole object, that of making political capital out of this contemptible farce, (so far as the public were concerned.) I have in my possession, a historical article, written at the time, in imitation of the celebrated one of Revolutionary times called the "Battle of the Kegs" which has this description of the forces conducting this "great flotilla."

A few young boys,
Their mothers joys,
And five men there were found, sirs,
Floating at ease, each little seas,
Or dreams of deaths and wounds, sirs,

The next day, both the militia companies were warned to appear "armed and equipped as the law directs" instantly upon the firing of the cannon, at the aforesaid blacksmith shop, to protect the boats. For a certain Major Tyler from Pittsburgh, with about twenty young men, had passed down the river that day, and were said to be of Burr's "engages;" and they pretended there was a probability of his coming back, and endeavoring to rescue the boats. And as a further security, they at night, brought all the crafts from the west side of the river, so that Tyler and his men should find no means of crossing to the east-side, if he should come back for that purpose. There were several vessels being rigged out there, at that time; and as the orders for the assembling of the militia was known on the west side, where several sailors boarded, some of them determined to have a rally of the militia. As the only cannon in town, was in the hands of the militia on the east side, they took half a keg of powder, and enclosed it in canvass and after wrapping it well with spun yarn, they buried it in the earth, and making a priming hole to the charge, they put a slow match to it, and about midnight they were gratified at the success of their labor, for the report brought the militia to the rescue, of the valorous guard. That night Mr. Blenerhassett having learned the measures taken with his boats, and fearing the same arbitrary, and lawless treatment of himself, left his wife and children at his own house, and went down the river, trusting that they, at least, would be secure from outrage; and never after returned to his Island; at least not to reside there. The same disregard of private right, manifested in the arrest of the boats, was practiced on the Island. A company of militia from Parkersburgh in Virginia, was sent there, who took possession of the premises and property, consuming the provisions of the family, and refusing to let Mrs. B. use any more of the property than was absolutely necessary for their subsistance, and such a distruction of the provisions of the family was made that Mrs. B. was obliged to send to an acquaintance in Belpre. Aaron Waldo Putnam, to supply her with provisions, which he did. In January, 1807, she left the Island with her family and servants, in a boat procured for that purpose, but the usurping guard, refused to allow her to remove any furniture. The wearing apparel of the family, and bedding necessary for them, was all they were allowed to take. Thus was this Lady and her children, driven by arbitrary power, from their premises, never again to see the house they had builded for a pleasant Home.

When the boat reached Mr. Putnam's, he supplied her with some articles of furniture, needed in it for their comfort, and convenience, and she proceeded on her way; evincing by her conduct, the character that she had before, and did subsequently, of a woman of great fortitude, and ability. Mr. Converse informed me, that he has had a conversation with a gentleman, well acquainted with the circumstances, who informed him, that Mrs. B. did all she could, to dissuade Blenerhassett from engaging in the enterprise of Burr, but that Burr had excited his ambition to be a great man to such a pitch that she failed.

Mr. Blenerhassett had become indebted, or bound to a house in Kentucky, for a large sum of money, in furtherance of Burr's plans, and this house obtained possession of the Island property, for seven years, and converted it into a plantation for the culture of hemp. One of the firm conducted the operations. The house was used to board and lodge the hands in, (mostly blacks) and for a hemp ware house. A few years after, the slaves had had a Christmas holiday, and had gone to Parkersburgh on a spree; on their return they upset the canoe and got wet; one of the wings of the house was filled with hemp, and in pursuit of something to kindle their fire, one of the women set fire to the hemp, and the whole buildings were destroyed, together with a large quantity of hemp, and all the seed, saved for sowing the next spring. Thus ended this handsome improvement. Since then it has passed into other hands, and is used as other fertile land on the Ohio, for making money. It was the refinement and hospitality of its owners, that gave it eminence, and not anything in its natural beauty or locality. After the trial of Burr & his accomplices at Richmond, and their acquittal, Mr. B. purchased a plantation in Clarbourn county Miss., where they resided until 1818. Mrs. B. here also evinced her firmness of character, in managing the place; for her husband seemed to be broken down with his misfortunes, and sought retirement from company, and business. They had by their courtesy and good breeding, endeared themselves to their neighbors in Belpre, and in 1817 and 1818, Mr. William Pitt Putnam, son of A. W. Putnam, visited their house frequently, and Mrs. B. conversed freely of their former residence on the Island, and of their esteem of the people of Belpre, and especially of the kindness of his father in the day of her affliction—and they entrusted to his care their youngest son, Harmon, to be put to school at Athens in Ohio. In the fall of 1818, this son returned with Mr. Putnam to the house of his parents; and Mr. B. sold his plantation there, and removed to Halifax, thence to Guernsey or the Isle of Wight, where he died. Mrs. B., Mr. Putnam informs me, died in Philadelphia. Their sons have frequently petitioned Congress for indemnification, for damages sustained by the arbitrary and unjust acts of the agents, who perpetrated these acts; but I believe they have not yet succeeded. The people of the United States were made to believe a very meritorious part had been acted by a few demagogues in Marietta, and a dangerous conspiracy suppressed; and the public money was freely squandered on a company of Militia, kept in pay at Marietta during the winter of 1806 and '7, as was said, to arrest the participants in Burr's Plot, going down the river. Not one did they ever see; but frequently, very much incommoded emigrants, by compelling them to land, to be searched for suspected persons. But no matter, these idle youth, and officers, got Uncle Sam's money for doing duty one week out of three, and a Major's pay was given to an officer of higher grade. In the winter a fresh brought the boats on to the common, where they were pulled to pieces, by this valorous band, as a recreation.—They were very frail things, about as strong as a good skiff, carrying two or three tons each.—They served their purpose. Burr's political prospects were blighted. The actors became Patriots, and money was distributed to the instruments of official importance. We are a progressive people! In these days we "re-annex Texas," or "conquer a peace with Mexico"—for similar purposes.

In closing these notes, you will permit me to thank you for the patience with which you have borne the infliction of these numbers, extended so far beyond what I myself anticipated when I commenced them. But so it is, we become grolous as we advance in years, and forget that the rising generation, do not look upon the scenes of our youthful days, with the same complacency that we do.

"The way they do here."

NO. IV.

Mr. Editor:—The time for the meeting in contemplation had fully come, and great numbers were in attendance at the place appointed, where prayer was wont to be made, and the gospel of peace was to be preached in its purity and simplicity. The preachers labored with uncommon zeal, and the assembled congregations listened with profound attention to the words of Eternal Life. A general interestedness prevailed throughout the meeting, and no doubt many will remember as long as the powor of recollection lasts them the sublimity of the loving scence.

The solemnity of the occasion had an effect to strengthen the society by an addition of some fifteen which added to the twenty before mentioned made the whole number amount to thirty-five. And these were considered (or the most part) the sinners of the neighborhood in which they lived, and upon whom rested the efficient prayers and future prosperity of the society.

Two preachers were appointed to this field of labor. In their regular attendance, without doubt they did much to keep the flame of love already kindled, burning brightly. And in the intervals of the attendance of the preachers, the society kept up its regular meetings twice a week, that enabled them to maintain a godly walk and chaste conversation as well as acquire a character without spot, and truly christian in the service of Him whose cause they had undertaken and in whose care they had placed themselves.

In the meantime, the other society having the great advantage of popularity, and using it in the way of protracted meetings, popular sermons, &c., had increased their number to about one hundred, before half a year had expired. And from appearance bid fair to remove every obstacle that offered to oppose their onward march and rapid progress to the haven of destination, beyond the confines of this vain world, where troubles vexations, and disappointments pass the round of tedious hours and days of sadness. But by a peculiar law of their organization, the six months volunteers that were considered unworthy of an enlistment that would last as long as the war, were discharged (dropped) that there might be none but valiant souls "in the army of the Lord," able to carry on the work of extermination to the overthrow of every thing that dared oppose the "right way" or showed signs of discontent at their lawful sovereignty.

The sword of excommunication when once set in motion was not easily stayed for it went on with devouring execution until its sharp edge had dropped a large portion of those that not long since were their boasted numercial strength, through all the country round about. Some fearing the ponderous weapon would come down in its vengeful wrath on them fled from before the monster in dread confusion, while others seeing their friends cut off without any assignable cause for it, demanded a passport that they might escape with their lives, so that most of them closed their membership with the probationary privileges. I said most of them which amounted to about two thirds of the whole number as reported at the time. And notwithstanding the central position and powerful effect they had produced on the morals of the place in the beginning; yet their influence seemed to keep pace with their numbers, for when they were many, they had control over many, & when they were few the influence was small.

As to the other society it had its difficulties to contend with too; but they were of somewhat different character. Although they had maintained a social relation, amounting almost to a unit for nearly two years, when a great question arose among them about the "right way," instigated by a new denomination coming into the country teaching a more excellent way, in which salvation was to be attained. The condition required by this new church being only to believe . . . was easily comprehended and readily received by the waiting multitude, to whom it seemed peculiarly adapted and a part of the society becoming contaminated with the phantom that was spreading like fire in dry stubble, propelled by a strong wind speedily consummating the extent of its greatness. And as before stated, a part of the society was carried away with the fair prospect of easy sailing down the boisterous stream of time, and coupled with it another question of a very local nature threatened to divide the little band that had been so firm in the united display of brotherly love. And in the diversity of opinion, some were for Paul, and some for Apollos, and some for Christ.

Yours respectfully, NEM. CON.

MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCE.

From the Missionary Herald.

Cholera in Persia.

LETTER FROM DOCT. WRIGHT, DECEMBER 22, 1846.

Progress of the Cholera—its Appearance in Oroomiah.

The appearance of the cholera in the province of Oroomiah has already been announced in the Herald; as also the goodness of God to the mission, during all its ravages in the city and villages which constitute their field of labor. As the disease has now spent its force in that province, and has proceeded on its way to other triumphs, Dr. Wright has drawn up a narrative of the visitation as it came under his notice, which will undoubtedly be interesting to all.

In the early part of last season, reports reached us of the ravages caused by the cholera in Khorasan, the extreme province in the east of Persia, it having previously traversed the countries lying between Persia and Hindostan, where it originated. About midsummer it advanced to Tehran, where it raged with great violence, sweeping off about ten thousand souls in the course of a few weeks. From the capital, it took the high roads north, south and west; and, spreading desolation in its course, it reached in due time the large cities of Ispahan and Bagdad. Of its ravages in the former place we have no definite information. In the latter upwards of seven thousand persons died; and in the whole pashalik, including the city and the country around, thirty thousand are supposed to have fallen victims to this awful scourge.

Its progress northward was slow. It reached Tabreez on the 7th of October, and in about forty days nearly seven thousand souls were hurried to the grave. About the 25th of the same month it was rumored that some cases had occurred in Oroomiah, but it was impossible to trace them out; and it was not until the 30th that the existence of the disease in the city was put beyond doubt in our minds. That day I saw three cases, clearly marked, of this wonderful malady. These occurred in a quarter of the city which is remote from the mission premises, and in the neighborhood of the northern gate, where the Tabreez road enters. For some days nearly all the cases were confined to this quarter. Gradually, however, the disease advanced towards the east and west, and along the wards next the walls, and also towards the south, into the heart of the town.—In my daily rounds I was struck by this feature. It seemed to march along in regular advances, and to attack successive portions of the town, with an ardor worthy of a well disciplined army. It was not until about fifteen days that a case was observed in the western ward, in the neighborhood of our premises. By this time it had nearly disappeared in those quarters where it first broke out.

For eighteen days the ravages of the disease were on the increase; but after this period its strength was evidently spent, and it began to retire. Cases, however, were seen, more or less, until the fortieth day after its ingress. A census of deaths has since been taken by our Gov., who kindly undertook the matter at our suggestion; and it appears that not far from twenty-two hundred persons have died since the appearance of the malady in the city. Some of these deaths, no doubt, occurred in the ordinary course of other diseases; so that we may safely estimate the number of deaths by the cholera alone at two thousand!

Not satisfied with its trophies in the city, it made its way to the surrounding villages; and it has prevailed with greater or less violence in most parts of the plain of Oroomiah. Unable or indisposed to scale the lofty barrier, presented by the mountains of Koordistan on the west, it has passed along south, between the highlands on one side and the lake on the other; and it is said now to be raging with great violence in the districts of Sulduz and Souok Bolok.

Its course seems to be westward; and though winter may cool its ardor for a time, we confidently expect that it will move on towards the setting sun, as another season opens, doing its dreadful work of death; and it may not stop in its progress till it shall have leaped the broad Atlantic, and swept over the new world, as it is now sweeping over the old.

Some Account of the Disease.

The reader will doubtless be pleased to read a more detailed account of this malady, as it exhibited itself in the practice of Dr. Wright. His remarks upon this topic, therefore, will be given without abridgement.

In attempting to describe the cholera, as it fell under my eye, I cannot refrain from expressing my deep sense of its mysterious and formidable nature. For several weeks it was my absorbing study, by the side of patients, in every stage of it, and also in books; so much so, that I was unable to turn my mind to other subjects by day, and with difficulty could I compose myself to sleep at night. And, after all, I feel obliged to adopt the following summary of Asiatic cholera by a distinguished pathologist, though it is humiliating to the profession: "Anatomical characters, insufficient; causes, mysterious; nature, hypothetical; symptoms, characteristic; diagnosis, easy; treatment, doubtful!"

Doct. Wright was unable to obtain any assistance while prosecuting his inquiries into the cause and cure of the cholera, from post mortem examinations. These are so contrary to a Mohammedan's sense of propriety, that it was inexpedient to attempt them. Nor is there much reason to suppose that his conclusions, even with their aid, would have been materially different.

The general aspect of the disease, as manifested here, answered to the description given by most writers on the subject. Without going into the question in a professional way, and avoiding technicalities, I will describe a single case, which you may regard as a specimen of all well marked instances of the disease, as it has prevailed in Oroomiah. The individual was a Mussulman, and a captain in the army; and it may add to your interest in this case, to know that he is the same person, who, in a state of intoxication, in the early years of this mission, made a violent attack, with a deadly weapon, upon Mr. Perkins, the latter having narrowly escaped with his life. He was a strong, athletic man, in the prime of life and in the vigor of health. It was the Sabbath, about midday, when he felt the hand of disease upon him. I was sent for immediately; but being absent at the time at our Seir retreat, to attend our English service, I did not know of his illness until my return to the city, just at night, when I hastened to his side.

He was lying before a low, open window, facing the court; and a large circle of anxious friends were sitting around him. He was in the second or collapsed stage, and almost in a state of desperation. As I set down by his side, and took his hand, he articulated with difficulty, "I shall die, Doctor; but help me if you can." His whole body (especially the extremities) was icy, cold and clammy to the touch. All applications to restore heat to the surface were in vain. The circulation of the blood seemed to have nearly ceased, and it remained stagnant in its channels. A vein was opened; but the blood, which was thick and of a black color, after trickling down the arm a few minutes, ceased to flow. The eyes had retreated deep into their sockets; the features, a few hours before full and ruddy, were now sunken and pallid; the voice scarcely rose above a whisper; his thirst was intense and never satisfied; cramps of the hands and feet, and of the muscles of the body, were violent and almost constant; his restlessness was excessive, and his breathing hurried and laborious; his stomach and bowels were greatly disturbed. In short the poor man appeared to be struggling in the hands of some mighty monster, who would not quit his hold upon him, while a spark of life remained.

The various remedies which were applied, seemed to produce no effect; and we were obliged to sit by, and feel our weakness in contending with a disease that appeared to mock all our efforts. Worn in body and mind, I left him for the night, not expecting that he would live to see the light of another day.

Still he did survive the night, and, at early dawn, a messenger was despatched after me.—Reaching his side, it was evident that he had but a short time to live. All the symptoms of the previous night were greatly exaggerated, making allowance, however, for such modifications as the spark of life, in dying out, would necessarily occasion. He repeated several times the Mussulman formula, acknowledging God to be one God, and Mohammed his prophet, and declared that he was ready and willing to die. The day before, he had in form repented of all his sins, and received the forgiveness of them according to the ideas of his people. He lingered a few hours, when the scene closed, and he passed into eternity.

While this may be regarded as a type of a majority of the fatal cases, there has been, nevertheless, great diversity in the aspect assumed by the disease, as well as in the rapidity with which it hastened to its termination. Some were hurried to the grave in two, three or four hours; while some others survived until a reaction took place, and fever supervened, by which they were carried off after a longer or shorter period. But painful as were the course and termination of the case above recited, we were often cheered, while attending upon others, in observing the efficiency of remedial measures, and in witnessing the recovery of patients. Frequently after the cessation of vomiting and purging which invariably attended the onset of the disease, the blood entered upon its course again, a genial warmth returned to the system, and the patient was soon restored to his usual health.

Out of the whole number of cases that occurred Doct. Wright supposes that about one-half proved fatal.

The Missionary Vanderkemp.

Moffatt, in his missionary labors in South Africa, draws the following striking portrait of the missionary Vanderkemp.

"Some time elapsed before the crafty monarch Gaika would give his consent that they should remain in his dominions; and when this was at length granted, and a suitable spot selected, he adds, in true gospel simplicity, "Brother Edmonds and I cut down long grass and rushes for thatching, and felled trees in the wood. I kneeled down on the grass, thanking the Lord Jesus that he had provided me a resting-place before the face of our enemies and Satan, praying that from under this roof the seed of the gospel might spread northward through all Africa.

"After Mr. E.'s departure, the doctor in his cheerless abode was instant in season and out of season, eagerly embracing every opportunity of recommending the gospel, and catching each little ray of light that beamed in his devious path. He was a man of exalted genius and learning.—He had mingled with courtiers. He had been an inmate of the universities of Leyden and Edinburgh. He had obtained plaudits for his remarkable progress in literature, in philosophy, divinity, physic, and the military art. He was not only a profound student in ancient languages, but in all the modern European tongues, even to that of the Highlanders of Scotland, and had distinguished himself in the armies of his earthly sovereign, in connexion with which he rose to be captain of horse and lieutenant of the dragoon guards. Yet this man constrained by the "love of Christ" could cheerfully lay aside all his honors, mingle with savages, and bear their sneers and contumely, condescend to serve the meanest of his troublesome guests—take the axe, the sickle, the spade, and the mattock—lie down on the place where dogs repose and spend nights, and his couch drenched with rain, the cold wind bringing his fragile house about his ears. Though annoyed by the nightly visits of hungry hyenas, sometimes destroying his sheep and travelling appurtenances, and even seizing the leg of beef at his tent door, though compelled to wander about in quest of lost cattle, and exposed to the perplexing and humbling caprice of those whose characters were stains on human nature—whisperings occasionally reached his ears that murderous plans were in progress for his destruction—he calmly proceeded with his benevolent efforts."

Ladies' Department.

The Scotchman's Advice to His Daughter.

ON LEAVING HOME FOR A BOARDING SCHOOL.

Now, daughter, ye hae just four things to learn in Edinburg:—ye hae to learn to manage your head, your hands, your feet, and your heart. Your head will require a little redding up, baith outside and inside. It's no the bobs and curls, the ribbons and the roseknots, the gildet kames, and the toppings o' weel-sleekit-up hair, that are to stand the test for life; and yet these are a' becoming in their places. But there is something else required. Ye main learn to think for yoursel, and act for yoursel, for you canna always have your mother and me to think and act for you. Ye maun learn to calculate and weigh, not only your own actions, but your motives of action, as well as the actions and apparent motives of those with whom you have to deal; and stick aye by that my child, of which you are sure never to be ashamed, either in this world, or in the one that's to come.

If ever ye be spared to be a wife, there will be mair depend on your head than your hands; but yet you are nae the waur o' being able to cook your family a neat dinner, and make yoursel a new gown at orra time, or a frock to a bit wee anc.

But now for the heart, daughter; that is what requires the maist care, and the maist watching, ower of all, and there's nought else that I am sae unqualified to gie advice in Keep it aye free o' malice, rancor and deceit; and as to the forming of ony improper connections, or youthful partialities, it is sae dangerous at your time o' life, that no advice nor guardianship can countervail. I mean therefore leave it entirely to your own discretion and good sense.

I might have mentioned the management of the tongue as another and a separate point of attention; but it is a mere machine, and acts only in subordination to the head and the heart; and if these are kept in proper order, the other winna rin far wrang. But dinna be ower the matter punctual about catching the snappy English pronunciations. It looks rather affected in a country girl to be always snapping at the English, and at the same time popping in an auld Scotch phrase that she learned in the nursery, for it is impossible to get quit o' them. But mind aye this, my child, that good sense is well-faured and becoming, in whatever dialect it be spoken; and an's mother tongue suits always the lips of either a bonny lass or an auld carl the best.—Ettrick Shepherd.

Direction for the Cultivation and Management of Flowers.

June.—Flowers are now in almost as much danger from excess of heat as they are in winter from the cold. The heat of the sun will soon destroy the Daphne odora. If the soil is drawn in the form of a cone around the stem, throw off the water to the edges of the pot, that the stem may be dry above the roots, otherwise mortification will be likely to take place. When the foliage of the Ixia, Oxalis, Lachenalia, &c., begins to decay, turn the pots on their sides; this will ripen the roots; and, when perfectly dry, clear them from the soil, and wrap them up in paper, label them, and put them away for planting in due season. Keep the plants in the open air, under an awning if possible, and, when there is no rain, give them a gentle sprinkling every evening, examine constantly for insects, and destroy them as often as they appear. Succulents of the Cacteœ tribe, such as the Cereus, Mamallaris, and Opantia, thrive best in a partial shade and in an airy situation. Plants of a straggling growth should be neatly tied to rods. Give them regular syringes or sprinklings from a rose water-pot.

July.—The only attention requisite for most plants now, is in giving water, protecting from the sun, and watching the insects. If there has been no rain during the day, give water every evening. All require plenty of water, except the Lemon, scented Geranium, and those kinds that are tuberose-rooted, as Ardens, Bicolor, Tristum, &c.—These should have moderate supplies. All plants should be turned round once in a while to prevent them from growing to one side. Camellias require careful watering with a rose water-pot. If the foliage of the Lilium, Loniflorum, or Japonicum, has decayed, do not water them while dormant, as they are easily injured by it. Look over the flowers every evening, and after dry nights, in the morning also. Look every week for insects, and, if any appear, have them destroyed immediately. After heavy rains be careful to examine the pots, and see that no water is left standing in them to injure the roots. When any is found turn the pot on its side.

Spoken Against.

What if people do speak against you? Let them feel that you are able to bear it. What is there gained by stopping to correct every word that is whispered to your discredit? Lies will die if let alone; but if you repeat them to this one and another, because your enemies had the impudence to make them, you but keep the fire burning, and the way open for a dozen slanders. Keep your course, and go straight forward, and trouble not your head about what is repeated, and feel all the better, and wear a less frightful face. Slander never killed a sterling character, and it never will; her coat will not sit upon him, without a pull here and a jerk there, and a twist below; and while this work is going on, the false words are forgotten by the multitude. Let us, you and I, reader, repeat what another has said in rhyme, and if we have been talked about or slandered, it will do us as much good as a fry at Diamond Cove:

"Not all they say or do, can make
My head, or tooth, or finger ache,
Nor mar my shape, nor sear my face,
Nor put one feature out of place;
Nor will ten thousand lies
Make one less virtuous, learned, or wise;
The most effectual way to baulk
Their malice is, to let them talk."

Cleanliness.—We like to look upon a clean and tidy person, young or old. And while water is plenty, no one has any excuse for black hands, a smutty face, and musty hair. Disguise yourself as you may, if you are unclean it will be discovered. You may use cologne, bear's grease, skunk's oil, or any thing else on your head or on your handkerchief, to hide filthiness, but every body knows for what purpose such articles are used. A clean and sweet person never need any thing about his or her body—it is pure enough without. How would a rose or pond lily appear overloaded with cologne, pomatum, or bear's grease? A perfectly clean person would appear just as ridiculous. We never pass by an individual, male or female, who slightly smells of grease, but we feel certain there is something used to destroy the effects of an impure skin.

Religious Intelligence.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Steubenville, O., June 7, 1847.

My Dear Br. Bassett: You love brief communications. So far as is practicable, you shall be gratified this time. My stay at home is so short, as to leave me but little time to write. My Southern tour, through Western Virginia, was accomplished in a little over nine weeks; during which time in a zig zag way, I travelled almost 1000 miles, and preached about fifty times—add to this, my labors in lovefeasts, sacraments and Quarterly Conferences, some visiting among the brethren, much conversation, and some letter writing, and you, I think, will admit, that I have not been idle. While at my work, my health held out pretty well for me, but now I am at home, and the excitement gone, I feel quite run down, have a bad cold, and some head ache.—Never mind that, the weary shall have rest in due time. In the tour just finished, I visited Wheeling, Tyler, Harrisville, Mill Creek, Buchanan, Braxton, Greenbrier, Huntersville, and the Valley Circuits. All these circuits with two exceptions, viz: Buchanan and Braxton, are border circuits, and in each and every one of them, the Methodist Protestant cause has a good standing, with the public generally—yes, and with our sister churches too. Three meeting houses were opened to us if we [illegible] at the table of our people; spoke in our lovefeasts, and [illegible] such as came from a distance. Well done Virginia! Thou hast maintained thy well known character for hospitality, in a truly christian style. Our ministers, and preachers, on the before mentioned circuits, so far as I could learn, have deported themselves well, in their several fields of labor, and in most of the circuits alluded to, there is a valuable increase of membership. If we had the men to spare from the rest of the work, and could support them, we should by all means, appoint 6 missionaries next year—say, can't we raise them halfpay? Each one's mission might be relied on for the other half—Who will help? Where are our men of wealth? Now is the time.

This great Southern tour, should never be taken by the President, in the spring—the roads are bad, and provisions often scarce. In view of the good of all concerned, I have arranged for the next President, whoever he may be, to visit those border circuits, in the fall; for if the man dies, the office will still live. Tyler Circuit 2d Sunday in Sept.—Harrisville 3d Sunday—Mill Creek 4th Sunday—Greenbrier 1st Sunday in October—Huntersville 2d Sunday. The balance of the appointments for the tour, can be published after Conference. I have announced the foregoing in view of Camp-meetings, and if the brethren agree to have them, arrangements should be made, and the cases reported to our Annual Conference, that the requisite ministerial help, may be there secured.

With but few exceptions, the circuits and stations in the Pittsburgh district, are in a good condition. Where it is otherwise, I think, generally speaking, our ministers are not to blame. They are all, so far as I know, faithful men, against whom I trust, there will be but few complaints at our next Conference. I hope they will come up to Conference, well paid, well clad, well fed, in good heart, for future service, in any place, where ever the providence of God, may open their way. O, for one dozen first rate young men, to enter the work, at our next Conference. O, Lord! thrust out more laborers into thy Vineyard. Why should not religion, and liberty, in union, have the very best advocates in the world?

I hope each preacher in charge will bring a good Conference collection. Come, Brethren, lay the destitute condition of our border labors, before the public, make a streng appeal to christian benevolence, get committees, of the good sisters to help you, in the towns and cities. Even avarice can't deny them; much can be done, if the trial is fairly made.

Once more I mention Brother Shinn's case.—Something I trust has already been done for him, if not, let it be done. Will not Muskingum and Ohio Conferences help us? Come, Cincinnati—come, Baltimore, help us. Pittsburgh and Allegheny will not be wanting. Brother Shinn is the property of the whole church. Shall he sit yonder at Philadelphia under a mental cloud, suffer want, and find in you, no sympathy? no relief! I trust not.

The kindness of both preachers, and people, have won my heart, I love them much. My toils have been hard, but christian kindness and the Divine blessing, have borne me up—here I am an old man, much cheered, happy in God, happy in my church relations, and willing to go on in any department of the work, so long as health, strength, and life will permit.

Yours truly, GEO. BROWN.

Brooklyn Circuit, May 24, 1847.

Br. Bassett: [illegible] communication find a place in the [illegible] your excellent paper, informing our [illegible] President, that when we commenced our [illegible], the prospect for revivals seemed to wear a gloomy aspect; but we commenced and have continued the work in the name of the Lord, until the entire circuit has caught the revival fire. Our first Quarterly meeting was held at Union Mills, on the 25th of October, continued three days, and resulted in great good. On the first evening of our meeting, after sermon, we invited the mourners forward to the altar of prayer. About nine persons designated themselves as seekers, earnestly enquiring what they must do to be saved. We continued earnestly pointing them to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world,—and the happy result was that about 25 united with the church, and in two weeks from this time we held a protracted meeting at Brother John Morrison's, in Upper Flatwoods. Here we had another glorious time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. At this meeting there were nineteen conversions and eleven accessions to the church, and at almost every protracted effort there has been more or less good done. At our second Quarterly meeting, we had a refreshing time, and it resulted in great good—eleven conversions and eight united with the church. The whole number that we have taken in this conference year, is about ninety-four. The membership in general are much revived and encouraged. May the Lord enlarge Zion's borders, till every family erects the altar of prayer and every heart may enjoy the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

ELI MARTIN.

Lockport, Pa., June 5, 1847.

Br. Bassett: Having some business with you, I would inform my friends, that after several months affliction, my health at present is improving, and through the mercy of God, I am again enabled to meet with my brethren in the sanctuary of the Lord, though not able to labor. The present prospect is that I shall be able to invite my fellow beings to Christ again, yet it is all with the Lord: and I will try to rest passive in his hands, knowing that he will do all things right. For the encouragement of our friends, I would say that this circuit is rising, and the cause of equal rights is spreading. Her borders are enlarged, and her stakes have been strengthened this year. We have a faithful laborer, though the affliction of his family has been great.* Our much esteemed sister Wood has been confined to her room for the last seven months, but is at present able to ride out a short distance. Brother Wood has been at his post on all occasions to administer the word of life. He is much beloved by this people, for his ardent labor of love. A number of souls have been enabled to set to their seal that God is love. Some twenty or thirty have been added to the church. May the Lord still revive his work, subdue oppression, and let the oppressed go free.

J. L. TURNER.

* That 'sick bed' has been blessed, we should judge by those excellent verses it has furnished us, and which will be found on our fourth page. Sister W. is daughter of Rev. A. Shinn.—[Ed.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Bucyrus Circuit, June 4, 1847.

Mr. Editor: We are all in peace and harmony. Our third Quarterly meeting has past, and was a good time—one addition. Brothers Jack and Bowman were in attendance, and labored to the acceptance of all. We have received since conference, 37 into Society.

A. S. ROBINSON.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Richwood, O., June 10, 1847.

Br. Bassett: I would briefly state, that we are still prospering in religious matters on Richwood circuit. Peace reigns in all our borders. Our third Quarterly meeting was held in Middletown. Having no church at that place, the German Reformed brethren, who were building one, kindly let us occupy theirs. Notwithstanding rain descended copiously, we had a large audience and a delightful meeting. We carried out the principle of open doors, to perfection—we had no door to our building. Thus, you see, a good meeting can be obtained without the assistance of doors or door keepers. Rev. C. S. Callihan, from Muskingum District, and Rev. T. Graham, labored with us very effectually. At the close of our meeting we were also favored with the labors of Rev. L Ensminger. We hope Brother C. will step over the "line" again. The result of our meeting was eleven accessions. At this place, six months ago, there was not a Methodist Protestant: now we have a fine, flourishing class of 29 members.

Our Presidential meeting was, also, a very pleasant one. The President, and Brother Howel, labored very faithfully. Several were united to the church.

Labor has so increased on the circuit, that we have had to employ an assistant for the remainder of the Conference year. Since I last "reported progress," we have received 26 members: during the year, 86. May the Lord accept our thanks for favors already bestowed, and prosper us more abundantly. JOHN B. PEAT.

Springfield, Ohio, June 11th, 1847.

Dear Br. Bassett: Our third Quarterly Meeting was held, according to appointment, at Harmony; at which time a new brick chapel was dedicated to Almighty God. The meeting was one of interest to the church; many rejoiced in God, their Savior, and all seemed to pray that the great Head of the Church might ever own and bless with His presence, the house which had been erected in honor of His great name. Br's. Young, Ross, Thornburg, and Smith, participated in the exercises of the pulpit. May the Lord reward them for their labors of love.

As ever, Yours, &c.,
O. P. STEPHENS.

Withamsville, Ohio, June 10th, 1847.

Br. Bassett: I desire to inform our President, Brother J. M. Young, through your valuable paper, that our third Quarterly Meeting for Cincinnati Circuit, commenced on the 5th of June, and closed on the 6th. Father McGuire, our Conference Missionary, was with us, and rendered good service. May the Lord reward him for his efficient labor. Brother Langdon, our Supernumerary Assistant, as usual, was at his post. One gave her name as a probationer, viz: Sister Fisher, daughter of our beloved Father, J. Ward, who, some four years since, fell asleep in Christ. How encouraging to pious parents; although their children may not become the happy recipients of Divine grace, while they live, yet, when they are no more seen nor heard on earth, (but safely landed in heaven,) their prayers and tears are still remembered by Him whose eye is over the righteous, and whose ear is ever open to their cries—their holy example felt, in the deep conviction, happy conversion, and eternal salvation of their children. Then, parents, cast your bread upon the waters; it shall be gathered in many days hence. The morning after our meeting closed, two gave me their certificates; making in all, fourteen, since Conference. May the blessing of heaven still rest upon us. O. WARRINGTON, Jr., Sup't.

INDIANA DISTRICT.

Tanner's Creek, Ia., June 11th, 1847.

Dear Br. Bassett: You will suffer me to say that we had quite a pleasant Quarterly Meeting at Mt. Pleasant, on the 29th and 30th ultimo. It was well attended, and serious attention paid to the preaching of the Gospel of Christ. Believers were revived and encouraged in the good work of serving God. Brother C. H. Williams cheered us with his presence and labors, for which I feel thankful. I was, and am, truly sorry for the loss sustained by our aged and much loved Brother Flood, and hope his friends in the Ohio Conference will respond to the appeal you have made, and would here wish to inform Br. Flood that he may expect a communication shortly from me, containing an expression, not in words only, of the sympathy of some of his Indiana friends in this circuit. Are there not more that will do the same?

Yours, as ever,
W. W. PAUL.

Power of the Press.

Napoleon once remarked that four hostile newspapers could do more than one hundred thousand bayonets. Experience doubtless convinced him of the truth of this assertion. Besides, it is a well known fact that newspapers do exert a powerful influence on the minds of multitudes. Then let professors of religion make efforts to extend the circulation of religious newspapers. For it is evident that they are performing a great and noble work in the land. But if Christians do not use the most indefatigable exertions in sustaining them, those of a licentious character will inevitably supplant the good influence which the religious press is now exerting upon mankind. Many people might render themselves useful by employing a part of their time in securing good subscribers for papers worthy of patronage. S. H. B.

The Banns.—On the third publication of the banns of marriage at a country church in England, a buxom young woman all in her Sunday trim, arose and said—"Please your honor, reverend sir, I forbid the banns." "Why?" asked the clergyman. "Because I want him myself," was the reply, "and I hold in my hand his written promise of marriage to me."

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO:

THURSDAY MORNING, JUNE 17, 1847.

"Reminiscences" &c.—Our readers will be by no means pleased to find that our friend Maj. Nye, has this week closed his series of numbers, on the settlement of Ohio. We know that they have been read with interest by many, and will be carefully preserved. We see that Mr. Cist has republished with his commendation, the first nine of the numbers in his "Advertiser" published at Cincinnati. Should Maj. Nye hereafter feel disposed to extend his "Reminiscences" we shall be gratified to publish additional numbers.

By the way, speaking of "Cist's Advertiser," we have now received the tenth number, and are satisfied in reference to the matter of our enquiry last week. "Cist's Weekly" though called Advertiser, contains no advertisments, but is filled with reading matter of general interest, and especially Historical, Antiquarian, and Statistical matters pertaining to the West. We intend frequently to draw from its columns for the entertainment of our readers.

Seventh Day Baptists.—This is an order of Christians whose destinctive peculiarity is indicated by the name they assume. We receive regularly in exchange the Sabbath Recorder, a good religious newspaper published in New York, as the organ of this denomination. In that paper we find recently an extended statement of the history and statistics of the Seventh Day Baptist Church, from which we make out an abstract for the information of our readers. The first organization of this denomination in America, took place at Newport Rhode Island, in 1671. It consisted of four Brethren and three sisters who held that the ten commandments are moral and immutable, and that it was an anti christian power that changed the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week. Its first pastor was William Hiscox, who served for more than 30 years till his death. It was not till 1708 that a church was formed, called the Hopkinton Church, R. I. It became very numerous and built three meeting houses in different neighborhoods. There are now 7 churches in Rhode Island, and one in Connecticut, all in good condition. In 1705, the first church was formed in New Jersey, at Piscataway. There are now four churches of this denomination in that state. The first organization in the state of New York took place in 1780. There are now over 30 Seventh Day Baptist Churches in that state. There are other churches of more recent origin scattered over the South and West: four in Pennsylvania, four in Virginia, six in Ohio, two in Wisconsin, one in Indiana, and one in Iowa. A tabular exhibit is given, numbering 64 churches, rising of 6000 communicants 53 ordained ministers, and 24 licentiates. The denomination was divided into four Associations, in 1835. A General Conference is held triannually. The Seventh Day Baptists seem to be zealous in behalf of the benevolent enterprises of the day. They are opposed to slavery and intemperance. They have a Missionary Association which has sent out two missionaries and their wives for the north of China. They have two Literary Institutions, both in the State of New York, and in a prosperous condition.

M. P. Church in Iowa.—Br. Thomas Snyder, an old friend of ours, one of the original settlers of Iowa City, but formerly of Cincinnati, has in a private letter given us some account of the difficulties with which our friends of the Methodist Protestant Church in that place have had to struggle, but gives us to understand that the prospect is now somewhat more encouraging. He says, "Br. Kellogg, on Tipton Circuit is doing well. He is well received, and the circuit is in a prosperous condition. Br. Miller, on Iowa City Circuit, is also doing well. He has had invitations, so to enlarge his circuit, as to take in some additional appointments where there is no preaching.

In reference to a report which had reached, us brother S. says: "As to my becoming discouraged, and entering into other church relations, I would say, I have never for a moment entertained such an idea. When I identified myself with the seceding branch at Cincinnati, in 1828 (with yourself) now the M. P. Church. I did so from principle, and though I have met with difficulties and sacrafices, I have never seen any reason why I should change my church relations; and until I have such reasons, I do not expect to make such change. My views are identified with those of the Methodist Protestant Church on one and all important subjects, so that should I change, I should not enjoy myself. I yet hope that we shall rise in this place. As to my late departed brother W. B. S. having died in the communion of another church, it is all a mistake. I never heard him intimate any thing about changing his church relations, and I know he never did."

It does us good to learn of the firmness of a little band amid heavy discouragements, and we hope that our friend S., and those with whom he is associated will yet see the desire of their hearts.

Santa Anna.—The Editor of the N. Y. Sun has received intelligence that Santa Anna reached the city of Mexico on the 19th of May—that the populace immediately assembled, and showered curses, and even stones upon him. He escaped with difficulty. Mr. Beach the Editor of the Sun has lately visited Mexico, and knowing the state of public feeling there, he had predicted that this would be the case. He says the statement will be found 'true to the letter.'

Land of Plenty.—A writer in the Clevelan Plaindealer says that in going to Canton the other day, he met in going four miles, 87 wheat teams most of them carrying 100 bushels. In one day 26,000 bushels were brought into Massillon and sold from waggons. He states also that half a million bushels of wheat were cleared at the collector's office within one month—receipts for toll within the time $15,000—half the amount of any former year! A great country this. But how ungrateful for the bounties of Divine Providence.

More about Tobacco.—A gentleman of this place who has happily succeeded in conquering the habit of using the weed, urges us to continue our crusade against the evil. And to help along, he has furnished us the subjoined selected verses. We have a number of special friends, payin; subscribers too, whom we highly respect, who are in the habit. We trust they will bear these little inflictions patiently; and if they should chance to get benefitted, why, it would be good enough for them. By the way, a friend of ours who is very happy in his emancipation from the practice of tobacco using, assures us that he has no doubt that he has in years past, expended five hundred dollars for the article for his own consumption! Five hundred dollars—Would not that same little sum, purchase a comfortable home for a small family for life? But, the verses.

SONG OF THE TOBACCO WORM.

With ear-locks soapy and long,
With whiskers frizzled and red,
A loafer sat with a quid in his mouth,
A spitting and muttering said—
Work—work—work,
These hands shall never pursue,
While I can obtain a long nine to smoke,
Or a plug of tobacco to chew.

And he spits—spits—spits,
When moon is breaking bright;
Spits—spits—spits,
When Sol has climbed his height;
Spits—spits—spits,
With day's ex iring gleam,
And supperless, falling asleep on a bench;
Keeps spitting away in his dream.

For in his dream he dreams,
It is by fate decreed,
That he is a great tobacco worm;
To extirpate the weed—
And so he works away
To make his conquests sure!
A free and enlightened citizen,
A snuffer, a smoker and chewer.

At market, church or mill,
In business or prayer—
Stage-coaches, cars and barber's shops,
Bar-rooms, and everywhere—
He spits—spits—spits,
Evening, noon, and morn;
And snuffs and puffs and blows his nose,
As a fisherman blows his horn.

Sweethearts and wives—look here!
Is this the man for you,
Whose nose is only fit to snuff,
His mouth to smoke and chew?
Spit—spit—spit—
O 'tis a nasty trick;
Enough to turn any lady fair,
Unless she be able to stomach a bear,
Or a loafer enveloped in whiskers and hair,
Abominably sick.

Ye dames who mean to wed,
Come listen to my lay—
Your charms from all tobacco worms,
Forever turn away,
But if you wear the yoke,
With resignation wear it—
Nor sulk, nor scold, nor get the blues;
But if he smokes, and snuffs and chews,
Till pigtail quids are over shoes,
Dear madam, grin and bear it.

Sears' Magazine for June which we have received, contains a pictorial Description of the State of Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont. The Magazine for 1847, will be a great book, containing a description of all the States of the Union with numerous illustrations, for only $1,50. As we are an agent for the work, wonder why our friends and neighbors do not call and subscribe: suppose they are waiting to be called upon, and we have not time. Meanwhile those of our agents who are entitled to the dignity of D. D. for their Distinguished Dilligence, may expect to receive a copy. We have been waiting only to see some others come up to the mark.

Large Boat.—Our correspondent G. S. W. of Freedom, Pa. (which is contiguous to Beavertown) informs us that "the Freedom Boat Building Company, with which he is associated, have now on the Stocks, the largest boat ever built on this end of the Ohio river." The dimensions he gives as follows: Length of keel, 225 feet; extreme length on deck, 250 feet; length of beam, 40 feet; depth of hold, 7 feet, 6 inches in the clear. Tonnage, 710 tons, carpenter's measurement, but she will burden 1000 tons, with ease. This boat is being built for Capt. James Wood of Pittsburgh, and is designed for a Mississippi river craft. When this vessel comes to be launched, our friend promises us some further account. The best is, that those Freedom men turn out temperance boats; and at their launchings, instead of christening with a bottle of brandy, they have a sermon preached.

Sunk.—The Zanesville Courier states that the steamer Mingo Chief, on her way from Pittsburgh to Zanesville, was sunk on Tuesday of last week, at Bakers's Island, by coming in contact with the America. No lives lost.

Remarkable Dispensation of Providence.

Br. Bassett: While in conversation with an estimable Brother, as we walked home from our Quarterly Meeting the other day, a turn to our talk occurred, from my recollecting a trifling circumstance of other years; which proves that Christians of this generation enjoy more undisturbed comfort than any previous. In 1811, or 12, there was a man of the name of ———, who was converted to God, in our neighborhood, under the preaching of the gospel; and so genuine was the work in his soul, he went straight home, forming the resolution that his house should be as that of Cornelius, one that feared the Lord.—He called his youthful wife, and infant daughter and son, to the altar of prayer. But—alas!! his wife was not only of vain and trifling spirit, but imbibed Infidel principles. Her course then was to oppose him in all manner of ways. When her little stock of reason failed to dissuade him from a religious life, she resorted to harsher measures, by arraying herself against his attendance on the means of grace, and especially family prayer; and did by her furious, boisterous clamor, break down the latter. But this good man died in a few months in the triumph of a Saviour's grace, and I know not how often I heard her boast of having conquered his fanatical course: but in the few months he lived in the enjoyment of religion, she by her own statement, dragged him from his devotions by the hair of his head a score of times, and other revolting acts of which she boasted, and declared she felt no compunction. But in a few months, her father was cut off from the earth, leaving no ground for good hope of hereafter. This dispensation of God's providence, also only made a trifling impression on her mind, or outward conduct. Soon after the death of her father, she removed from being our nearest neighbor, to a manufacturing village about one mile off. And in less than two years after this, reader, though it is 33 or 34 years ago, I shudder at the recital of her awful end. But, one evening about dark, she left her children in the room, and ran across the street to pick a few chips, and while in the act of picking them up, the skirt of her dress caught, and was wound around a running shaft, which was extended from the water-power building across the street under ground to a considerable large cotton factory, at that instant in its highest operation. The journal block in which a coupling was worked had that day been repaired by a carpenter and the hatch left off,—and thus was she instantly crushed to death. So instantaneous was the stroke which terminated her existence, I think, that now to the best of my remembrance, the only notice of the sad, and awful affair, was the stopping of the machinery by her mangled body, gorging the small chamber of the shaft. Thus were the two children thrown orphans upon the world. But the Lord had respect to them, doubtless, for their father's sake. O, may they choose their father's God for their God,—train their children to love and serve him, that their household may be such as their father desired, and share with him eternal blessedness.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.—Extension of the Road.

We learn that the Committee of the Board, to whom was referred the President's proposition for the immediate extension of the road to the line between Maryland and Virginia, convened this morning, and clothed the President with authority to take all the requisite measures for the prompt execution of the work; and also for the extension of the present track to the south side of the basin.

We think we may, therefore, congratulate our citizens that there is now a fair prospect that this great work will soon be once more on its way to a terminus on the Ohio river.

The work which it is now determined to undertake will carry the road about fifty-five miles further west than its present terminus at Cumberland. But before it is completed that far, or most likely, ere it has been commenced to be made, it is altogether probable that the difficulties, in the selection of a point on the Ohio river, will have been removed or obviated, and that the work of constructing the road will go on steadily to a completion. In this hope, the present determination of the Company will be received with great satisfaction by our citizens and all others interested in the great enterprise.—Balt. Sun.

Fatal Accident at York, Pa.—A young lad, Jacob Hays, was mortally wounded at York Pa., on Monday week, by the prong of a hay-fork being accidentally run into the socket of his eye, passing under the ball and piercing the brain.—He lingered until Wednesday morning and died. The manner of the accident was his rising from a recumbent position in a barn, whilst his brother was pushing a fork of hay through an opening just above him.

Sad Event.—A widow woman, named Elizabeth Johnson, aged 55, in a fit of insanity, jumped from an upper window in Philadelphia, on Tuesday, and was conveyed to the hospital in a dreadful condition. Both of her feet were crushed by the effect of the fall, and her thigh was also injured.

Emigrants—Ship Fever.—Nearly one thousand Irish emigrants arrived at Boston on Saturday and Sunday, in six different vessels. Five died on the passage, two in one vessel and three in another. Many of these emigrants are sick, and from all but one vessel some had to be landed at quarantine—thirty-one in one case from a single vessel. Two or three British schooners were stopped at quarantine, having on board emigrants which had been imported into Nova Scotia, and re-exported.

The Journal, of Monday, says:—"The house of industry is full to overflowing with foreign paupers, and forty workmen on Deer Island, cannot provide accommodations for the sick as fast as they arrive. There are now over a hundred on Deer Island. The directors of the house of industry are obliged to refuse permits for admission to that institution, except in cases of the greatest necesity."

Two hearty looking fellows, who were refused permits, by laying down at full length on the pavement endeavored to force charity in their behalf—but upon being started to the house of industry, they became very agile. There is a great deal of ship fever in the city of Boston at the present time—which, in close, ill-ventilated places, is very contagious. The disease appears to be on the increase.

Melancholy Occurrence.—We learn from the Watertown (N.Y.) Jeffersonian, that Mr. Ithamer B. Crawe, an old resident of that place, and distinguished for his zeal and attainments in the natural sciences, was drowned on Wednesday, in Perch Lake, while on a botanising excursion.

Mr. Adams at Home.—The venerable John Quincy Adams arrived at his residence in Quincy, Mass., on Saturday with his health considerably improved.

Dentistry.—Mr. Ames, the celebrated gun and sword manufacturer at Springfield, Mass., died last week from disease, brought on by swallowing the poisonous material with which his tooth was filled. The substance is said to be amalgam. The circumstance has begot a warm controversy among some of the dentists of N. Y., Mr. E. Parmly, quite celebrated in the profession, assailing the use of amalgam, in opposition to many others. He publishes a letter from an intimate friend of Mr. Ames, who accompanied that gentleman to London and Paris, at the former of which places the amalgam was inserted in three or four of Ames' teeth.

The Fertile West.

The Cincinnati Chronicle says that city furnishes means for the exportation of the produce raised on an area of not less than 40,000 square miles, including 21 counties in Indiana, 29 in Ohio, 26 in Kentucky, and 11 in Virginia. The cereal product alone of this region of country in the year 1846 were, of corn, 51,870,015 bushels; of wheat, 10,988,579 bushels; oats, 13,299,526 bushels; barley, 124,866 bushels; and it is estimated that this vast amount might be doubled, and this at only HALF the minimum of European cultivation.

From these premises the Chronicle draws several inferences. We give the following:

"That the corn and wheat raised around Cincinnati in 1846 was equal to one-eighth that of the entire United States; that, at the rate of European cultivation, it would be one-half of the whole raised in the United States!

"That the quantity actually raised in 1846 within these limits would feed six millions of people and their cattle and horses.

"That fifteen only of these eighty-seven counties (viz, Hamilton, Butler, Warren, Preble, Montgomery, Clermont, Brown, Green, Fayette, Madison, Clark, Champaign, Miami, and Logan,) raised more corn in 1846 than the entire amount exported to Europe in 1846 and 1847, with the famine of Ireland and half of Europe to make the demand.

"That the amount raised in the eighty-seven counties was fourfold the export of the United States in 1846 and 1847.

"We cite these extraordinary facts," says the Chronicle, "only as new evidences showing the fertility of Nature in this part of the world; the resources which Cincinnati has to maintain a great population, and the little probability that the European demand will amount to any very large proportion of the crops of the United States."

Spirit of the Age.—The receipts of benevolent societies, as reported during the Anniversary week in New York, were as follows: Board of Missions of the Presbyterian Church, $95 628; American and Foreign Bible Society, $31,730; Seamen's Friend Society, $17,515; American Anti-Slavery Society, $8,797; American and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, $2,635; New York Colonization Society, $5,813; Foreign Evangelical Society, $14,820; American Baptist Home Missionary Society, $30,794; Female Moral Reform Society, $6,693; American Tract Society, $160,130; American Bible Society, $210,336; Society for Relief of Jews, $6 690; American Temperance Union, $1,522;—American Protestant Society, $19,709.

Fatal Accident.—Firemen should be very careful in moving with their apparatus through the streets. A young man named Wm. Gunn, aged 17 years, was knocked down and run over by an engine in Philadelphia on Sunday evening, and so seriously injured that he died almost immediately.

Sickness on board the Emigrant Ships in the St. Lawrence.—The number in the hospitals, sheds, churches and tents, on the 2d instant, was under 1,100. The total number of deaths in the hospitals from the commencement of the season to Saturday previous, was 116; the majority are young children. The disease from which the greatest number of deaths take place is dysentery. There are about thirteen thousand persons in forty vessels at the station.

Where are the Volunteers?—Colonel Baker states, that of the Illinois Regiment he took to the field, not one half will return. The rest are dead. Of 2,400 Ohioans, who left Cincinnati in June, 1846, 900 are not in their Regiments—dead or with ruined constitutions!

Mr. Hardy, of the 3d Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, writes thus to the Piqua Register:

"Of the 2400 (3 Regiments) of Ohioans, who left Camp Washington about the 1st of July, there are about 1500 remaining in the service at the present time. About 900 have fallen a prey to the climate, been killed in battle, or have gone home, many with ruined constitutions—mere wrecks of what they were one short year since; and yet the Ohio Regiments have lost less men than the most of the regiments in the service, and I frequently hear it remarked, that the Ohioans are the most fortunate troops in the service. And yet, after all the sacrifice of life and treasure, the war seems to be as far from an end as it did when the first shot was fired on the bloody field of Palo Alto."

The number of dead, dying or lost will make about the proportion of 40 per cent. in one year! Out of 18 000 Volunteers of June and July, '46, 7,000 are dead or gone!!

Arrival of the English Nobility.—It will be seen, by reference to the list of passengers by the Hibernia, at Boston, that quite a host of lords, ladies, counts and countesses have arrived on a visit to the "universal Yankee Nation." We notice the names of Lord Durham, the Count and Countess of Montholon, Countess of Elgin, Lady E. Bruce, Lady Alice Lampton, Lady Bornet, Lady Elgin, with a number of female friends and a host of servants. If these distinguished visiters be sensible men and women, possessed of the nobility of nature as well as station, we doubt not they will be greatly pleased with our country and people. But, if they be merely the inventors of London fashions, who figure in the Queen's drawing rooms, we may look for their speedy return, heartily disgusted with Brother Jonathan and his great granary for the starving millions of Europe.—Balt. Sun.

The London Morning Chronicle of the 30th ult., publishes the following obituary notice:

"On the 29th, at the house of her son-in-law, the Earl of Ranfurly, No. 40, Berkley Square, the Hon. Sophia Margaret Stuart, grand-daughter of the celebrated William Penn, founder and proprietor of the State of Pennsylvania, and widow of the Hon. and Rev. W. Stuart, D. D., late Lord Primate of all Ireland, in the 83d year of her age."

Melancholy Occurrence.—A Miss Mary Watson was burned to death in Southwark, Philadelphia, on Saturday evening, by rashly attempting to fill a burning fluid lamp while it was burning—and her mother and brother severely, & grandmother slightly burned also in attempting to extinguish the flames. The fire was extinguished by a carpet being thrown about the form of the young lady: but not until her clothes were burned to a cinder. She lingered in great agony until about 2 o'clock, Sunday morning.

Ship Fever in Boston.—Mr. Chandler, the superintendent of the Boston Alms House is quite ill with the ship fever. There are twenty persons sick with the fever at South Boston, besides those in the Alms House. The disease is now more prevalent among the old inmates of the Alms House. Nineteen immigrants, who have been attacked with the fever since their arrival in that city, were collected together by the driver of the poor house cart, Wednesday morning, for the purpose of being sent to Deer Island.—N. York Sun.

Valuable Information.

Some years since our late respected fellow-citizen, Dr. J. Whitman, gave several of his friends, whose business took them to the south, during the sickly season, the following recipe in relation to preparing water, viz:

TO PREVENT THE ILL EFFECTS OF WATER—it should be allowed to stand for some time with a small lump of alum, which the palate will easily graduate, and which, I feel confident, will prevent diarrhœas or diseases of that kind to which the change of water might otherwise produce.

TO PREVENT COLDS—to which the changeable atmosphere, (warm days and chilly nights,) is calculated to produce, a small lump of alum should be placed in the mouth for a few moments on the first symptoms appearing, and a small quantity of the saliva swallowed. And also,

TO PREVENT RHEUMATISM—a small quanity of alum should be worn in a belt or bag fastened close to the body, and always thus worn.

I feel assured, Mr. Editor, that the use of the above cheap and useful remedy may be the means of avoiding much suffering, and probably human life.

I remain, respectfully yours, &c. W. D.

"THE BAPTIST MISSIONARY UNION.—This religious organization closed its annual session on Saturday last. The attendance from all sections of the country was large. Several were present from Asia and Europe. A converted Cherokee gave variety to the exercises conducted by the Missionaries. The business was conducted with great harmony, and the devotional exercises were marked with unusual fervor. Taken altogether, the convocation was one of extraordinary interest.

"During the afternoon of Saturday, a very large congregation of ladies, only were assembled in the Lecture room of the Ninth street Church, to listen to statements made by Mrs. Osgood and Mrs. Brown, two ladies of admirable qualification for service in the foreign field where they have toiled for many years. We learn that this exercise was a happy termination of the protracted series of Missionary meetings.

EXPORT OF BREADSTUFFS FOR THE LAST WEEK.—The following amounts of breadstuffs have been shipped from Baltimore for the different ports of Europe during the last week: 3,370 barrels flour; 220 barrels corn meal; 7,321 bush. wheat; 21,118 bushels corn.

PASSENGERS ARRIVED.—During the past week eight vessels have arrived in our harbor, bringing twelve hundred and sixty passengers, principally from the German dominions.—Balt. Sun.

TOBACCO PROSCRIBED.—The Baptists and Presbyterians are holding general Conventions in Cincinnati, and the citizens of that place appear to be unwilling to extend the hand of hospitality to the delegates, unless they give up their tobacco. Emancipation of Bohemian Slaves.

Here is a record worth recording—a princely act worthy of being written in letters of gold. The General Assembly of Wallachia, adopted on the 23d of March, a salutary and important law in virtue of which 14,000 families, and 60,000 Bohemian slaves belonging to the state, the clergy, and to all the public establishments, have been emancipated. This great act of philanthropy originated with the truly magnanimous prince Bibesco, the hospidor of Wallachia, and much honor is also due to the General Provincial Assembly by which the favorite measure of the Prince was adopted. After a lengthy debate in which the most noble sentiments were expressed in favor of the emancipation of the lower classes the head of the church, notwithstanding the opposition which the law encountered on the part of the clergy, addressed an eloquent discourse to the assembled grandees to induce them to follow his example. The only remains of slavery in Wallachia are about 48,000 individuals, who are private property. Prince Bibesco the day following these proceedings, gave his formal sanction to the project of law, and addressed a rescript to the result. He thanked also the head of the church and the members of the assembly, for having passed a law, which, as he said, the spirit of the age, and the progress of civilization had so long demanded. "This day" concluded the Prince, "will constitute an epoch in the annals of Wallachia."

Baron De Rothschild has devoted $5,000,000 to the purchase of grain and flour for the supply of Paris, to be sold at current prices. TIT FOR TET.—A dashing fellow, who seemed to think that he manifested his superiority by the disdain he exhibited of anything like courtesy to the humbler classes of society, was driving his gig one rainy day, when he came to a toll-bar, and asked what was to pay.

"Eight-pence, if you please," said the civil gatekeeper.

Instead of handing the money to him, our grandee carelessly threw a shilling on the wet and muddy ground.

"There, take your change out of that."

The keeper stooped for the silver, and placing the cooper exactly on the same spot, walked coolly into his cottage.

Touching and Beautiful Incident.

The following Incident was related by Mr. P. S. White in the course of an eloquent address which he delivered at a recent celebration of the daughters of Temperance in New York. We give it as reported by the "Spirit of the age." A widow lady in Richmond had two sons. The elder was a printer. Instead of attending to the wants of his aged mother and supporting her with filial affection, he indulged his base propensity to drink. In these habits of sensualism and ibleness he wandered from town to town, until he found himself among the Winnebagoes, away off West, in the then Territory of Wisconsin. How he came thither he knew not. But now he became sober of necessity. During his sober life he got engaged in the fur trade, and bartered his furs for land in the vicinity of where Milwaukie now stands; land at that time which was nearly worthless. Every body knows how rapidly property increased in value at Milwaukie.—This man soon made a fortune. With prosperity his affections returned. He longed to see his mother again. He started for home. When he arrived his mother was not there.—Mother and brother both gone, and no one could tell whither. With a sad and desolate heart he looked about him, the world lay before him in beauty, but those whom he loved were gone—he was alone. With an aching heart he retraced his steps Westward. At Wheeling on the Ohio, he fell in with some acquaintances, who induced him to became a Son of Temperance. He was pleased with the Order, and immediately took a deep interest in the affairs. Pretty soon after this he made up his mind to settle in Cincinnati I paid an official visit to that place, and on the same evening that I attended at one of the Divisions this young man applied for admission. He gave the traveling pass word, and was formally introduced. Were I to live a thousand years, never shall I forget that scene. No sooner was his name announced as he stept into the room than in an instant a tall and handsomely formed young men, with light hair, and a full and beautiful blue eye, bounded across the floor, and clasping the stranger in his arms, exclaimed "My brother! oh! my long lost brother!—The scene cannot be described. Tears choked the utterance of both. When at length the elder could find words, his first exclamation was—tell me is my mother yet alive? Yes! said the younger. 'And where is she—oh! where is my forsaken and neglected mother!' She is here, and she is well. God has enabled me to support her in comfort, and smooth her weary journey towards the grave. Now her last hours will be enlightened with joy and that her long lost one—her prodigal has returned.—Columbian Fountain.

A reverend clergyman from Ohio, lately preaching in a neighboring city, observed two young ladies talking together. Stopping suddenly in his discourse, and looking seriously at them, he said: "I observed two young ladies earnestly engaged in conversation; and as it is not a mark of politeness for more than one to speak at a time in church, I will remain silent, to give them an opportunity to finish their discourse, when I will resume mine." The worthy minister, after a brief silence, resumed his subject.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—Yesterday morning, about 6 o'clock, a gentleman named William Flemming, about 85 years of age, was accidentally killed near his residence, corner of Canton avenue and Ann street, by being run over by a locomotive and tender on the railroad. The old gentleman we learn had left his house for the purpose of going to a pump in the vicinity. He stepped on the track, and, being hard of hearing, did not observe the engine as it was coming. Those on the engine reversed the action, but not in time, and it struck him, knocking him down, and nearly cutting off his left arm close to the body. The engine stopped and backed, and passed immediately across his body, killing him instantly. Coroner Spencer held an inquest on the body, and the jury rendered a verdict of accidental death. It was stated that the engine was not going at more than the rate of three miles an hour, and the usual precautions to prevent accidents were taken. We understand that the authorities of the railroad company, upon being informed of the accident, took measures for the payment of all expenses attendant upon the funeral, &c., of the deceased.—*Balt. Sermon-judging—a Pleasant Anecdote.

In many of our congregations may be found a class of hearers who plainly consider themselves as called to be "not doers of the law but judges." They are "wise men and endowed with knowledge," and not to be benefitted by ordinary plain preaching. Some of them have a tact of judging before they hear and absenting themselves from God's house, unless the pulpit is to be occupied by one who has acquired celebrity as a preacher. But their judgment does not always endure the test of time. The man whose preaching they despise as "foolishness," sometimes occupies a high place in in the esteem and veneration of posterity. This the following anecdote will illustrate.

Most professional judges of sermons have, it is to be presumed, read, or at least heard of the sermons of the now celebrated Dr. Isaac Barrow, admired for the exhaustless fertility of invention, the conclusive reasoning, and the energetic diction by which they are characterized. Dr. Wilkins, while rector of St. Lawrence-Jewry, once once asked Dr. Barrow to preach for him on a Sunday when he felt indisposed. Dr. Barrow was somewhat noted for slovenliness in dress. In Dr. Wilkins' congregation was a pretty large self-constituted board of "sermon approvers," who, it would seem, set the fashion for the whole congregation. The Doctor mounted the pulpit in his ordinary craftsman-looking guise, with a pale, meagre countenance, his collar unbuttoned, and his long silken curls dangling in uncombed confusion. "Immediately," says his biographer, "all the congregation was in an uproar, as if the church were falling, and they scampering to save their lives, each shifting himself with great precipitation." All but a handfull left the house in confusion. But the Doctor, seeming to take no notice of this disturbance, proceeds, names his text, and preaches his sermon "to two or three gathered, or rather left together." Of this number the celebrated Richard Baxter happened to be one.

Afterwards the above mentioned board of sermon-approvers came to remonstrate with Dr. Wilkins for allowing an "ignorant, scandalous fellow" to occupy his pulpit. When they had finished their representations, the Rector told them that they had mistaken for once—as the person whom they they thus despised was a pious man, a learned scholar, and an excellent preacher.—(Dr Barrow occupied successively two mathematical professorships and a professorship of the Greek language in the University of Cambridge, and was the tutor and colleague of Sir Isaac Newton.) For the confirmation of what he said, he appealed to Mr. Baxter, who happened to be with him, and whom they all allowed to be a competent judge. Mr. Baxter replied, "Dr. Barrow preached so well, that I could willingly have been his auditor all day long." At this the board of sermon-approvers were not a little confused, and had no better apology to offer than the bad one, that they had not waited to hear the sermon. By way of reparation, they begged that Dr. Wilkins would prevail on his friend to try them once more, when they promised to bring all their families, and remain to the end. But Dr. Barrow had got enough of St. Lawrence-Jewry.

The above anecdote suggests various lessons, of practical instruction. Of these we will only hint at the following.

1. The fastidiousness of hearers is generally in the inverse ratio of their piety. Richard Baxter could willingly have been the Doctor's auditor all day long, but the board of sermon-approvers could not even stay to hear the text named.

2. It is well for men to express no opinion about a matter of which they know nothing except from hearsay. In the language of inspiration this maxim runs thus—"He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him."—O. Observer.

The Silent Power of Truth.

A Swede, after receiving a good education, became a wanderer in the world. At one time he was a soldier, at another he was a sailor, and at length, having, while intoxicated, received an injury, he became a patient in a hospital. A tract visitor entered the ward in which he lay, and observing that he was asleep, quietly laid a tract upon his bed, and went away. That man was an avowed infidel. When he awoke he saw the tract and read it. It related to the evidences of Christianity, and the Lord made it the means of removing his unbelief. He became a new creature; and when he left the hospital, he experienced the power of vital Christianity, and felt an earnest desire to do good. Observing that there were many seamen in the port who were his countrymen, and that they knew but little of the English language, he collected small companies of them together, and read, and sung, and prayed with them. Afterward he obtained the use of a floating bethel on Sunday mornings, and sometimes added exhortation to other exercises. But he longed to hear the gospel preached there by some minister from his native land; for this he prayed, and, as he had opportunity, made known his wishes to his fellow Christians, and now there is a church in the ship, with a Swedish clergyman for its pastor.

Here the reading of a single tract was blessed. Such has often been the case, and this even when the person to whom it was given had cast it aside unread. A man having received a tract, used it in filling up the space between the inner and outer sole of the shoe. Some time afterward another man sat down, on a Sunday morning to put a new sole to that shoe, but when he had cut away the old leather he saw the tract, and his attention was instantly arrested by its title, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." It was an arrow from the quiver of the Almighty. The work was immediately laid aside, and the man hastened to the house of God; his soul was troubled, nor could he find rest until he found it at the cross of Christ.

The Monkey as a Rider.

A late friend and neighbor of mine in the country kept a monkey, who took to riding his hogs, especially one of them, which he commonly singled out as fittest for his use, and leaping upon his back, his face toward the tail, he whipped it unmercifully and drove it about until it could run no longer.—The hogs lived under such continual terror of him that when the monkey first came abroad in the morning they use to set up a great cry at the sight of him.

A well known nobleman once had a wild horse which nobody could ride. 'I know not what your lordship can do with him,' said one, 'but set the monkey on his back.' So they put a pad to the horse and set the monkey upon it with a switch in his hand, which he used upon the horse and set him into a furious kicking and galloping, but Pug kept his seat and exercised his switch. The horse lay down on the ground, but when he threw himself on one side the monkey was on the other. He ran into a wood to brush him, off but if a tree or a bush occurred on one side, the monkey skipped to the other side, till at last the horse was so fatigued and broken spirited that he ran home to the stable for protection. When the monkey was removed a boy mounted him who managed the horse with ease.

Close of Baxter's Life.

The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and bu for the resistance of the other judges, Jefferies would have added whipping through the city, to the sentence of imprisonment. It was to continue until the prisoner should have paid five hundred marks. Baxter was at that time in his 70th year. A childless widower, groaning under the agonies of bodily pain, and reduced by former persecutions to sell all he possessed; he entered the king's Bench prison in utter poverty, and remained there for nearly two years, hopeless of any other abode on earth. But the hope of a mansion of eternal peace and love raised him beyond the reach of human tyranny. He possessed his soul in patience. Wise and good men resorted to his prison, and brought back greetings to his distant friends, and maxims of piety and prudence. Happy in the review of a well spent life, and still happier in the prospect of its early close, his spirit enjoyed a calm for which its enemies might have well exchanged their mines and their thrones. His pen, the faithful companion of his troubles, as of his joys, still plied the Herculean task which habit rendered not merely easy, but delightful to him; and what mattered the gloomy walls or the obscene riot of a jail, while he was free to wander from early dawn to nightfall over the sublime heights of devotion, or through the intermaze, but to him not pathless wilderness of psychology? There pain and mortal sickness were unheeded, and his long-lost wife forgotten, or remembered only that he might rejoice in their approaching reunion. The altered policy of the court restored him for a while to the questionable advantage of bodily freedom. "At this time," says the younger Calamy, "he talked about another world like one that had been there, and was come as an express from thence to make a report concerning it." But age, sickness, and persecution had done their work. His material frame gave way to the pressure of disease, though, in the language of one of his last associates, "his soul abode rational, strong in faith and hope." That his dying hours were agitated with the doubt which had clouded his earlier days, had been often but erroneously asserted.—With manly truth, he rejected, as affectation, the wish for death to which some pretend. He assumed no stoical indifference to pain and indulged in no unhallowed fondiarity on those awful subjects which occupy the thoughts of him whose eye is closing on sublunary things, and is directed to an instant eternity. Profound lowliness with a settled reliance on the Divine Mercy, repeating at frequent intervals the prayer of the Redeemer, on whom his hopes rested, and breathing out benedictions on those who encircled his dying bed, he passed away from a life of almost unequalled toil and suffering, to a new condition of existence, where he doubted not to enjoy that perfect conformity of the human to the Divine will, to which during his three score years and ten, it had been his ceaseless labor to attain.—Stephen.

Stingy Christians.

The Christian Advocate makes the following very sensible remarks in reference to a class of Christians very frequently met with:

"We confess, however, that we have often questioned the Christian character of some loved professors whom we have known on account of their stingy contributions to the support of the Gospel and the relief of the poor. We have known some who would visit the sick poor, and pray with them as long and as loud as any body, but you could no more get a dollar from them for the relief of the sufferers than you could one of their teeth; and it was evident that if they could sell their prayers for a dollar apiece, they would not have given one away. The minister and his family might have starved if their brethren, less able to give, had not felt their Christian obligations differently.—Such people have always by them that 'neat little pocket edition of selfishness,' as Watson calls it. Charity begins at home; and, verily, their charity begins. They add annually to their gains, and their love of gain feeds and grows on the accumulation, until it hardens the heart and sears the conscience against all the claims which the Gospel has upon them and all the calls of mercy and benevolence in favor of suffering humanity. But the strangest thing of all this is that such people really persuade themselves they are pious Christians, because they can, now and then, work themselves, till at length they hear, 'Thou fool, this night shall thy soul be required of thee; now whose shall these things be which thou hast provided?'"

A man in New York lately turned his son out of doors because he would not pay him house rent. A striking instance, says the Philadelphia Spirit, of pay-rental affection.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
OHIO SCHOOL JOURNAL—VOL. 2, 1847.

The second volume will be published monthly, in Columbus, each number containing sixteen pages octavo.

The Journal will be devoted entirely to the promotion of education—physical, intellectual, social and moral—and especially to the improvement of Common Schools—the better education of teachers—the elevation of the employment of teaching to the rank it should hold in the community—the diffusion of intelligence relating, to the best modes of teaching, to the location and construction of school houses, and to the progress of education in this State and in other States and countries; it will contain the Annual Report of the State Superintendent of Common Schools, and the School Laws of general interest which may be enacted during the present session of the Legislature.

Post Masters, School Officers, Teachers, and the friends of education in general, are respectfully invited to aid in giving it a wide circulation.

Editors who give this prospectus one insertion and forward a copy marked will receive the Journal for the year.

TERMS—Single copies, 50 cents; seven copies, $3,00; twelve copies $5,00; twenty five copies, $10,00; payments to be made invariably in advance. Orders for the Journal may be directed "Ohio School Journal, Columbus, O.," or, (until the first of March next,) to A. D. Lee, Kirkland, Lake Co., O.

The Sinner's happy Return to Christ.

A DIALOGUE ON MATTHEW IX. 9,—"Follow me."

[Written on a sick bed.]

CHRIST.

Jesus in mercy saith to thee,
Follow me—follow me;
From sin and death I'll set you free,
Follow me—&c.
Come bow a suppliant at my feet,
And I will all your foes defeat,
My praise will learn you to repeat,
Follow me—follow me

SINNER.

I pray thee, Lord, have me excused
From going now—from going now;
My sinful course I'd rather choose
For a while—for a while
I am but young, and want to see
What happiness earth has for me,
And then, perhaps, I'll follow Thee,
Bye and bye—bye and bye

CHRIST.

The world has no substantial joy—
Follow me—follow me;
The fear of death cannot destroy,—
Follow me—&c.
You are but young, I know 'tis true,
But many die as young as you;
Your life is like the morning dew,
Follow me,—follow me

SINNER.

But must I part with all I have,
To follow Thee?—to follow Thee?
Before Thou wilt my soul receive,
To follow Thee?—&c.
My old companions all will say
I've chosen a very foolish way,
To read God's Word, to watch and pray,—
Can I go?—can I go?

CHRIST.

Have I not done great things for thee?
Follow me,—follow me.
And canst thou not do this for me?
Follow me,—follow me.
I left my Father's gracious Throne
To save your soul; from Heaven came down,
That you might wear a glorious crown
In the skies,—in the skies.

SINNER.

Oh, yes, my Savior, I must own
I am vile,—I am vile.
Thou hast great love to sinners shown;
We are vile,—we are vile.
Oh, take me to thine arms I pray,
And wash my guilty stains away,
And guide me in the narrow way,
I will go,—I will go.

CHRIST.

You're blest already, sinner dear,
Come to me,—come to me;
I hear your penitential prayer—
Come to me,—&c.
My joys you shall by faith receive,
If now you on my name believe,
Your sins I freely will forgive,—
Come to me,—come to me.

SINNER.

A joyful hour, a blest estate,
I enjoy,—I enjoy;
Since I have knocked at mercy's gate,—
I enjoy,—I enjoy.
I'm very happy in my soul,
Since Jesus Christ has made me whole;
The half has never yet been told,—
Come and see,—come and see.

Importance of Sabbath Schools.

BR. BASSETT: The present is an age of improvement and reform, and your sheet has borne an honorable part in advocating the many benevolent enterprises of the day. There is one subject, however, to which your numerous correspondents have not called public attention, as frequently perhaps as they should. I allude to Sabbath Schools. If we would build up the cause of christianity, and arrest the progress of vice, we must begin the important work of mental and moral instruction in the juvenile mind, and thus lay a foundation for moral and religious improvement. The youthful mind must be instructed—the light of Truth imparted—and proper sentiments formed while the heart is yet susceptible of favorable impressions, or we have little to hope for in the rising generation. That much has been done, and that much is being done in the Sabbath School enterprise, is a fact over which every pious heart should rejoice—but that much more may be done is equally true. In many of our villages and neighborhoods, where there might be, and should be, flourishing Sabbath Schools,—what do we see? Alas! we see the children and youth, desecrating the holy day, which God has appointed for his worship, and parents often totally indifferent to these evils. But what can we do? says one, we have our appointments due for the Sabbath and we have no time for this work. Then use a little more exertion—be a little more active, or make your labors subservient to this end by preaching. Your sermons in behalf of Sabbath Schools will not be thrown away, but will be advantageous to all. They will teach parents their duty, and excite them to action in a cause which will be beneficial to both parents and children. Let no minister of the church, especially the superintendent of a circuit, feel satisfied until he has made an effort to raise a Sabbath School in every place where he has the least hope of success. I did not sit down to write a dissertation on this subject, but to make a few remarks for the information of some of our brethren in the Indiana District. I am aware that some of our brethren are somewhat at a loss in relation to obtaining Libraries for Sabbath Schools, and this has been an impediment to their success.—Having been, to some exient, engaged in this matter, I would take the liberty to recommend to the brethren who do not choose to obtain books or libraries through some other source, that they apply to Brother B. W. Chidlaw, Cleves, Hamilton county, Ohio. Brother C. is a missionary for the American Sunday School Union, and as I am personally acquainted with him, I feel assured that he will take great pleasure in giving any information which may be called for, and that funds, orders, &c., directed to him will meet with all necessary attention. Come, brethren, let us go to work in this good cause, and we will soon find that our work is not in vain in the Lord. C. H. WILLIAMS.

Reflections from my Cottage in the Grove.

BY THE WIFE OF AN ITINERANT MINISTER.

When I consider the goodness and condescension of God to the children of men, I am lost in wonder and astonishment, and am ready to exclaim, Lord what is man that thou art mindful of him? Jesus was rich in Glory, yet for our sakes he became poor that we might be made rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom. O, let us who profess Christ make the enquiry now, Are we rich in faith and come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty? The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down the strong holds of the enemies of the cross. Our privilege is a great one; then let us not live any longer beneath it, but come up higher, and claim it. We are not our own, we are bought with a price; then let us glory in nothing but the cross. The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof; then let us be careful for nothing, but in all things by prayer and supplication making our requests known unto God, and the peace of God that passeth all understanding shall keep our hearts and minds through Christ Jesus. Truly in his presence there is fullness of joy, and at his right hand there are pleasures forever more. Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart to conceive what he hath laid up for them that love him with a perfect heart, and serve him with a willing mind. And glory be to God, the Comforter has come, and will reveal these things to all those that feel its influence and live up to their privilege. It is by faith, mighty faith, that we are enabled to feel the baptismal fire burning in our hearts, bringing all things to our remembrance.—We are a peculiarly favored people; are we zealous of good works, or are we resting in the form? Let us fear lest we be numbered with the foolish virgins.

Biographical.

Written for the Western Recorder.

SISTER L. LYONS,

Consort of Br. John Lyons, departed this life, May 9th, 1847, after a long and severe illness.—She was born, October 25, 1804, in the State of Pennsylvania. She in early life embraced Jesus, and became a member of the Lutheran Church, of which she continued a lively member, until the year Br. Burnet travelled this (Bucyrus) circuit, when she became identified with the M. P. Church. She lived the life and died the death of the righteous. Sister Lyons was a pious Christian. She loved her God, and only feared to displease Him who loved her. The writer of this communication often conversed with her on the subject of her departure. Sometimes her soul would seem to catch the fire of love, and she would, by faith, soar above all terrestrial things, and drink of the streams of life which flow from under the throne of God. At other times, clouds seemed to darken the horizon of her mind, and for a time the conflicts would be sharp, but the nearer she approached the gulf stream of death, the more calm and serene her sky became. The thunders ceased to roll, a heavenly calm ensued. The sting of death was drawn, and Jesus appeared to her soul, as though with arms expanded, and saying, daughter, it is enough, come up higher. And O, what an interesting scene, to hear a flood of praise poured from that dying saint.—Glory to God, &c. Why don't you pray and praise my God? Yes, whilst I write this to be published in the Recorder, sister Lyons is doubtless bearing a palm of victory, and wearing a crown of glory in the upper sanctuary, and crying with the redeemed, "Worthy is the Lamb to receive honor and power and might and glory and dominion, for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us by thy blood." Amen. A. S. ROBINSON.

Bucyrus, O., June 1, 1847.

Shame Killed Him.

Some years since, a certain man, in one of our Atlantic cities, was charged with a very base act—was charged with opening a letter which had been put into the post office, and divulging some family secrets which that letter contained. He denied the charge. A committee was appointed to investigate the charge, and make a report. I was present when the report was made. In the presence of some one or two hundred citizens, the chairman of the committee came forward and said—"We have investigated the charge alleged against the gentleman, and find it to be true."—I saw the man the moment his character was thus blasted forever. After one frantic effort with a pistol to take the life of the person who had thus exposed him, he dropped his head; he could not bear to look upon man or woman any more; and, returning to his lodgings, he laid himself down upon his bed, and died of a broken heart. Shame killed him. And now, if the divulging of one base act in such an assembly on earth occasioned him such overwhelming, heart-breaking shame, O! what intolerable shame must come upon the sinner when every base act, when every impure thought, when every unlawful deed, shall be revealed, as we have said, before God, and angels, and men! Methinks, in anguish, he will exclaim, "O that I had never had a being!" or, "O that I could now hide me beneath the mountain's base or the ocean's wave!" "Shame shall be the promotion of fools!"

WESTERN MAGNETIC TELEGRAPH LINE.—Mr. O'Reily, the active contractor of the Western Telegraph line, passed through this city yesterday, we learn from him that active operations towards the completion of the entire line will now be commenced. The wire, posts and other fixtures are all ready for being put up, and it is confidently expected that it will be in full operation to Cincinnati and Louisville in 60 days. The line to Cleveland, will also be immediately commenced, and finished during the month of July.—Pitts. Gazette.

Miscellaneous.

"Resist not Evil."

Most people, and, I am sorry to say it, a great many who call themselves Christians, say this course is not consistent with personal safety.—But how do such facts as the following put to the blush the timidity and sinful fear of these professed disciples of the Prince of Peace!

When Capt. Back went to the poplar regions in search of Gen. Ross, he fell in with a band of Esquimaux, who had never before seen a white man. The chief raised his spear to hurl it at the stranger's head; but when Capt. Back approached calmly and unarmed, the spear dropped, and the rude savage gladly welcomed the brother man who had trusted in him. Had Capt. Back adopted the usual maxim that it is necessary to carry arms in such emergencies, he would probably have occasioned his own death, and that of his companions.

Raymond, in his Travels, says—"The assassin has been my guide in the defiles of Italy, the smuggler of the Pyrenees has received me with a welcome in his secret paths. Armed, I should have been the enemy of both; unarmed, they have alike respected me. In such unexpectation, I have long since laid aside all menacing apparatus whatever. Arms may indeed be employed against wild beasts; but men should never forget that they are no defence against the traitor. They may irritate the wicked and intimidate the simple. The man of peace has a much more sacred defence—his character."

SLAVERY.

TESTIMONY OF DISTINGUISHED MEN.

Slavery is the foulest stain that ever dishonored the annals of a free and enlightened people.—Wilberforce.

We ought not to lose a single hour, in doing away the multiplied wrongs of the slaves, by their actual admission to that liberty to which the God of nature has entitled them.—Ib.

Slavery is contrary to reason, nature, justice, the principles of law and government; the whole doctrine, in short, of natural religion and the revealed voice of God.—Clarkson.

Slavery is a state so improper, so degrading, so ruinous to the feelings and capacities of human nature, that it ought not to be suffered to exist.—Burke.

Personal freedom is the right of every human being. He who deprived a fellow creature of this right was absolutely criminal for so depriving him, and he that withholds is no less criminal in withholding.—Fox.

No man is by nature the property of another. The rights of nature must be some way forfeited before they can be justly taken away.—Johnston.

Slavery is a complication of every species of iniquity—the greatest practical evil that ever afflicted the human race,—a system of enormities which bids defiance to every regulation which ingenuity can devise, or power effect, but a total extinction.—William Pitt.

There is a law above all the enactments of human codes. It is written by the finger of God upon the heart of man; and by that law unchangeable and eternal—while men despise fraud and loath rapine—they shall reject with indignation the wild and guilty fantasy that man can hold property in man.—Brougham.

When I am indulging in my views of American prospects, and American liberty, it is mortifying to be reminded that a large portion of the people in that very country are slaves. Such a state of things cannot always exist. It is a dark spot on the face of the nation.—Lafayette.

I can only say, there is not a man living, who wishes more sincerely than I do, to have a plan adopted for the abolition of slavery. There is but one proper and effectual mode by which it can be accomplished, and that is by legislative authority, and this, as far as my suffrage will go, shall never be wanting.—Washington to R. Morris.

The benevolence of your heart, my dear Marquis, is so conspicuous on all occasions that I never wonder at any fresh proofs of it. But your late purchase of an estate in the Colony of Cay—e, with a view of emancipating the slaves on it, is a generous and noble proof of your humanity. Would to God a like spirit might diffuse itself generally among the people of this country.—Washington to Lafayette.

In his will Washington emancipated all his slaves.

I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just, and his justice cannot sleep forever.—Thos. Jefferson.

The whole commerce, between master and slave, is a perpetual exercise of the most boisterous passions, the most unremitting despotism, on one part, and degrading submission on the other. The slave can do nothing from virtuous motives, and the master becomes haughty, passionate, voluptuous, and cruel.—Ib.

Tax our lands, vilify our country, carry the sword of extermination through our defenceless villages, but spare us, I implore you, the curse of slavery, that bitterest drop from the Chalice of the destroying Angel.—Falkner of Virginia.

Let us throw off the mask, it is a cob-web one at best, and the world will see through it. It will not do thus to talk like philosophers and act like unrelenting tyrants, to be perpetually sermonizing with liberty for our text and actual oppression for our commentary.—W. Pinkney of Maryland.

I envy neither the head nor the heart of the man who can defend (slavery) from principle.—John Randolph.

Slavery is the infringement of all laws. A law having a tendency to preserve slavery would be the grossest sacrilege.—Bolivar.

To steal a man or rob him of his liberty, is a greater sin than to rob him of his property; and to hold a man in a state of slavery who has a right to his liberty is to be every day guilty of robbing him or of man-stealing.—Jonathan Edwards.

Despotism ought not to be either practised or submitted to.—Bishop Watson.

To steal a man is the highest kind of theft.—Grotius.

Man-stealing is placed by the Apostle in the scale of crime next after Parricide & Homicide.—Bishop Horsely.

If the pulpit be silent, whenever or wherever there may be a sinner bloody with this guilt, with the hearing of its voice, the pulpit is false to its trust.—Daniel Webster on Slave Trade.

Oh, whatever it costs you, put a stop to its cry before it be too late. Instantly, at any price, were it the half of your goods, deliver thyself from blood-guiltiness. Thy hands, thy bed, thy furniture, thy house and thy lands are stained with blood.—Wesley.

Men-stealers are the worst of all thieves, compared with whom, high-way robbers and housebreakers are innocent; and men-buyers are exactly on a level with men-stealers.—Ib.

Shall we never learn to be just to our fellow creatures? Shall we blindly pursue the imaginary advantages of the moment, and neglect the still but solemn voice of God, till—

Vengeance, in the lurid air,
Lifts her red arm, exposed and bare?
Prof. Barton.

Bondage is winter, darkness, death, despair,—
Freedom the sea, the sun, the mountain air.
Montgomery.

Slavery must be admitted to be a punishment of the highest order, and according to every just rule for the apportionment of punishment to crimes, it would seem that it ought to be applied to crimes of the highest order.—Gov. Giles of Va.

With what face can a slaveholding Judge, fed and clothed and charioted in splendor, by the forced action of bought and sold muscles, pronounce sentence of death upon the kidnapper who has stolen a single African from his home? Can sin be multiplied into righteousness.—E. Wright, Jun.

Of all slave-holders under heaven those of the United States appear to be most reprehensible, for man is never so truly odious as when he inflicts upon others that which he himself abominates.—Rushton.

In heathen countries slavery was in some sort excusable, but among christians it is an enormity and a crime for which perdition has scarcely and adequate state of punishment.—Dr. Clark, Eph. vi. 5.

Was man ordained, the slave of man, to toil,
Yoked with the brutes and fettered to the soil,
Weighed in a tyrant's balance with his gold?
No! nature stamped us in a heavenly mould,
She bade no wretch, his thankless labor urge,
Nor trembling take the pittance and the scourge.
Campbell.

But oh; what wish can prosper, or prayer,
For merchants rich in cargoes of despair?
Who drive a loathsome traffic, guage and span,
And buy the muscles and the bones of man?
Cowper.

They found them slaves, but who that title gave?
The God of nature never formed a slave.
Though fraud or force acquire a master's name,
Nature and Justice must remain the same.
Nature imprints upon what'er we see,
That has a life, or heart in it—BE FREE.
Ib.

Slaves of gold! whose sordid dealings
Tarnish all your boasted powers,
Prove that you have human feelings,
E'er you proudly question ours.
Cowper speaking for the Slaves.

Dear as freedom is, and in my heart's just Estimation, prized above all price,
I had much rather be myself the slave,
And wear the bonds, than fasten them on him.
Ib.

TAXES.

Taxes upon every article which enters into the mouth, or covers the back or is placed under the foot—taxes upon every thing which it is pleasant to see, hear, feel smell or taste—taxes upon warmth, light and locomotion—taxes on every thing on earth, and the waters under the earth—on every thing that comes from abroad, or is grown at home—taxes on the raw material—taxes on every fresh value that is added to it by the industry of man—taxes on the sauce that pampers a man's appetite, and the drug that restores him to health—on the ermine which decorates the judge, and the rope which hangs the criminal—on the poor man's salt and the rich man's spice—on the brass nails of the coffin, and the ribands of the bride—at bed or board, couchant or levant, we must pay.—The schoolboy whips his taxed hoop—the beardless youth manages his taxed horse, with a taxed bridle, on a taxed road, and the dying Englishman, pouring his medicine, which has paid 7 per cent, into a spoon that has paid 15 per cent, flings himself back upon his chintz bed, which has paid 22 per cent,—and expires in the arms of an apothecary who has paid a licence of a hundred pounds for the privilege of putting him to death. His whole property is then immediately taxed from 2 to 10 per cent. Besides the probate, large fees are demanded for burying him in the charnel; his virtues are handed down to posterity on marble; and he is then gathered to his fathers, to be taxed no more.—Sidney Smith.

NEWS ITEMS.

SIR ROBERT PEEL, PREMIER OF ENGLAND.—The Dublin Statesman, gives the following interesting anecdote of this distinguished individual, as derived from an authentic source and entitled to confidence. It is delightful to record such indications of dependence on the Giver of all grace and strength, in one of the most eminent statesmen of the age.

A certain distinguished Irish law functionary, who is on the most intimate terms with Sir Robert Peel, calling upon him one day (some months ago,) made his way into Sir Robert's study, without being announced. Seeing the Premier on his knees, he stood still for a moment, and then as noiselessly as he could retreated into the outer apartment. After a short period had elapsed, Sir Robert Peel joined him, and conscious that he had been discovered, remarked—"You were, perhaps, surprised to find me at prayer; but the truth is, dear———, I find that in reality the whole weight of the affairs of this people is laid upon my shoulders, which are too weak to sustain it. I have, therefore, been to the only source of strength for help, and I find it continually requisite, and only to be obtained there."

RULE OF THE LAST METHODIST GENERAL CONFERENCE RESPECTING OBITUARIES.—"Resolved, That editors be instructed to confine obituaries and memoirs to the smallest practicable space: and that correspondents be requested to draw them up in the briefest possible manner, simply announcing the facts."

A house was burnt near St. Louis on the 22d ult., and a mother with her six children perished in the flames. A more distressing calamity has rarely been witnessed.

STATISTICS OF UNITARIANISM.—There are now in Boston twenty-five regularly ordained Unitarian ministers, settled over as many religious societies, and one unsettled clergyman who ministers to another congregation—making twenty-six in all. Five of these are connected with the ministry at large. The whole number receive salaries to the amount of $42,000 annually. The houses in which they preach, and the sites on which the churches stand, are estimated to be worth $800,000. How many members belong to these so-called churches, or whether there are any, it is difficult to say, as in most or all of them there is no confession of faith, no examination or formality of admission, and no distinction kept up between the church and the congregation. Whenever the Lord's Supper is administered, it is administered to all who choose to receive it.—Sabbath Recorder.

India Rubber.

The growing importance of this article demands a passing notice. A few years since, it was only useful for rubbing out the marks of a lead pencil. It was then through the enterprize of American citizens, manufactured to some extent by the natives of Brazil, into overshoes and bottles, and became a considerable article of import. The principal supply still comes to us from Brazil, mostly in the form of shoes and bottles; and the trade employs quite an amount of shipping, owned principally in New York and Salem, Mass. The shoes and bottles are now used as a raw material, which being ground by cylinders heated with steam, and compounded with minerals, form a water-proof and durable coating for cloth, that can be joined by its own adhesiveness, and manufactured into almost every thing. It is then heated to a point far beyond the degree of heat at which native rubber is destroyed. A chemical change is produced, and it assumes a new character and a great additional strength, though still retaining its elasticity and water-proof qualities. It is no longer soluble, or effected by cold or heat, or, in other words, neither becomes stiff nor soft by cold or hot weather. Our government has exposed the article to its severest tests, and we are assured that the reports are decidedly favorable.

The mills in this neighborhood are running day and night on contract with the Government to supply the requisitions of the army in Mexico, for India rubber equipments. Bridges, wagon floats, knapsacks, canteens, provision bags and tents, are some of the articles made of it.

The discovery of the process of manufacturing metalic and insoluble India rubber, originated in this country, and has not yet been introduced into Europe. A vast field is opened, and commerce must look up new sources of supply for the raw material, as the consumption promises to be enormous.—Journal of Commerce.

We learn that the emigration to Fairfax county (Va.) from the Northern States continues, and that several farms have lately been sold to the new comers.

REV. WM. B. O. PEABODY, well known as an eloquent preacher and fine poet, died at Springfield, Mass., on Friday last. Rev. Dr. Walker, of Cambridge, delivered a funeral discourse.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—Charles Gackenback, a very respectable citizen of Upper Macungy township, Lehigh county, Pa., met with a most shocking death on Thursday last, by being run over by a four horse team, heavily loaded.

The Late Rains have revived the crops in Maryland and Virginia.

THE TELEGRAPH LINE WEST.—Twenty miles of the road are already completed and the whole is under contract. The wires will be constructed to Wellsville, where there will be a branch to Cleveland, and the main line be extended on the left bank of the Ohio, in the direction of Columbus and Cincinnati. There will be a wire extended across the river for the accommodation of Wheeling. We expect to be in telegraghic communication with Cincinnati and Cleveland in 60 days.—Pitts. Gazette.

CHINA.—A letter, dated January 3, at Amoy, from Mr. Pholman, states that the people can be reached in all parts of the country with perfect ease, and that he often addressed hundreds at a time, who listened with great attention, and often exclaimed, 'that's right!' 'true!' &c.—Sabbath Recorder.

PERSEVERING.—The Christian Index of April 22d, announced the death at Mount Jefferson, Ala., of Mr. Lewis P. M. Slaughter. That number of the Index was the first for the year, that did not contain a communication from his pen.—He died of consumption, and though only 26 years old, he seems to have acted on the principle of the venerable Bede and our own Boardman, who persevered in useful labors up to the very close of their lives.—Sab. Rec.

The Cincinnati Chronicle describes a Yankee curiosity in that city in the form of a machine driven by steam to make shoe pegs. The engine is below—in the second story the green wood is taken—sawed into lengths and planed off. The next operation is to crease the top; after, comes the splitting process. The next is to grind the pegs and separate them. Lastly, they are dried by steam; in fact the pegs are all from the green, made by steam, and the proprietor makes daily about eight bushels!

A convention of Associate Reformed Churches at Burnet's Creek, Ia., have "Resolved, That secret societies such as Freemasonary, Odd Fellowship, and Sons of Temperance, are inconsistent with the spirit of the Gospel; and persons adhering thereto are not to be admitted as members of the United Presbyterian Churches."

THE COST OF GLORY.—From an account of the battle of Cerro Gordo, in the Jalapa Star, we extract the following—

"Capt. Robert's company [A.] went into action with 41 officers and men. His position was most exposed, being within the range of grape, cannister and round shot of all the works, and the musketry of the principal height; of the 41, 24 were left dead and wounded on the field.—Every officer except himself was struck, and 1st Lieutenant Ewell was killed. Not an instance, however, of scattering or hesitation was known among his men, and through showers of every kind of shot, they moved on and kept position with the coolness and precision of men on drill. Probably in the history of American arms not one instance is recorded where men were kept in order under destruction and carnage so terrible.—Those left unhurt were unable to carry off the wounded."

"LET OFF CHEAP.—A store-keeper in Camden, South Carolina, who sold so much liquor to a negro as to kill him, was compelled by law to pay the full amount of his value."

So says an exchange. But what is this being "let off cheap?" What is the full value of a negro? He doubtless had a soul as well as a white man, and if he was killed by drunkenness, he was ruined soul and body. And the value of a soul; according to the Savior's estimate, is a whole world! Did the store-keeper pay the full value, then?—Let him and all other drunkard makers reflect upon it.—Olive Branch.

From the Watchman of the Valley.

Stage drivers.

Some are gentlemen, perfect Gentlemen, we are happy to say it. On our way to Hamilton a few weeks since, we were shocked at the bold, horrid, cold-blooded blasphemy! At almost every breath, God's sacred name was bandied! It is wrong, exceedingly, yes, shameful, to employ such men, even as scavengers! The lowest cells in the Penitentiary would be polluted by such foul mouths! Stage owners would do well to reflect on this thing. We chose on our return, to pay thrice the amount of fair in another vehicle, rather than pass through a similar ordeal.

A PASSENGER.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

OHIO HARMONIST

The HARMONIST will contain a choice selection of about 150 pages of Psalm and Hymn tunes, compiled with much care from the best authors in the United States, to which is added a supplement of Temperance songs, designed for the use of congregations, singing schools, temperance meetings, and musical associations.

It will be arranged in three parts,—parts first and third contain the seven syllables in the patent notes; the seven sounds being represented by SEVEN DIFFERENT CHARACTERS, to wit:—do, ra, mi, fa, sal, la, si.

Part second contains the four syllables in the old patent notes.

It will also contain the rudiments of music on a plain and concise plan.

The object of the publishers in getting up this work is to assist the public in singing the do, ra, mi system with much ease and accuracy, without being compelled to go through a long and tedious study of the round note system.

It also contains a Hindoo piece, accompanied with both the Hindoo and English languages.

The entire work will be executed on good paper and in a neat and substantial manner, and bound in good style by J. A. & U. P. James, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

The work will be completed about the first of June next.

TERMS.—The OHIO HARMONIST will be delivered to subscribers at seventy-five cents per single copy, to be paid on delivery. A reasonable discount will be made to wholesale purchasers. All orders addressed to the undersigned at Washington, Guernsey county, Ohio, or Deerville, Harrison county, Ohio, or J. A. & U. P. James, Cincinnati, accompanied with the cash, and post paid, will be promptly attended to.

PROSPECTUS

FOR PUBLISHING A SERIES OF VOLUMES OF SERMONS

By the Rev. Thomas Potter, Minister of the M. P. Church.

VOLUME I.

THE EVANGELICAL ECONOMY DEVELOPED, IN A SERIES OF DISCOURSES ON THE FACTS, INSTITUTIONS, APPLIANCES, EFFECTS, AND FINAL RESULTS OF THE CHRISTIAN SYSTEM, viz.

I. The dispensation of the Gospel the subject of prophetic anticipation.

II. The evangelic announcement of the Savior's nativity.

III. The divine mandate at the incarnation of the Son of God.

IV. The introduction of the Mediatorial economy the subject of rejoicing in heaven.

V. The work of grace on the day of Pentecost the model for religious revivals.

VI. The primitive Evanglisits the patterns of all succeeding preachers.

VII. The divine institution for saving the world.

VIII. The moral revolutions which the triumphs of the Gospel accomplish.

IX. The religious excitement produced by the successful preaching of the Gospel, defended.

X. The principal cause of the failure of the agencies of Christianity.

XI. The penitent sinner on earth the delight of the Angels in heaven.

XII. The final consummation of the dispensation of grace in the solemnities of the day of judgment.

The views embodied in these discourses are such as are held in common by all evangelical denominations. The author eschews all controversy. The style is didactic. Nothing sectarian has a place in these sermons, which are simply devoted to popular impression and instruction.

It is proposed to put to the Press these Sermons as soon as a sufficient number of subscribers have been secured to justify their publication. If the author meet with adequate encouragement in the sale of this first Volume, it will be succeeded by a second, and so on.

[The contents of the second, third, fourth and fifth volumes are also given in the prospectus which has been furnished us, but as the first volume is to be published separately, the above will sufficiently for the present, indicate the nature and plan of the work. ED.]

The whole of these discourses were prepared and delivered during a not unsuccessful ministry of upwards of twenty years, partly in this country and partly in Great Britain; and are already committed to writing.

Each Volume will be sold at the moderate charge of One Dollar, to be paid for on delivery.

The Volumes will be neatly bound,—octavo size,—and printed on good paper, in a clear type. Each Volume will contain upwards of three hundred pages. Subscriptions will be received for the first Volume alone; or for the first and second; or the whole series may be subscribed for at once.

Mr. LEVI PETIT is authorized to receive subscriptions for these contemplated publications; or a letter addressed to the author, Mount Vernon, Knox county, Ohio, with a request over the writer's signature, to become a subscriber, will insure the insertion of his name on the subscription list. [May 20.] THOMAS POTTER.

Land of Beauty!—Land of Light!

BY REV. T. HARRISON.

There's a glorious land on high,
Far beyond the star-lit sky:
All things there are fair and bright:—
Land of Beauty!—Land of Light!

Living splendor beameth there—
Holy fragrance fills the air—
All is rich with spotless white:—
Land of Beauty!—Land of Light!

There no angry tempest blows—
No red bolt the thunder throws—
No dread gloom is spread by night:—
Land of Beauty!—Land of Light!

There the holy mountains are—
And sweet valleys stretched afar,—
There are rivers, pure and bright!—
Land of beauty!—Land of Light!

Radiant verdure decks the ground—
Lovely flowers rejoice around;
All is glorious to the sight:—
Land of Beauty!—Land of Light!

REMINISCENCES

OF THE FIRST SETTLEMENT OF OHIO.

NO. XIII.

FRIEND BASSETT: I thought I had taken leave of you and your readers, upon the subject of the early settlement of this country, but my friend Doncl Converse, has given me the pleasure of a perusal of a work upon the subject, which has given me so much gratification, that I desire to bring it to the notice of those of your readers, who feel an interest in the subject; I must therefore ask an insertion of this notice, and a short extract, containing an opinion, (incidentally,) on the subject of Burr's expedition. The book is BURNET'S NOTES ON THE NORTHWESTERN TERRITORY. Derby, Bradley & Co., Publishers; Cincinnati, 1847. Judge Burnet is so well known that it is not necessary to say that a work of this kind from his pen must be of high public importance. But I may be permitted to say that the perusal of it has more than realised my anticipation, when informed, since I wrote my last communication, that such a work was in existence.—Much of it is compiled from authentic public documents, and gives full information of all the expeditions against the Indians, under the command of Harmer, St. Clair, Wayne, and some others in Kentucky.—Of the settlement of Cincinnati, Columbia and North Bend, and incidents of the Indian War in the vicinity of those places,—and of the government of the Territory up to the adoption of the constitution,—and much incidental matter, interesting to the citizens of the WEST. The following extract is one of a series of notices of the men who composed the first house of Representatives of the territory, north-west of the river Ohio. HORACE NYE.

John Smith, of Hamilton county, was scarcely excelled by any member in either house, in native talent and mental energy. Though he felt, very sensibly, the want of an early education, yet the vigor of his intellect was such as enabled him, measurably, to overcome that difficulty. His ambition to excel, urged him to constant application, and soon raised him to a fair standing among the talented and influential leaders of the day.—In 1803, he represented the State in the Senate of the United States, and stood high in the confidence of Mr. Jefferson. Subsequently, however, his intimacy with Colonel Burr, put an end to all intercourse between him and Mr. Jefferson.—When the Colonel was on his tour through the western country, in 1806, he spent a week or two in Cincinnati. Mr. Smith was then a Senator, and had been a member of that body when Colonel Burr presided in it, as Vice President of the United States. He, therefore, very naturally invited him to his house, and tendered to him its hospitality during his stay in the place. This act of respect and kindness, dictated by a generous feeling, was relied on as evidence that he was a partizan of the Colonel, and engaged in his project. A number of persons then residing in Cincinnati, who were in constant and intimate intercourse with Colonel Burr, and who were universally believed to be engaged in his undertaking, whatever it might have been, deserted him as soon as the storm began to gather. Some of them figured in the trial at Richmond, in 1807, as patriots of spotless purity.

When the Governor of Ohio made his communication to the Legislature on the subject, which was the commencement of the military movements, familiarly called at that day "the Burr War," it was amusing to see those men, who had so recently been the most devoted attendants on the Colonel, and the most vocal in his praise, denouncing him as a traitor, and tendering their services to the Governor of the State, to arrest the culprit and bring him to justice. Mr. Smith was a firm, consistent man, not easily alarmed; he solemnly affirmed his belief that Colonel Burr was not engaged in any project injurious to the country, and refused to join in the outcry against him, or to aid in the measures that were taken to procure his arrest. The consequence was, he was denounced himself, and a bill of indictment found against him, which was, however, abandoned without an attempt to bring him to trial.

In conversation with his friends, Mr. Smith stated, that before the movements of Burr had attracted general notice, Mr. Jefferson requested a confidential interview with him, (Smith;) at which he enquired if he was not personally acquainted with the Spanish officers of Louisiana and Florida. On being answered in the affirmative, he went on to state, that a war with Spain seemed to be inevitable; and that it was very desirable to know the feelings of those men towards the United States, and whether reliance could be placed on their friendship, if a war should take place between the two countries. At the same time, he requested him to visit that country, with reference to that object. Mr. Smith stated further, that he did visit the country, as requested; and that, on his return, he reported to Mr. Jefferson, that the governor, the inferior officers, and the inhabitants generally, were not only friendly, but were desirous of attaching themselves to the United States. This was in the summer preceding the war message against Spain, which was sent to the two houses of Congress, in December, 1805. Although that message was confidential, it soon became known to the diplomatic corps, at Washington; and the French minister was ordered by his master, Napoleon, to inform the American Government, that France would take part with Spain, in any contest she might have with the U. States.

It is matter of history, that after that notice, the project against Spain, communicated in the confidential message, and referred to in the conversation with Mr. Smith, was abandoned; and, about the same time, measures were taken by the Administration, to stop the movements of Colonel Burr. The inference drawn from these facts, and the order of time, in which they occurred, was, that the object of Burr's preparations and movements, was the invasion of Mexico; that the government was apprised of the fact; and, that the settlement of Washita lands was a mere pretence to cover the real design.

TEMPERANCE.

From the Cumberland Presbyterian.

The Wandering Distiller's Lamentation.

Come hearken, I pray, to this sad lamentation,
Of a poor ruined distiller, now bankrupt and old:
No house to receive me—no friend to relieve me,
Nor clothing sufficient to keep me from cold;
Now cast out, a wanderer, forlorn and forsaken,
All hapless and friendless, ah! where shall I go?
Should Pity's kind angel e'en offer me shelter,
Stern Justice would stand forth and answer me, No!
I wandered all lonely, all sad and forsaken,
And humbly sat down at the dramseller's door;
He would not receive me—he would not relieve me,
But bade me begone and be seen there no more;
I went to the drunkard and told my sad story
Who oftimes from me had received the full bowl—
He vengefully beat me—he cruel did treat me,
Then bade me begone for I'd ruin'd his soul.
I went to the farmer, and humbly besought him
And told him of friendship—of happier days,
He would not receive me—he would not relieve me,
And told me I'd got the reward of my ways.
I went to a house where a widow sat weeping,
She bade me count o'er the bad deeds I had done,
Then call'd me to look where one in death lay sleeping;
Then bade me begone for I'd murdered her son.
The just maledictions so often poured on me
By poor injured orphans has found me at last:
My thin tattered raiment and gray hairs their scat'ring,
How piteously stream to the blast.

The Temperance Cause.

MR. EDITOR:—This move seems to have declined, the cause of which has occupied the attention of many speakers and writers on the subject of late. It has been accounted for in various ways. Various defects in the Washingtonian organization, have been called up as scape goats to a re-organization. We wish not to be understood to object to the latter, or to secrecy being added, if the zeal for legislative favor does not bring reproach upon older organizations, whose unchangeable purpose is, to let all men act freely, in all matters not infringing the rights of others. But whatever may be the cause of decline, one thing perhaps is certain, that is, its votaries would do well to be sure they are right, and then go a-head. It would seem that no considerate person could doubt its necessity in some way; but there may be a diversity of opinion even among its friends as to the best means of success; and concert of action alone by temperance men will not amount to this, unless it be on right principles. This difference of opinion arises for the most part perhaps, out of a want of a correct knowledge of the real character of the reform itself.

If this is correct, would it not be well to find first, whether it is a moral or political enterprise? And if it be really a moral one, moral means or suasion should be alone used; but if it is a political one, government may enforce it on the people. But in doing this, it can have no right to discriminate between manufacturers of, and dealers in, intoxicating liquors, as a business of trade and profit. If the business of making and vending such liquors for such purposes, be of right subject to legislative restriction, it may be prohibited entirely. But if this is a right, and one not delegated to the government, but remains inherent in the people, as the right of growing and vending corn and other articles of trade, then, it may not be restricted; but it may be taxed or a license imposed for the support of government, such as that imposed upon other branches of business. But in regulating this, the Legislature can have no constitutional right to erect a tribunal of discrimination, to discriminate between the applicants for such license, when they are ready and willing to pay the fee, for one man's right to the trade is as good as another's. All good governments are founded in justice, and justice consists in rendering to others that which they have a right to demand; but all men's right of demand are equal; therefore discrimination is excluded.

In republics, to secure the mutual enjoyment of natural rights, each member submits to a modification of these, for the good of the whole; but this modification cannot accord with justice or mutual rights, if peculiar privileges are granted to any. Hence the law that grants the liberty to one individual to deal thus in such liquors, either by wholesale or by retail, and denies it to others, is unjust and oppressive; and the law that lays the responsibility upon a majority, is equally so. But if the practice of making and vending such liquors for gain, be considered prejudicial to the well-being of community, which perhaps no one will deny, laws may be enacted against the whole business without infringing the rights of any, for no one can have a right to injure others. And whether any man is born with a right to engage in a business merely for profit, by which he indirectly but certainly injures his fellow citizens, their wives and families, is a matter that may well produce doubt. If the practice injures others, it is ground for judicial process, and for judicial punishment; but no one can have a right to do that which creates grounds for such a process; otherwise the action of the judiciary, and that of the culprit, would have precisely the same object in view. No proceedings can be said to be judicial, or punishments said to be judicially inflicted, unless they have for their object the general welfare; therefore if the right to make and vend such liquors cannot be disproved, legislative restriction, will have to be removed entirely, and temperance men cease from political alliances, and act upon the moral principle. But was the want of legislative favor the cause of decline? We think not. The Washingtonians engaged in it as a moral enterprise, and while they pursued it by moral suasion and the demonstration of facts, success attended their labors; but when they sought aid from the civil law, it declined.

Now one of two things is inferable, either that they ought not to have sought it at all, or else that they sought it wrong.

They asked only the removing of the small twigs and outer branches (retail) of the evil tree, while the root, trunk, and main branches, (the seller of grain for the purpose, distiller and wholesale dealer,) were to be left untouched; but there is hope of a tree, even if it is cut down, that it will sprout again; therefore, if we would make head against the evil of intemperance, either politically or morally, let the axe be laid at the root of the tree, and dig it up. But let us first know which course to steer. T. F.

Narrative.

The Head-Stone.

The coffin was let down to the bottom of the grave, the planks were removed from the heaped-up brink, the first rattling clods had struck their knell, the quick shovelling was over, and the long, broad, skillfully cut pieces of turf were aptly joined together, and trimly laid by the beating spade, so that the newest made mound in the church-yard was scarcely distinguishable from those that were grown over by the undisturbed grass and daisies of a luxuriant spring. The burial was soon over; and the party, with one consenting motion, having uncovered their heads in decent reverence of the place and occasion, were beginning to separate, and about to leave the church-yard. Here some acquaintances from distant parts of the parish, who had not had opportunity of addressing each other in the house that had belonged to the deceased, nor in the course of a few hundred yards that the little procession had to move over from his bed to his grave, were shaking hands quietly but cheerfully, and inquiring after the welfare of each other's families. There, a small knot of neighbors were speaking, without exaggeration, of the respectable character the deceased had borne, and mentioning to one another little incidents of his life, some of them so remote as to be known only to the gray-headed persons of the group. While a few yards farther from the spot, were standing together parties who discussed ordinary concerns, altogether unconnected with the funeral, such as the state of the markets, the promise of the season, or change of tenants; but still with a sobriety of manner and voice, that was insensibly produced by the influence of the simple ceremony just closed, by the quiet graves around and the shadow of the spire and gray walls of the house of God.

Two men yet stood together at the head of the grave, with countenances of sincere but unimpassioned grief. They were brothers, the only sons of him who had been buried. And there was something in their situation that naturally kept the eyes of many directed upon them for a long time, and more intensely, than would have been the case, had there been nothing more observable about them than the common symptoms of a common sorrow. But these two brothers, who were now standing at the head of their father's grave, had for some years been totally estranged from each other, and the only words that had passed between them, during all this time, had been uttered within a few days past, during the necessary preparations for the old man's funeral.

No deep and deadly quarrel was between these brothers, and neither of them could distinctly tell the cause of this unnatural estrangement.—Perhaps dim jealousies of their father's favor—selfish thoughts that will sometimes force themselves in poor men's hearts, respecting temporal expectations—unaccommodating manners on both sides—taunting words that mean little when uttered, but which rankle and fester in remembrance—imagined opposition of interests, that, duly considered, would have been found one and the same—these, and many other causes, slight when single, but strong when rising up together in one baneful band, had gradually but fatally affected their hearts, till at last those who in youth had been seldom separate, and truly attached, now met at market, and miserable to say, at church, with dark and averted faces, like different clansmen during a feud.

Surely if any thing could have softened their hearts towards each other, it must have been to stand silently, side by side, while the earth, stones, and clods, were falling down upon their father's coffin. And doubtless their hearts were so softened. But pride, though it cannot prevent the holy affections of nature from being felt, may prevent them from being shown; and these two brothers stood there together, determined not to let each other know the mutual tenderness that, in spite of them, was gushing up in their hearts, and teaching them the unconfessed folly and wickedness of their causeless quarrel.

A head-stone had been prepared, and a person came forward to plant it. The elder brother directed him how to place it—a plain stone, with a sand-glass, skull, and cross-bones, chiselled but rudely, and a few words inscribed. The younger brother regarded the operation with a troubled eye, and said, loudly enough to be heard by several of the bystanders, "William, this was not kind in you; you should have told me of this.—I loved my father as well as you could love him. You were the elder, and, it may be, the favorite son; but I had a right in nature to have joined you in ordering this head-stone, had I not?"

During these words, the stone was sinking into the earth, and many persons, who were on their way from the grave, returned. For a while the elder brother said nothing, for he had a consciousness in his heart that he ought to have consulted his father's son in designating this last most becoming mark of affection and respect to his memory, so the stone was planted in silence, and now stood erect, decently and simply among the other unostentatious memorials of the humble dead.

The inscription merely gave the name and age of the deceased, and told that the stone had been erected "by his affectionate sons." The sight of these words seemed to soften the displeasure of the angry man, and he said, somewhat more mildly, "Yes, we were his affectionate sons, and since my name is on the stone, I am satisfied, brother. We have not drawn together kindly of late years, and perhaps never may; but I acknowledge and respect your worth; and here before our own friends, and before the friends of our father, with my foot above his head, I express my willingness to be on better and other terms with you, and if we cannot command love in our hearts, let us at least, brother, bar out all unkindness."

The minister, who had attended the funeral, and had something entrusted to him to say publicly before he left the church-yard, now came forward and asked the elder brother why he spake not regarding this matter. He saw that there was something of a cold and sullen pride rising up in his heart, for not easy may any man hope to dismiss from the chamber of his heart even the vilest guest, if once cherished there. With a solemn and almost severe air, he looked upon the relenting man, and then changing his countenance into serenity, said gently,

Behold how good a thing it is,
And how becoming well,
Together such as brethren are,
In unity to dwell.

The time, the place, and this beautiful expression of a natural sentiment, quite overcame a heart, in which many kind, if not warm affections dwelt; and the man thus appealed to, bowed down his head and wept. "Give me your hand, brother;" and it was given, while a murmur of satisfaction arose from all present, and all hearts felt kindlier & more humanely towards each other.

As the brothers stood fervently, but composedly, grasping each other's hands, in the little hollow that lay between the grave of their mother, long since dead, and of their father, whose shroud was haply not yet still from the fall of dust to dust, the minister stood beside them with a pleasant countenance, and said, "I must now fulfil the promise I made to your father on his death-bed. I must read to you a few words which his hand wrote at an hour when his tongue denied its office. I must not say that you did your duty to your old father; for did he not often beseech you, apart from one another, to be reconciled, for your own sakes as christians, for his sake, and for the sake of the mother who bare you? When the palsy struck him for the last time, you were both absent, nor was it your fault that you were not beside the old man when he died. As long as sense continued with him here, did he think of you two, and of you two alone. Tears were in his eyes; and I saw them there, and on his cheek too, when no breath came from his lips. But of this no more. He died with this paper in his hand; and he made me to know that I was to read it to you over his grave. I now obey him:

"My sons, if you will let my bones lie quiet in the grave, near the dust of your mother, depart not from my burial, till in the name of God and Christ, you promise to love one another as you used to do. Dear boys, receive my blessing."

Some turned their heads away to hide the tears that needed not to be hidden,—and when the brothers had released each other from a long and sobbing embrace, many went up to them, and, in a single word or two, expressed their joy at their perfect reconcilement. The brothers themselves walked away from the church-yard, arm in arm with the minister to the Manse. On the following Sabbath, they were seen sitting with their families in the same pew, and it was observed, that that they read together off the same Bible when the minister gave out the text, and that they sang together, taking hold of the same psalm-book.

The psalm was sung, (given out at their own request,) of which one verse had been repeated at their father's grave; a larger sum than usual was on the Sabbath found in the plate for the poor, for Love and Charity are sisters. And ever after, both during the peace and the troubles of this life, the hearts of the brothers were as one, and in nothing were they divided.—Wilson.

Bishop M'Kendree.

STATEMENT OF AN AGED MINISTER.

"Nearly forty years ago, and just after I was married, I resided in Kentucky. Mr. M'Kendree was then presiding elder, and included my place of residence in his district. On his round through his district, at one time, he stayed with me a day or two. And one day he and I were left alone. He read, and I worked at shoe-making, until late in the day, when Mr. M'Kendree, perhaps tired by long reading, laid aside his book, and for some time walked to and fro through the room. At length, he addressed me thus: 'Do you use tobacco?' 'No, sir,' I answered, 'but if you want some I can get it.' 'No,' said he, 'I do not use it, but I thought you might, as it is a very prevalent custom. You are a young man, and but lately married; your wife does not use it; and I supposed if you did, I probably could persuade you to quit the practice. But as you do not use it, I hope you never will. It is a great evil, and the raising it has given rise to one of the greatest evils in our land, and one that will, sooner or later, call down the curse of God upon us—I mean slavery. It has got to such a pass, that they buy more negroes to raise more tobacco, and raise more tobacco to buy more negroes.' He (Mr. M'Kendree) went on to say, 'When I first started to preach and travel I owned a negro. At one time, at some distance from home, I fell sick, and was expected to die. But I felt resigned and happy. At length one seemed to inquire of me, "Are you ready to die?" "Yes," I answered. "But," said he, "count it up again." I did so, and answered "Yes," again. But again one seemed to say, "Count it up again," and I did it again and again, for nearly a whole day. Finally I began to feel troubled at the inquiry presenting itself to my mind so often, and began to inquire the cause; for, though I, certainly all things are not ready. Presently I recollected that I had a negro not set at liberty. Immediately I called the family, and told them to pray for me, for I was not prepared to die, and I wanted to recover. They were surprised, and asked the reason. I told them I had a negro, and could not reconcile it to my mind to die without setting him free. They prayed for me, and from that hour I began to recover; and as soon as I was able to travel I started, and when I reached the place where my friends resided, I went, before going home, to the clerk's office, and recorded my negro free, and as soon as I saw him I gave him his free papers.'

Such was the testimony which Bishop M'Kendree bore against slavery in Kentucky. Such were his feelings during part of his ministry, that he could not reconcile it to his mind to die a slaveholder. E. J.

ACQUIRED TALENTS.—The following story is recorded of Cecco d'Arcoli and Dante:—"They were discussing the subject of natural and acquired talent, and Cecco maintained that nature was more potent than art, while Dante asserted the contrary. To prove this principle, the great Italian bard referred to his cat, which, by repeated practice, he had taught to hold a candle in its paw, while he supped or read. Cecco desired to witness the experiment, and came not unprepared for his purpose; when Dante's cat was performing its part, Cecco lifted up the lid of a pot which he had filled with mice; the creature of art instantly showed the weakness of an art merely acquired, dropping the candle, flew on the mice with all its instinctive propensity. Dante was himself disconcerted; and it was adjudged that the advocate for the occult principle of natural faculties had gained his cause."

The Dutch Brewer.

I was much amused the other day at the outpouring of one of those swelled up specimens of humanity, a Dutch Brewer—who, after having been drenched with half a gallon of his own mixture, and "mit a little viskey," uncorked the vials of his wrath upon the devoted heads of the Sons of Temperance, before a crowd that had gathered around him in front of one of the many unlicensed dog-geries with which this city is infested. "Dese fellers mit de vite hoss collars, vot lives in this town," said Jack, "is de ruination of de Prewery Piziness. I gears up my vagon and I goes to my old customers, and says, Does you vant some peer to-day? Day says—No, Jake, I can't sell vot I has. I goes to another, and I says, Does you vant some peer to-day? and he says—no, Jake; nobody vill puy—all Temperance—I takes my peer all over town; nobody puys; ten I gose to the leetle towns in de country, but dese pesky fellers mit de vite hoss collars, dey peen dere too—the landlords say—all temperane here, Jake, nobody drinks beer now-a-days—I take my peer home in de cellar, and dare it gets sour, and I must throw him away. Py sure! said jake with a sorrowful shake of the head, te Prewery Piziness no goot at all any more."—Cincinnati Organ.

VARIETY.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.—There never was a higher, or perhaps a more deserved compliment paid to any religious body than that awarded to the Society of Friends in Ireland, in the fact that to their Central Committee for the relief of the sufferers by famine, the greater portion of contributions from this country are sent with entire confidence that they will be judiciously and impartially dispensed. Even the greater portion of the contributions from the Roman Catholic Churches in this country are placed in their hands. Bishop Hughes of New York, (Roman Catholic,) is represented by one of his organs as thus thinking.—Pitts. Chris. Advocate.

The Bishop has thought, and thinks still, that there is no general voluntary committee of relief in Ireland to whom the distribution of such large sums could be entrusted with more satisfaction to the contributors on this side or more benefit to the sufferers in Ireland. They are unobjectionable on the score of either politics or religion.—They have no poor of their own denomination. They are pains-taking in understanding the localities of distress, many of them devoted to its amelioration from pure benevolence, and the Bishop has thought, and thinks still, that for any large assignments of funds for relief, the General Committee of Friends is the most fit, most competent, most impartial, trustworthy public body that we know of in Ireland for the fair distribution of the charities that may be sent from this country.

AN ENCHANTING SCENE.—Everywhere a carpet of anemones, hyacinths, and narcissus, covered the undulating ground. The oleander, the cistus, and the rhododendron, blushing with crimson blossoms, marked the wide margins of the diminished torrents; glowing heaths, odoriferous genistas, thyme, lavender, and jessamine, started from every fissure of the marble-streaked rock; its projecting crags clothed in a moss of emerald green, through which trickled diamond drops of never-failing water. Tufts of arbutus, mimosa, and bay, intermixed with the wild rose and myrtle, canopied the beetling brow of the precipice. From the peeper bosom of the dell between, shot up, like stately pillars supporting fretted arches, ilex, the poplar, and the wide-spreading plane. The air was loaded with fragrance; birds of every hue balanced their light forms on bending twigs, and myriads of gilded insects emulated, in brilliancy, the flowers round whose honeyed cups they vibrated their glassy wings.—Anastatius.

PRINTING IN TURKEY.—Printing is now in great honor among the Turks. There is in Constantinople an imperial establishment containing a large number of printers. Presses are found also in all the principal towns of the empire. In a few years, according to present appearances, Turkey will have, comparatively, more newspapers and periodicals than Russia, Spain, or Portugal.

Pleasant Incident.

A very pleasant incident occurred in one of our public schools, a day or two since. It seems that the boys attending the school, of the average age of seven years, had, in their play of bat and ball, broken one of the neighbor's windows, but no clue of the offenders could be obtained, as he would not confess, nor would any of his associates expose him.

The case troubled the teacher, and on the occasion of one of our citizens visiting the school, she privately and briefly stated the circumstance, and wished him in some remarks to the school to advert to the principle involed in the case.

The address to the school had reference principally to the conduct of boys, in the streets, and at their sports. The principles of rectitude and kindness which should govern them every where—even when alone, and when they thought no eye could see and there was no one present to observe. The school seemed deeply interested in the remarks.

A very short time after the visiter left the school, a little boy arose in his seat, and said:

"Miss L——, I batted the ball that broke Mr. ——'s window. Another boy threw the ball, but I batted it and struck the window. I am willing to pay for it."

There was a death-like silence in the school, as the boy was speaking, and it continued a minute after he had closed.

"But it won't be right for——to pay the whole for the glass," said another boy, rising in his seat; "all of us that were playing should pay something, because we were all engaged alike in the same play. I'll pay my part!"

"And I."

"And I."

A thrill of pleasure seemed to run through the school at this display of correct feeling. The teacher's heart was touched, and she felt more than ever the responsibility of her charge.—Bangor Whig.

A Good Hearer.

We hear much said about good preachers; but the text above named is worthy of a discourse.

1. A good hearer will come to the sanctuary to hear. He is hungry and thirsty, and wants living bread and living drink. Other people come there for divers other purposes than that of hearing; but that is his errand. Therefore he will have ears to hear.

2. And he will come promptly. He is interested, and in earnest and he feels that he has something to do with the Alpha as well as the Omega of divine service; and he cannot interrupt others by a late arrival. You will find the good hearer in his place in good time.

3. And he must hear with much prayer. He did not forget that before he left home, but warmed up his heart into a fit state to receive the Word ere the hour of public worship arrived, and he kept on keeping his heart warm by frequently lifting it up to the throne of grace. "These frequent looks of the heart to heaven," says Leighton, "exceedingly sweeten and sanctify our other employments, and diffuse somewhat of heaven through all our actions." So the good hearer thinks, and his practice eminently sanctifies the employment of hearing the Word, and makes it profitable.

4. The good hearer hears for himself. There are a plenty of people who turn all the arrows of divine truth to the souls of other people, and apply the discourse, most carefully and faithfully, to the cases of those about them. But the good hearer ventures to suppose that the being addressed by the speaker is himself, and acts accordingly.

5. The good hearer is a doer of what he hears. Some go on swimmingly with most other matters about hearing till they come to this; but here they fetch up. Hearing is one thing, and doing is another thing, and quite often a very uncomfortable affair. People are not very fond of putting them together. But the good hearer will not suffer them to be separated.

Besides all the good they do to themselves, good hearers accomplish another most important object; they make good preachers. How it sets the speaker on fire to see his hearers wide awake; all eyes and ears are drinking in his words, as if life hung upon them. The sight kindles him wonderfully. The warm blood shoots rapidly along his veins. There is a powerful stimulus to increase his energy and zeal. He preaches an hundred fold better for having those good hearers.

I have heard of "preachers preaching people to sleep;" but I have seen hearers hearing preachers to sleep. They hear so stupidly, languidly, sleepily, that they put all the fire out there was in the speaker's heart. Their indifference disheartened him. How could he preach zealously and fervently when those who had not gone already to sleep were nodding around him, on the verge of it in all directions?

"But it is his business to keep us awake by his zeal and energy." And so it is your business to keep him awake by your felt and manifested intense interest in his preaching. Such attention would rouse, comfort and animate him. Why not give it to him? If you wish him to be a good preacher, be a good hearer. It will do more towards that object than all the other things together which you can do. Try it.

Newspaper Fault-Finders.

It takes all sorts to make a world, according to the old proverb; and, hence, we suppose, if there were no newspaper fault-finders, there would be a vacuum—something which nature and philosophy abhor. These fault-finders are a singular and Protean tribe. Some go in for nothing but controversy; others are just opposite, and go against in in toto. Some like lengthy notices of deceased friends and relatives; others dislike biographical notices altogether. Some delight in reading the revival department; others declare that it is only a corner, wherein fine and foppish preachers have a chance to boast of their superior skill and success in winning others to Christ. Some wish the whole paper made up of short, pithy, home-driving, heart-reaching, sketches on religion, and nothing else; others wish to see and read long, well-written, instructive articles on Church polity, civil rights, and general literature.

Now, who can satisfy the discordant whims of a thousand or ten thousand readers such as the above? Not an editor, surely. If he please one, he must offend another; and vice versa. Could you, reader? If so, we are ready to give you a trial. Meantime, we must beg leave to say that while the world is as it is, and while men differ in their views, opinions, and prejudices, we must be permitted to hold on our old way, and do our duty, whether men will hear or whether they will forbear. Better have the smile of an approving conscience, than the heartless praise and empty adulation of a fellow-worm.—W. C. Advocate.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Delaware Circuit, June 11th, 1847.

Br. Bassett: I take my pen to inform our brethren of the prospects of this circuit. We commenced our 3d. quarterly meeting on the 29th of May, and closed June 8th. Father Potter came to our help, with his heart filled with revival fire. He set the trumpet to his mouth, gave it the certain sound, and blew long and loud. Holy zeal was scattered through the congregation. The Lord bless and reward him. We also had the acceptable labors of I. Welch, a local minister who lately came to our District from Indiana. I can safely say, I never saw a meeting better sustained, though our members were few. Yet the Episcopal Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, and Wesleyan brethren came up manfully and harmoniously to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Never have I seen a better manifestation of christian union amongst professors. All labored for the conversion of souls. And glory to God in the highest, sinners were converted. Rejoice with us, for the dead are rising from their dead works, and the news is going to heaven that the dead is alive, and the lost found. And whilst angels sing above, will we not shout in glorious triumph below? Bless God, I feel like it, just now. We labored to disadvantage inasmuch as our house was small, whilst our congregations were large. We had not room to attend to the cases of mourners, as would have been desirable, but did the best we could. Various persons crowded forward, the first night of the meeting. Some Universalists and some doubters of the Christian religion, although ready to fight the first night of the meeting, were afterwards brought to tremble like Belshazzar, and come pressing their way through the crowd to the mourner's bench. And the cry was heard, What must I do to be saved. Every night, the mourner's bench was crowded, and whilst brethren of various denominations were uniting their prayers with ours and with those of the seekers crying for mercy, others whom God had blessed, were shouting his praise, and some parents raised their voices in hallelujahs, on seeing their children converted. Such a scene was here presented, as I shall never forget. Our meeting grew better and better to the last, and we had the best of the wine at the last of the feast. During this meeting between thirty and forty were happily converted to God, and 31 gave us their names as probationers, all except two from nature's quarry. Many more are enquiring the way. My other engagements obliged me to close the meeting. But I hope the Saviour will yet appear unto those who were still left as seekers. Pray for us, all who love our Lord Jesus Christ. WM. HATFIELD, Jr.

Mad River Mission, June, 6th, 1847.

Br Bastett: We have just closed our third quarterly meeting. I would just say that our Mission is in a healthy condition—peace and harmony prevail. The Lord graciously visited us at our last meeting. It lasted five days. Eight joined the church, all from the ranks of Satan. Five of these were young men. On Sabbath evening, the Spirit reached their hearts, and they yielded to be saved by grace. We have organized a class of 13 members in Russelvania. May God sustain them. We commenced a meeting house in Equality class, 2 miles east of R. in February last. We have it raised, and the workmen have pledged themselves to have it finished against the 4th of July. May the Lord bless and reward the brethren for their labor and liberality.

Yours, L. ENSMINGER.

INDIANA DISTRICT.

Millcreek Ct., Ia., June 7th, 1847.

Br. Bassett: I have just returned from the quarterly meeting on Crawfordsville circuit, Wabash District. We had a good time.

Our third quarterly meeting was held at Pleasant Grove, the 29th and 30th of May. The Lord was with us. One soul was hopefully converted, and two promising young men joined the church. The brotherhood greatly revived. On my last round, I found a brother Cunningham, formerly of Brownsville, Ohio.

Our Camp-Meeting will embrace the last Sabbath in August, 1847. Br. Shipp is expected to attend, with as many more as can.

Our 4th quarterly meeting will be held at Maston's school house, embracing the third Sabbath in September, 1847.

Interesting Discoveries.

Some months ago Dr. M. W. Dickinson, of the Academy of Nat. Sciences, wassent from Philad. for the purpose of investigating the geology of the Valley of the Mississippi. Dr. Dickinson, who is now in this city, is one of the most industrious and distinguished explorers of the wide field of geology in this country. His discoveries have opened new paths for the investigations of the student in this all-important science, and reflected well-earned honors on himself. Very lately Dr. Dickinson made a tour of inspection through that portion of Alabama in which abounds the rotten limestone formation. This is particularly the case in the vicinities of Clark, Washington and Claiborne counties, in that State. Heretofore this formation has been considered by geologists as a detritus from shells, etc., but by the power of glasses it has been proved to be entirely different. Dr. Dickenson informs us that it is a huge coral reef, where gigantic branches shoot up several feet into a beautiful arborescent form in its original bed of the primeval ocean. At its base are the fossil remains of the huge zugledon, shark, fishes, etc., many of the former from forty to one hundred feet long, winding in serpentine form among the coral. Below this were found the remains of an extensive sea, the bottom of which was lined with a bed of shells, varying from twenty to thirty feet, in a fine state of preservation. These beds yielded a great variety of shells, many of which may be still found in our present seas, and hence must have been of comparatively recent formation. Below this was found a huge oyster bed, imbedded in a blue marl or clay, in their original position. Some of these oysters measured fifteen inches in length, and weighed from ten to fifteen pounds. Succeeding this stratum were found the bottoms of several ancient seas, lakes and rivers, all yielding numerous fine fossils. Many of these fossils Dr. Dickinson has forwarded to the Academy of natural Sciences in Philadelphia.

We learn that Dr. Dickinson starts to-morrow for the parish of Concordia, to investigate the geological formation of that section of our State. For the grand cause in which he is engaged and for his high merits as a gentleman and distinguished scholar, we hope that every facility may be afforded him.—N. O. Delta.

New Comet.—A Cincinnati paper announces that Professor Mitchell has received advices of the discovery of a new comet by Prof. Colla, of Parma, and that the stranger was seen at the Cincinnati Observatory, on the night of the 8th instant. It further states that this new comet is near Lumbda Ursæ Majoris.

Mysterious Disappearance!

William A. Alter, a young man of 17 years old, of a respectable family in this city, left his father's house on the 15th January last, without any conceivable cause or previous intimation, and without even a change of clothes, and has not since been heard from. What makes the event the more mysterious is, that he has always been a dutiful and affectionate son, of correct habits and morals. He is a young man of fair countenance and person, the height of a moderate-sized man, with blue eyes and dark hair, intelligent, active, and of respectable appearance and address generally. Any intelligence of such a person communicated to Charles Alter Cincinnati or to this office, will be greatfully received by his afflicted parents.

Our exchanges are respectfully requested to copy this Notice.

Slavery in Virginia.—Dr. Bailey, Editor of the National Era, published at Washington City, spending some time in Virginia on a visit, gives some interesting observations in reference to things in the 'Old Dominion.' He says that Mr. Colhoun's dogma about the blessedness of slavery, has never got foothold in Virginia, and that he has yet to see the Virginian who does not regard it (slavery) as a curse. He describes the blighting influence it has had upon that country. It is full, he says, of the 'poetry of desolation.' And thus it must be, while slavery continues. The Dr. writes from Sussex County. He observes that the sale of slaves to the South, is carried to a great extent. Great numbers are taken south by railroads, others coast-wise by sea, whilst many are sent off westward. Yet he speaks of some planters who are 'too good to be slaveholders.' Many there are, he says who cannot be persuaded to sell their slaves, though possessing more than they can find work for. The following observations of the Dr. will be read with interest, even by those who may not concur with him in some of his conclusions.

Slavery is undoubtedly doomed in this State. It does not pay. From beginning to end, it is a losing concern. Land is continually decreasing in value. Not far hence is a tract of 1,400 acres, well timbered, and lying along a creek, which, twenty years ago, brought from $18 to $20 an acre. It was sold, five years ago, for $6 or $7! The people are not blind to these things. Nobody denies that slavery is at the bottom of the mischief; but all seem paralyzed at the magnitude of the evil. They hope that, under the operation of the causes I have mentioned, the continual drain of the slave population to the South, may, in the course of forty or fifty years, relieve them of the incubus. But, what a process of abolition! Cruel to the slaves, impoverishing to the State. While this process shall continue, the soil will grow leaner, the price of land will diminish, emigration of the white population will increase, so that this ancient and venerable commonwealth, in many parts, will be depopulated. It is a most painful subject.

Could these estimable people (for estimable many are, despite the circumstances surrounding them) only overcome their prejudices, look at the principle of emancipation upon the soil in its true light, and as illustrated by the working of the Free Labor system in the West Indies, they would see, at once, the clew to lead them out of all their difficulties. The great mistake they now make is, in judging of the effects of emancipation, as the settled policy of the State, by its effects in a few exceptional cases. A small number of slaves, from time to time, has been liberated, the great mass still remaining in bondage. They are degraded, because nearly all their brethren are still slaves; outcasts, because nobody cares for their welfare; idle and thriftless, because they can obtain no regular employment, there being almost always an excess of slave labor; and because, while slave labor shall predominate, they cannot expect greatly to better their condition by any amount of industry. They are regarded with dislike and suspicion, because their presence and free associations with the slaves tend to render the latter discontented. In fact, the two classes injure each other.

Now, it seems to us, that every reflecting mind, if divested of prejudice, must see that these evils prove nothing, except that two modes of labor, so directly and completely antagonistic as free and slave labor, cannot co-exist. Where free labor is the general system, slave labor cannot prevail; it may exist for a time, but it must soon become extinct. Where slave labor is the system, free white labor is expelled or repelled, and free black labor debased to the point of utter worthlessness. There is no alternative: all the laborers must be free, or all slaves.

Suppose, then, the public sentiment of Virginia to be so changed that, by an act of the requisite power, all the slaves of the State were to be made free at once. See the operation of the new order of things. Labor would be elevated to a rank of comparative respectability, and so cease to be repulsive. As all would be free, all would have one interest; there would be no slave population to be rendered discontented by the presence of a small class of degraded freemen; they would all have equal chances for employment, there being no longer any competition between free and slave labor. As all would be free, every one would be thrown upon his own resources, be compelled by his necessities to labor, and at the same time have an additional motive to industry, in the fact, that it held out a certain prospect of greatly bettering his condition. Now, it is the interest of the State that the whole black population should be kept in ignorance. Then, it would be no less its interest that all should be educated; for, while no harm would result from their enlightenment, it is easy to see how their efficiency as producers, and good habits generally, would be increased by their intelligence. The man who now has half a dozen families of slaves, furnishing fifteen or twenty hands to do the work of a limited plantation, and fifteen or twenty more non-workers, to consume a large portion of the fruits of their slovenly husbandry, would then be relieved of a wasting burden, and by the hired labor of eight or ten of the freedmen secure a large portion of the fruits of his land for himself, while the rest of his old force would either find employment with the immigrants whom the great change would attract to the State, or become themselves the principal cultivators of the land that slavery has thrown out to waste.

But why speculate on this subject, when the experiment of West India emancipation has thrown a flood of light upon it. A commission of enlighened men of Virginia, who should proceed to the British West Indies, make a full examination of the operation and results of emancipation there, and then lay the facts before the people of this State, would rank among the greatest of public benefactors.

Heavy Rain—Damages—Lives Lost.—On Friday afternoon last, we were visited with a violent thunderstorm, accompanied with torrents of rain, which ceased not till some of our streets were quite inundated. We learn that the streams south and west of us experienced a remarkable freshet, suddenly rising to a fearful height, carrying away most of the bridges. The saw-mill of Mr. Carlisle on Brush Creek, five miles south of this place, was carried away, and Mr. Carlisle himself, an aged man, being in the mill at the time, was drowned. What is most extraordinary, the back water in the Muskingum river caused by the Moxahela, two and a half miles below, on the same evening, stopped the mill of Messrs. Beaumont and Hollingsworth, at the upper extremity of this place. The large culvert-bridge of the National Road at West Putnam was swept away. The editor of the Zanesville Courier thinks that it will cost from $3000 to $3,500 to replace it. On Saturday morning, a Mr. John Pletcher, returning home from this place, in attempting to cross a run with a wagon and team of horses, four miles south of this place, the run being remarkably high, was swept away and drowned.

New Book Agent.—We regret to learn by the "True Wesleyan" of the 19th inst., which we have just received, that Rev. O. Scott, by reason of a continued decline of his health, has been compelled to resign his post as Book Agent of the W. M. Connection. Rev. C. Prindle has been appointed to succeed him, and has entered upon his duties.

Santa Anna resigned.—The Baltimore Sun of Saturday last, publishes Gen. Santa Anna's letter of resignation of the chief magistracy. He still professes ardent devotion to his country, and as ardent hate to its enemies and invaders. Doubts were entertained that the Congress would accept his resignation.

Ladies' National Magazine.—The July number is received. It has a fine mezzotint, representing Archbishop Cranner and Anne Bolyn, also the Paris Fashions. C. J. Peterson publisher, Philadelphia. $2 per Annum.

American Pulpit.—This excellent work has just entered upon a new volume, after some delay, in waiting for portraits. It has been enlarged by an increased number of pages, without an increase of price. The first number of vol. 3, is just received. It has a fine portrait of Rev Dr. Olin, Pres. of Wesleyan University, and contains, 1. A sermon by Rev. R. W. Cushman of Boston, Mass. 2. Sermon by Rev. David Dyer, of Dorchester Mass. 3. Sketch of a sermon by the Editor. 4. Plans of two sermons by the late Dr. Fisk. 5. Hints on the management of a sermon. We have heretofore spoken in commendation of this work, as not only neat and interesting, but useful. Its recent improvements will make it still more desirable. Rev. J. D. Bridge, Editor, Samuel Chism, Publisher, Worcester, Mass. Terms, $1 per Annum in advance.

True Wesleyan.—We are informed that this paper has lately paid considerable attention to the Western Recorder, and to its correspondent 'Paul Pry.' We have not, however, had the privilege of seeing any thing of this, for the "Wesleyan" only comes to us occasionally of late. Now we are not conscious of having referred to that Journal, nor to the denominational branch which it represents, any otherwise than in respectful terms. We have not even condescended to reply to the unworthy attacks of some of its writers. And we further say, that we have never failed to send our exchange regularly to the True Wesleyan, since we have had charge of this establishment. We inform the Editor that his paper for May 22, May 29, and for June 12, have never come near us; of course we know not what it may have contained. We presume, the omission was unintentional on the part of the Editor.

Arrival of the Cambria.

By the Baltimore Sun, and Pittsburgh Commercial Journal we have intelligence of the arrival of the Steamer Cambria, at Boston on the 16th instant. She brings intelligence of the sudden death of the celebrated Dr. Chalmers, also that Lord Clarendon succeeds Lord Besborough as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. The death of Daniel O'Connell, is also announced to have taken place at Genoa on the 15th of May. He had directed his heart to be deposited at Rome, and his body to be interred in Ireland. The financial prospects in England were said to be animating. The Cambria made the passage in 12½ days—brought about 100 passengers. The following statements are from the Baltimore Sun.

The Corn Market.

Notwithstaning the strong expectations entertained previously to the departure of the last steamer, that the corn market would maintain its upward tendency, the unusual fineness of the weather promising a favorable home harvest, had the effect of materially depressing the prices and of course contracting the extent of average transactions.

The advices, however, brought by the the Caledonia of light Stock in the American ports have created considerable activity, aided by the desired relaxation which has taken place in the pressure of the Money Market have largely tended to re-establish a free desire to speculate.

The reports, though authenticated, of a probable failure of the potato crops, both in Ireland & Jersey, have also had their own influence. The markets have, in point of fact, fallen 20 shillings per quarter from the highest point; but though flour had declined to 40 shillings per barrel, it is now worth 42 shillings, and may be fairly quoted at 43 shillings for best Western. Sour averages 37s. to 38s. per barrel; American wheat 10s. 6d. to 12s. per 79 lbs.

Indian Corn is tolerably steady at 52s. for prime or yellow, and in some instance, owing to the increased demand from Ireland, white has commanded 2s. per quarter above the currency of yellow. Corn Meal ranges between 28s. and 31s, with a tendency to the higher quotation.

The total export of breadstuffs from the United States to Great Britain and Ireland from the 1st of September, 1846 to 14th May, 1847, appears to be as follows: Flour, 1,656,802 barrels; corn meal, 434,432 barrels; wheat, 1,512,274 bushels; oats, 276,555 bushels; barley, 745,942 bushels.

Further Intelligence by the Cambria.—Since the above was in type, we have received the New York Daily Sun of Saturday last, from which we take the following:

The News from Europe.

To the mass of our readers the news from Europe by the Cambria must be gratifying. The remarkable fall in breadstuffs shows that the famine has done its worst, and, with the continued improving prospects of the next harvest, is assuming a less fearful form. From all parts of the Old World, excepting Russia, there is promise of heavy and early crops. Russia, will not reap her usual harvest, owing to cold weather and drouth. Simultaneous with the easing up of the grain and provision markets, the English money market has escaped its pressure, and business begins to flow swiftly into its accustomed channels. For a long time to come, Europe will be indebted to us for much that she eats, for were her harvest never so abundant, it is necessary she should restore the surplus that filled her granaries before the famine commenced. That surplus, Egypt, Russia, and the shores of the Baltic cannot supply, for the drain has reached them as well, and to the United States the Old World must necessarily turn.—The enormous prices obtained for flour and grain for the few past months cannot be expected, but our farmers will receive for their products far more than usual rates, and all our markets will be active, and specie plenty. The consumers, who are always four-fifths of the mass, and whose wants are more pressing and immediate than the producers, will feel a happy relief in the decline of provisions. Already flour has gone down an eighth in our market, and will doubtless fall still farther. All fear of scarcity at home will be dispelled, and there will be an end of the dolorous paragraphs that have followed the Telegraph wires as regularly as the running of a speculator's watch. With the cheering news of the harvests in Europe, comes much that is afflictive—much that betrays the rottenness at work among the monarchies

The death of Daniel O'Connell and Dr. Chalmers, two men who have filled a wide space in the world's eye, and the history of reform in modern times, will cause a deep sensation everywhere. O'Connell, full of fame and honor as is possible for man, has passed from his labors for Ireland—unhappy Ireland, without seeing a National Parliament on College Green, and the future of that country will depend much, for good or evil, upon the one on whom as a political leader, the mantle of O'Connell falls. God grant that he may be a true and enlightened patriot, one who will strive to heal the divisions of classes and parties, and work only for the nation's regeneration. Dr. Chalmers is less popularly known than O'Connell, for his field has been purely religious, but as the master-spirit of the Free Church in Scotland, the leader of the "Secession movement," and the advocate of a Church free from the State and its corruptions—a Church which in Scotland numbers nearly 2000 congregations at this time, and embracing the best minds of that country, his loss is irreparable. For many months he has not been able to preach, but has, almost up to the moment of his death, instructed a large Theological class, who are yet to follow in his footsteps. Peace to the ashes of a great and good man! From the Continent floats up a tide of intrigue and wrangling, mixed with reform. The Queen of Spain, already tired of her France-selected husband, is seeking a divorce,—Portugal is torn by civil war—portions of Germany are suffering for food, and Italy is steadily advancing towards a freer and happier condition. The commonest eye that scans the face of Europe, can see a great revolution is going on, out of which the masses will arise in more republican shape, hurling down the oppressions and corruptions of the present. The Press, the commercial spirit, the social intercourse, every day widening, all point to a transition which no craft or force can keep back. To us, the Old World looks with mingled fear and hope, and our resources and capabilities as displayed for twelve months past, have had a powerful effect upon her. If we are earnest and true to ourselves, this influence will continue to widen and finally transfer the balance of power to the Western Continent.

Telegraph Prospect.—The Pittsburgh Commercial Journal states that the Telegrapic line will be in operation from that city to Cincinnati, by the 15th of August; to Louisville by a month later; and to New Orleans by the 1st of January next.

Whitehead's Life of Wesley.—We have received 70 copies of this valuable work, from R. S. Stockton, Esq., Philadelphia, the American publisher. Two volumes in one, making a large octavo volume. The work is interesting and valuable to the general reader, but particularly should it find place in every Methodist family.—We have the work for sale at this office, at a reduced price—remarkably low. We have just received a notice of the work, prepared by the American publisher, which we will endeavor to publish next week.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Written for the Western Recorder.

A call for a Convention.

Dear Br. Bassett: You will greatly oblige the undersigned as one of the Corresponding Committee of the Michigan Annual Conference, by allowing me to say through your columns the above named Conference has made a call for a Convention, and Brother Oaks the other member of the Committee some time since authorised me to say that he was for deferring this Convention until next May and June, hoping that all of or the greater part of the Northern Annual Conferences at their next sessions would appoint delegates to attend the Convention, to take into consideration our connection with Slavery, &c.—And we would second the motion of the Onondaga Committee for a Convention at the above named time, and the place to be fixed as central as is practicable. Perhaps some of the objectors to this measure are hoping that the Brethren who have left the Ohio, Wabash, and New York Conferences, will be about all who will leave the church if nothing more is done; but I am inclined to think, that our future welfare and well-being at the North, depends upon a decided action against, and separation from, our connection with Slavery. I have long been of the opinion that we ought to have two General Conferences, one for the North and the other for the South, and boundary line and other things arranged and settled as Christians, if we had any Christianity remaining with us, and then each Conference attend to its own affairs in its own way; and this would save expense, contentions, hard feelings, &c. It would prevent the hundreds who are on the eve of leaving our church from doing so, and it would be the means of adding to our numbers at the North; it would save our Northern members from the painful necessity at our General Conferences of doing as the Br. Dalbies did at the last General Conference, of appointing Slaveholders to preach on Sabbath, and at other times during the session of Conference, or show partiality in filling the pulpits.

Yours, as ever, in favor of immediate emancipation from sin, the devil, and all Slavery, whether in the church or out of the church.

JAMES GAY.

Kingsbury, Laporte Co., Ia., June 9, 1847.

Thus far we have on this, Laporte circuit, enjoyed peace from the churches around us and in our own borders, and are striving to maintain and elevate our standing among the leading churches of our Northern and Western world, and with them bring our energies to bear against the powers of darkness until our world shall be flooded with the overwhelming graces of the Divine Spirit.

The prospects of a harvest in this county and the Western counties are almost entirely cut off. It has been calculated that there were over three hundred thousand bushels of wheat raised in this county last year, and it is thought that there will hardly be one thousand bushels raised this year. The very little which was not killed out last winter, together with the Spring wheat, seems to be under the destroying influence of the fly. How uncertain are our earthly prospects. "There is nothing true but heaven." Yours, &c.,

A mound was opened in Hopewell township, Muskingum county, Ohio, on, or near Jesse L. Manly's farm. Some flint arrow-heads were found, and part of a human skeleton. The earth of the mound had the appearance of very rich soil down to the bottom. Dr. A. W. Knight was present.—He was of opinion that the dirt in the centre of the mound was the decayed remains of many a noble fellow. T. BROOKOVER.

Cheating.

"I am going to buy hay of Mr. C. to-day," said one neighbor to another.

"If you do he'll cheat you," said D.

"He'll have to get up a long while before day if he cheats me," said M.

"You'll see," said D.

"Pshaw!" said M.

M. went, and bargained for a stack of hay; and when he went to take it away, in sooth it had a log-heap in its centre!

Mr. Editor: You may inform W. S. S., if he wishes a discussion of the merits of the subject by him introduced, he will have to obtain it by means other than by asking questions; for perhaps no member of any secret society would be so easily duped, as to be led out by such means. Yet all of our friend's questions are answerable; and we would be morally justifiable to answer them as the Saviour answered the Apostles when they asked, are there few that will be saved? or in the way that He answered the Jews when asked by what authority he drove the unholy from the church; and yet, perhaps, he would think us quite censurable should we follow the Saviour's example in this particular.

But friend, it would be best for us not to be righteous overmuch. T. F.

☞ Since the above came to hand, we have received from our correspondent, W. S. S., a private letter, requesting us to lay down for him the following proposition.

ALL Secret Societies, as such, are anti-Christian, and anti-republican.

An article is also just received, being a short reply to the questions of W. S. S., which we will publish next week. [Ed.

Br. Bassett: The 3d Quarterly Meeting Conference of this circuit adopted the following resolutions unanimously, and ordered them sent to the Recorder for publication:

Resolved, That Bainbridge circuit raise one hundred dollars immediately, $66⅔ in cash, and $33⅓ in trade, for the relief of Brother Jonathan Flood.

Resolved, That D. C. Carson have the agency of the said collection, and transmit the same to Br. Flood.

Resolved, That Brother Trumbo take up a collection at each of his preaching appointments, and at as many other places as he may think proper, to be appropriated to this purpose.

D. C. CARSON, Ch'm'n.

S. STRALEY, Sec'y.

P. S.—Brother Ford may draw on us for the cash, as some of it is collected, and ready for his order. The amount we propose to raise for Br. F. will be only part of his dues for former services on this circuit. D. C. C.

Mr. Editor.—I got done my days work at six of the clock this evening, and had scarce finished my supper, when a person called in to inform me that, an adjoining village was in a first rate excitement because, or on account of the arrival of the Governor of our Commonwealth.—Now, my heart says, the Lord bless the Governor, and make him a blessing to our world; and I would pay to him a reasonable tribute of my unfeigned regard for him, if hilarity and glee were not the usual mode of entertainment of persons of his rank and station. But, I'm informed of the certain and perhaps sudden visit of a yet more important Personage, at whose appearing the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth and the works therein shall be burned up. The great Archangel shall sound his awful trumpet calling both the quick and dead to meet him.—At this scene, there will be no carousing and drunkenness, no selfish or unruly feats, nor frantic shouts of carnal joy. But the graves shall open: seas, earth and hell, shall give up their dead, while thousands of angels shall fly everywhere, to gather the children of God, from the four winds of heaven. Unnumbered millions of ransomed men shall be caught up to meet their Lord Christ in the air, and sit down with him on his great white throne. But, ah! methinks amid this solemn—awful scene, countless multitudes who have erred as to the supreme good, viz: the honor which comes from God, will be left to weep, to wail and gnash their teeth—cursing the day they were born; and that they for paltry pelf, or friendship, have contributed to swell a mere bubble instead of his praise. Oh, then, will the sentence of the King Eternal, dissolve the vast assembly of mankind; hark! 'Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.' 'Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels.' The wicked shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous in to life eternal. Oh, then, carnal associations and unchristian combinations will be turned into mutual hatred and rage!—jovial roarings into dreadful howlings! and remorse like vehement fires, torment their consciences to all eternity.—Reader, as we have heretofore engaged in the world's revelling,—come, let us reflect, what shall be our lot in that great and terrible day of the Lord? Shall we be found clothed in the righteousness of Christ, and attend him from the judgment seat into his heavenly Palace? Shall we be forever with the Lord, and enter into his joy? Shall we there sing 'hosannah in the highest?—Salvation to our 'God who sitteth upon the throne and to the Lamb?'" "Not unto us, not unto us, O Lord, but unto thy name" be the praise, the glory for thy mercy and thy truth's sake.

Great Disaster on Lake Erie.

Cleveland, June 11, 1847.

Colonel Medary: I have to inform you of a most painful and distressing disaster, which occurred off Conneaut on yesterday morning.—There is much excitement and concern in this city to-day on the subject. The facts, so far as they have been ascertained, are as follows:

The steamers Chesapeake and Constellation were both bound up, and when off Conneaut, about twelve o'clock, night before last, met the schooner Porter, bound down. The Porter steered to avoid the Constellation, which was a little ahead of the Chesapeake, and though she was fortunate enough to effect that object, came, as a conquence, into direct collision with the latter boat. The hands of the Porter instantly sprang on board the Chesapeake, leaving their vessel to pursue her way, all sails set, with a brisk breeze. The commander of the Chesapeake, Captain Warner, under the apprehension that nothing serious had happened to either craft by the collision, immediately started in pursuit of the Porter, with a view to return her crew. But as he approached her he saw that she was sinking, and by the time the small boat was lowered, she disappeared.

But a new source of alarm now aroused the attention of every one. Captain Warner was informed that the steamer had sprung a leak. The pumps were immediately manned, but in spite of the most strenuous effort, the water gained rapidly, and the passengers, of whom there were fifty or sixty, were set to bailing. The captain at once ordered the boat to be headed to the shore; but such was the rush of water that the firemen were driven from the hold, the fires extinguished, and as a consequence, the steam ceased to make and the engine to play. They then cast anchor, for the purpose of holding to their position, as the wind was blowing fresh off shore. Each one having proper presence of mind, was now devising means of self-preservation, as all hope of the boat herself reaching the shore was cut off.—They were some two miles from the shore, and the yawl was filled with as many as could get into it, and sent to the shore with the few who could thus be saved. Others lashed themselves to planks, and to such articles of furniture as could be found, and committed themselves to the mercy of the waves, while others, with shrieks and groans of despair, and not knowing what else to do, remained on board, every instant expecting the vessel to take the awful plunge, and engulf all in one common watery grave.

It was the prudent admonition of the Captain, to all, as the result shows, to stick by the wreck, for most of those who took a contrary course have been lost. After the lapse of some time she went down, head foremost, in about forty feet water; but fortunately, as the water passed in, the upper deck detached from the hull and rode above the water. Such passengers as remained, held fast to this, and just at this time the steamer Harrison hove in sight. A wild shout of joy now burst from every heart at the near approach of relief; but in spite of all their efforts, they could not raise their voices above the hourse howling of the blast, and the Harrison, in the darkness of the night, went by, without being aware that despondency and death were so near at hand. She made direct for the port of Conneaut, which was a mile and a half distant, and on arriving there, was informed by the Clerk of the Chesapeake, who had just landed in the yawl with fourteen others, of the disaster, and with all possible speed put right about for the scene of distress. All who remained on the wreck were thus rescued.

The following passengers are known to be lost, but how many more is not yet ascertained: Mrs. Houk, Watertown, N. Y.; G. Van Doren, Sandusky; E. Cone, Bellville, O.; S. York, Tiffin, O. Of the crew, R. Southerland, Chief Engneer; Orson Ware, 2d Porter; R. McNab, deck hand.

As an extra has appeared I suspend any further remarks of my own, and send you the following instead:

"There has, no doubt, been a fearful losss of life, and much property. The Clerk's books, and about $3000 in money, the property of private individuals, entrusted to his charge, went down with the boat. Not even a passenger's trunk was saved. The Porter was loaded with 6000 bush-

...corn, and 70 bbls. of pork. Vessel and ...insured.

Total Loss of the Ship Mary Ellen, for New York.

By the overland mail from India, we have advices from Singapore to the 8th of April, by which we gather, that the ship Mary Ellen, Captain Dearborn, has been totally lost, and three of her crew. She sailed from Whampoa on the 3d of February for New York, with a full cargo, chiefly teas. She struck at 8 P. M., on the night of the 9th of the same month, on a ledge of reefs on the east side of the island of Subi. Soon after striking, as the ship went over the starboard side, the masts were cut away. She righted, but soon broke in two in the middle, a heavy sea and surf washing every thing out of her. In the evening, it still blowing very hard, and thick with rain, Captain Dearborn and twenty of the party made out to reach the shore with the help of pieces of plank, which they effected after swimming and wading through the surf for upwards of six hours, but not without losing three of the party, whose strength gave out, and they were washed off and drowned. The remainder of the crew arrived at Singapore on the 15th of March.

The Mary Ellen was six years old, about 600 tons barthen, and is owned, as also the cargo, by Messrs. W. A. Appleton & Co., in Boston. She is insured in New York and Boston, for over $150,000: the larger proportion in Boston. Only $10,000 is believed to be insured in Wall street.

We regret to announce the death of James G. Sturgeon, eldest son of Senator Sturgeon, and Military Store keeper at the Pittsburgh Arsenal. —He died at Uniontown Pennsylvania, on the 9th inst.—N. Y. Sun.

Lord John Russell, Premier of England, has announced that Government intends to suspend the operation of the British Navigation and Corn Laws for three months longer.

VOLUNTEERS FROM SWITZERLAND.—The war in Mexico has not only aroused the military enthusiasm of our own citizens, but it seems that numbers of Europeans are offering their services to the United States Government. The German Schnellpost's correspondent in Basle, Switzerland, says eight hundred young and hardy men, among whom are some of the most distinguished officers in the Swiss service, have offered their services to the United States government through the American consul at Basle. They will engage to serve during the war, or for five or ten years, and afterwards form themselves into a military colony in California, upon the plan of colonies which England and Russia have in several of their dominions. Several of these volunteers have families, and are most respectably connected.

A Child with Telescopic Powers of Vision.

A correspondent of the New Orleans Delta, gives a long account of a wonderful natural phenomenon, which he met with at Opelousas, La., being no less than a child with telescopic powers of vision. We abridge his account:
